The naval reserve strength of Great Britian is enormous. During the complications with Russia in 1878 the British Admiralty made inquiries in relation to the number of ocean steamships which in the event of war could be made available as cruisers. As a result the names of 280 vessels were enrolled, each of which can carry from six to ten guns. These are all vessels of the first class, and the number has been increased in the intervening years to upwards of 300, and can be supplemented by an even larger list of steamers of inferior rank, but all large, well-built and powerful vessels. Some of the recent additions to the ocean steamship fleet are scarcely inferior in tonnage to, and in horse-power of engines considerably greater than, the Inflexible. Fitted up as cruisers they could cope with any war vessel save an iron-clad or the most modern iron or steel unamored craft, and could soon put a safe distance between themselves and any vessel of overmastering strength. It would require a war of considerable duration, however, before many of them could be made available for naval warfare, owing to the time which would be occupied in fitting them with guns, otherwise equipping them and manning them.

Gabriel Dumont.

A prominent gentleman living at St. Boniface informed us that he knows Gabriel Dumont well. He was born in St. Boniface, although his ancestors lived in the Saskatchewan country for three or four generations. Gabriel was a trader and trapper and followed the chase from early childhood. He used to visit Winnipeg every year, partly on religious business and partly on other business, as he was a trader in the Saskatchewan country. He is described as a magnificent-looking fellow, and those who had dealings with him say he was a brave and honest man. If he be the military leader of the rebels, the informant says, a desperate resistance to the troops may be expected.

A watchmaker in Milwaukee has trained a common canary bird to sing faultlessly "We won't go home 'till morning." He never heard another tune.

At the Academy of Medicine in Ireland a description was recently given of a lioness in the Zoological Gardens who was found one morning to have eaten off six inches of her tail. In two more meals she had completely disposed of that appendage, and had commenced on her forepaws. The animal was destroyed "for fear she would eat herself up." The cause of the trouble was thought to be hysteria of a kind similar to that which causes women to bite their nails.

A gentelman in Germantown, Pa., who was greatly annoyed by a colony of sparrows that had taken up their quarters in a mass of ivy covering one side of his house, got rid of them by a novel expedient. One day he purchased half a pound of red pepper, and, going up the third story, opened the windows and sifted the pepper down through the ivy. The alarm of the sparrows was evinced by the haste with which they left their hiding places. Every bird took its departure, and his premises are now clear of them.

Among the numerous presents received by the Emperor William on the occasion of his last birthday was a simple farthing of the year 1797, that being the year which he was born. This curious present had been sent by a gamin living in one of the villages round Brunswick, who also wrote a letter congratulating the Emperor, in the best language he could command, on having reached so great an age. The other day, to his intense astonishment, this lucky youth received an acknowledgment from the Emperor in the shape of an autograph letter thanking him for his present, and, what was probably more valued, a twenty-mark piece, bearing the date of 1885.

On the subject of color-blindness, a correspondent writes to the Pall Mall Gazette: "A very large proportion of the cases of so-called color-blindness is, I am convinced, due to ignorance, and, in confirmation of this opinion, there is the undoubted fact that it is rarely found in examination of female candidates. If color-blindness is an organic defect of the visual apparatus, surely it ought to exist in somewhere about the same ratio in the male and female. I don't for moment deny the existence of genuine color-blindness; but I do contend that the genuine defect is a rare one. My suggestion is that instruction in colors and their names ought to form a distinct item in the curriculum of all elementary schools."

The Prefecture of Marseilles has issued a voluminous report on last year's cholera visitation, profusely illustrated with maps and plans. The leading physicians, taking up different departments of the subject, describe the introduction and progress of the epidemic, the measures adopted for withstanding it, and the results obtained, infection is clearly traced to Toulon. The aggregate umber of deaths was 1,235 in July, 380 in August, 114 in September, and 43 October, the total being 1 772. In 1866 there were 1.104; in 1865, 1 863; in 1855, 1 410; in 1854, 3,069; in 1849, 2,252; in 1837, 1 526; in 1835, 2 576, and in 1834, 860. Dickens has been much criticised for his apparent acceptance of the fact of spontaneous combustion, but Sir W. Gull lately testified to a surprising case before the committee of the House of Lords on intemperance. A large, bloated man, who was suffering from difficulty of breathing and great distention of the venous system, died at Guy's hospital. At the post mortem of the following day there was no sign of decomposition, and the body was believed to be distended with gas. "When punctures were made in the skin," said Sir William, "and a lighted match applied the gas which escaped burned with the ordinary flame of carburetted hydrogen. As many as a dozen of these small flames were burning at the same time."

A GHASTLY SPECTACLE.

A Horrible Incident in the Life of a Young Medical Student.

"You remember," remarked a young medical friend of mine to me the other night, "what a time all medical colleges had about eight years ago over the discovery of the body of Scott Harrison, son of the late President William Henry Harrison, and father of Senator Benjamin Harrison of Indiana, in a Cincinnati medical college dissecting room? Well, at that time I was a student in Ann Arbor medical college, Ann Arbor, Mich. You will recollect it was here that the authorities claimed to have made some startling discoveries. The bodies or cadavers, as we call them, were kept in a large pickle vat in the cellar where they floated around in the brine like pork in a barrel. They were harpooned by the attendant and hoisted to the dissecting room by a rope elevator as they were needed. Well, I will not harrow up your feelings by going into an extensive description of the scenes daily enacted in this department of the school. Not being a physician you, might find them deappetizing for a day or so."

I thanked him for his consideration, and he proceeded thus:

"In the spring of 1878 I entered the college as green in medical knowledge as one of Gen. Grant's physicians. I was taken up to the dissecting-room soon after I matriculated. Of course I had heard about the ghastly scenes of this veritable chamber of horrors, but I had steeled myself not to give expression to any of my feelings of surprise or disgust. The boys, who have seen courage simulated before, tested me by stuffing my coat pockets full of dead men's ears, fingers, and toes, and other cheerful fragments while I was not looking, and one impious wretch who was calmly eating his luncheon pretended to use a slice of human cheek for the meat in his sandwich. The deception was as real as it was horrible. I passed through the ordeal unflinchingly, but I can assure you it was not unaccompanied by sundry qualms of the stomach. In the course of time I became somewhat familiar with the scenes and before the summer vacation I was thoroughly hardened.

"That summer I accepted an invitation from Harry Brown, who lived at Adrian, Mich., to spend my vacation with him. I cheerfully left the college, my books, and the dissecting-table, and prepared to enjoy myself as fully as possible. Harry is the nicest fellow in the world, and both he and his sister did all in their power to make my visit a jolly one. Every day we went rowing or riding or walking over the shady country roads, and every evening there was some sort of party to make that part of the day not the least enjoyable. I met a number of pretty girls in the town, but none prettier than lovely Mary Brown, and before the fall term began we were more than friends, although there was no engagement, as I was too young to give such matters a serious thought. In October I went back to college regretfully, I must own, and recommenced my studies. After the long and pleasant summer the dark walls of the building seemed more somber than ever, and the work of the lecture room appeared more tiresome than when I first began my studies. Shortly after the term began I was called to my home by the death of my father. I was gone over a month, and when I had settled up his affairs, they were not very extensive by the way, I went back to college. The first day I returned I visited the dissecting-room and purchased an anatomical ticket entitling me to a portion of a cadaver to operate on. The boys all seemed glad to see me back again, and many of them offered sympathy for my affliction. This was comforting, for they were a nice lot of fellows, take them altogether. I began work on my subject more to distract my mind than anything else, and got fairly into it when I heard a roar of laughter from the farther end of the room. It came from a crowd of students who were smoking their pipes and, cigarettes and playfully knocking each other over the head with fragments of bones in one corner of the apartment. The noise increased instead of dying out, and the crowd momently grew larger. Impelled by curiosity, I left my work and joined the throng. The boys had taken a female subject and draped the sheet over her fair proportions as the robes of Mary Anderson are arranged in the role of Galatea. She was stood up against the table as erect as if she had been carved out of marble. Her dark brown hair was coiled in a Grecian roll on the back of her shapely head. In her mouth there was a pipe, however, and her attitude was one of extreme gallusness. It was intended as a burlesque upon the statuesque, and it was a horrible and ghastly success.

"'What do you think of that as a work of art?' inquired the ring-leader of the boys, as I approached.

"'Rather hideous, don't you think?' I answered.

"'If you think so,' he replied, 'from that view, wait until you see her face. Come around here and catch on to her pipe.'

"I walked around to the front and looked at the face as directed. I had no more than raised my eyes to the pipe than the room began to whirl around and around. I grew deathly sick and fell in a faint. When I was revived the body was decently covered and I was lying in the bedroom of my boarding-house. Who do you think she was?'

I was obliged to plead ignorance.

"It was Mary Brown. I afterwards learned that she had died suddenly while I was at home looking after my father's affairs, and her body had been exhumed by the grave-robbers. The shock threw me into a fever, from which I suffered for over a month; and since that day I have never gazed upon the face of a corpse in a dissecting-room without a feeling of apprehension that I cannot rid myself of. I feel as if I might meet my own likeness in the dead face of every subject I handle."

Third Marriage. First Husband.

The marriage at Mount Sterling, O. recently, of Jerome R. Burton to Mrs. Annie Evans, though a quiet affair, was really the acme of one of the prettiest romances in real life. Mrs. Burton, recently Mrs. Evans, nee Annie Tipton, is now but 35, is pretty, petite, and Mr. Burton is her third husband, and yet her first. Eighteen years ago Miss Tipton was a student in a Cincinnati school, and while there she met Mr. Burton, then a student in a medical college. Burton was of a good Kentucky family, a man of fine appearance and he soon won the young girl's heart. By the aid of a mutual friend a license was procured though the girl was not of age, and they were secretly married. Both continued in school, giving no outward sign of their changed relationship. A few weeks later the young bride was summoned to her home to attend a sick mother. The girl herself was seized with illness, and from letters received during this illness and from the girl's talk in her delirium, the secret of the marriage was obtained. Her parents were greatly angered and set about to discover means to untie the nuptial knot, and as the girl was not of age at the time of the marriage, and as her parents' consent had not been obtained, the first point was to have her, immediately on coming of age, repudiate the contract. This was accomplished partly by coercion and partly by persuasion. The young man was seen, and the terrors of the law were held up to him. Young, inexperienced, and fearing the wrath of his parents, who as yet knew nothing of the wedding, he consented to the separation and a suit for a divorce. The divorce was quietly obtained—scarcely a score of people knowing anything of the affair. Burton went West, and in the course of time Miss Tipton married and came to this place. Three years ago her husband died, leaving her a comfortable property. A notice of the event, giving the lady's maiden name, drifted, quite by accident, into Burton's hands less than two months ago. He had lost sight of his former wife and sweetheart altogether, but had never ceased to love her and had never married. He resolved to see if it were the same person and learn, if possible, if she had been a willing party to the separation years ago. He came at once to see her. Explanations were offered on both sides and, finding that each loved the other, they resolved to marry. The ceremony was performed quietly at the bride's residence, her parents coming a distance to witness it, without suspicion as to who Burton was. Other explanations occurred later in the day, and so far as is known no ill will exists among any of those who have a right to be interested.

An Eccentric Professor.

A correspondent writes: Eccentric addresses to individual students are traditional in the University of Edinburgh; and it may be worth while to save from oblivion an extempore oration which I heard from my father as having been delivered by the professor of Latin in his day, whose son was the famous Prof. Christison, so long an ornament of the Edinburgh school of medicine. Having detected a student winking in the class, he ordered him to stand up, and spoke as follows: "No smirking, no smiling, and, above all, no tipping of the wink; for such things are hurtful to yourselves, baneful to the republic, and will bring down the gray hairs of your parents with sorrow to the grave. Humility by the way, that's a very pretty sentence; turn it into Latin, sir." Judging from my father, who had just left "Old Pillaus" and the high school, Prof. Christison turned out excellent scholars. I doubt if many students of the present day could give an impromptu rendering of such a sentence, or if many professors could afford to mix their classics with such a sturdy vernacular.

Driving Away English Sparrows.

A gentleman residing in Germantown told a reporter that his father succeeded in driving the sparrows away from his premises by a very simple method. A dark mass of green ivy covered one side of the house entirely, and here the sparrows gathered in vast numbers. The family were perpetually annoyed by their clatter. One day he purchased half a pound of red pepper, and going to the third story he opened the windows and sifted the pepper down through the ivy. The alarm of the sparrows was evinced by the haste with which they left their hiding places. Every bird took its departure, and having once taken up their abode elsewhere his premises were comparatively clear of them. West Chester people, who are troubled with a superfluity of these noisy birds, would do well to try the above mentioned remedy.

Looking for a Lost Fleet.

The archæological societies of Vienna have put their brains to work on a curious whim that of raising the Persian fleet lost in the narrow strait of Salamis 480 years before the Christian era, 2 364 years ago. The Viennese evidently have confidence in the preserving qualities of the briny deep. On the sublime faith of an idea Columbus discovered America; why should not the same faith lead to the resurrection of a broad trireme of Ægina, or a bronzed beaked galley of Greece, or one of the hughely high-sterned, lofty-decked Persian ships, whose size and number threw them into confusion before the desperate valor of the dauntless Greeks.

The Batouche Victory.

RIEL CAPTURED.

Taken by Three Scouts

Capture of Leading Halfbreeds.

FIFTEEN MILES BELOW BATOCHE, May 15.—Riel was captured at noon to-day by three scouts named Armstrong, Diehl, and Hewrie, four miles north of Batoche. The scouts had gone out in the morning to scour the country, but there they separated from the main body, and just as they were coming out of the bush on an unfrequented trail leading to Batoche they espied Riel with three companions.

HE WAS UNARMED,

but the latter carried shotguns. All recognized Riel, and advancing toward him hailed him. They were then standing near a fence. No effort was made to escape, and after a brief conversation, on expressing their surprise at finding him there, Riel declared that he intended in giving himself up. His only fear was that he would be.

SHOT BY THE TROOPS,

but was promised a safe escort to the General's quarters. His wife and children were not with him, and he said they were on the west side of the river to avoid the main body of the scouts. Riel had taken to a coulee near by and hidden while Diehl went off to corral a horse for him, the scouts being seen in the distance. At this time when Diehl returned Riel and his companions disappeared, evidently to avoid the other scouts. Diehl says Riel was when arrested, and was willingly made captive. He was assured of a fair trial, which was all he seemed to want. He appears careworn and haggard. He has let his hair and beard grow long and is dressed in poorer fashion than the most of the Half-breeds captured. While talking to Middleton as could be his eyes rolled from side to side with the look of a hunted man. He is evidently most thoroughly frightened at the men in the camp, and in constant fear of violence at the hands of the soldiers.

THE REBEL FORCE.

The rebel force consisted of 350 Half-breeds, and 200 Indians.

REBEL MORTALITY,

Latest accounts placed the total killed of the rebels at 157, and many wounded. Over 100 Indians and breed rebels gave themselves up, and were unarmed by the forces.

31 SUPPLY TEAMS CAPTURED.

31 wagons and teamsters, with supplies from Swift Current to Battleford where captured by Poundmaker's Indians while within 13 miles of Battleford. 10 of the teamsters escaped while 21 is supposed to be taken prisoners by the Indians. One of the Mounted Police escorts were shot dead and another wounded.

SURRENDERED.

Maxime Lepine gave himself up shortly after Riel was taken. Nearly all the prominent rebels are secured except Dumont. Gen. Middleton will join Col. Otter, when, (perhaps before now) they will advance upon Poundmaker's force.

THE OFFICIAL ACCOUNT—MORE DETAILS OF THE FIGHT—A CHEER ANE A DASH WORTHY ANY TROOPS—A COMPLETE VICTORY ALL DID WELL.

OTTAWA, May 15.—In the House to-day, before the orders of the day were called, Mr. Caron said:—I desire read to the House a more lengthy report of the battle of Batoche which I receive from Gen. Middleton, which will be of interest. It is as follows:—

FROM BATOCHE, N. W. T., May 12.

To the Hon A. P. Caron.

Since my last evening dispatch to you I have ascertained some particulars of our victory, which was most complete. I have myself counted twelve Half-breeds on the field, and we have four wounded Half-breeds in Hospital and two Sioux. Among the wounded Half-breeds is one Amboise Joubin, a councillor, and Joseph Delormes. As far as I can ascertain Riel and Gabriel Dumont left as soon as they saw us getting well in, but I cannot ascertain for certain which side of the river he is on, but think he must be on this side. The extraordinary skill displayed in at the exact proper points, and the number of them is very remarkable, and had we advanced rashly and heedlessly I believe we might have been destroyed. As I told you, I reconnoitted my right front with all my mounted men yesterday morning with a view to withdrawing as many of their men from my left attack, which was the key of the position, and on my return to camp forced on my left and with a cheer and a dash worthy of the soldiers of any army. The effect was remarkable. The enemy in front of our left was forced back from pit to pit, and those in the strongest pit facing east, who found themselves turned and our men behind them, then commenced a sauve qui peut, and they fled, leaving blankets, coats, hats, boots, trousers, and even guns in their pits. The conduct of the troops

the Midland and 10th Regiments vieing with each other, well supported by the 90th, and flanked by the mounted portion of the troops. The artillery and Gatling also assisted in the attack with good effect. When all behaved so well it might appear invidious to mention particular names, still there are always some who, by good luck, are brought prominently before the eye of the commanding officer, and these names I shall submit to you later on. My staff and were most energetic and zelous. The medical arrangements, under Brigade Surgeon Orton, ware as usual, most excellent and efficiently carried out. I have to regret the death of three officers, as well as to soldiers but they died nobly and well. I found no want of amunition among the enemy, or food, in spite of what has been said to the contrary, and we found large quantities of powder and shot. Nearly the whole of the rebels families were left, and are encamped close to the river bank.

THEY WERE TERRIBLY FRIGHTENED,

but I have reassured them and protected them. There is a report that Gabriel Dumont is killed, but I do not believe it though I think it likely he is wounded. One of the killed has been recognized as Donald Ross, one of the Council. Yesterday evening, just as the action was finished, the Northcote and a hard time of it, as the rebels fired at it very heavily, and though it was well fortified the rebels managed to wound two men slightly. The for a short time but managed to keep the enemy off and to get off themselves. Finding that owing to barges alongside they could not go up stream again, they decided to run down to the Hudson Bay Crossing to get rid of them and return. At the Crossing they found the other steamer and came up together. This morning I sent out a letter addressed to Riel as follows:—"BATOCHE, May 11th.—Mr. Riel—I am ready to receive you and your Council and to protect you until your case has been decided upon by the Dominion Government. (Signed), FRED MIDDLETON, Major-General, Commanding North-West Field Forces," we have pretty well broken the back of the rebellion. At any rate it will. I trust have dispelled the idea that Half-breeds and Indians can withstand the attack of resolute whites properly led, and will tend to remove the unaccountable scare that seems to have entered into the minds of so many in the North-West as regards prowess and powers of fighting of the Indians and Half breeds. There is not a sign of the enemy on either side of the river for miles.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

Markdale, 13th May, 1885.

DEAR SIR,—Having taken the opportunity of attending a Salvation Army meeting during an evening visit to your really flourishing town, I wish to express through the columns of your valuable paper the very high opinion I have of the general demeanor of your young men. There are so many objectionable features connected with this mode of worship, that often great liberties are taken and even tolerated by church going people without a word of disproval from them, that the opportunity is taken advantage of by those that look light upon the word of God, to interrupt such meetings. And it is my humble opinion that through this medium a stranger can generally determine the standard of morality taken by the young men of the place. The meeting spoken of was orderly and quiet as any religious meeting could be.

I am Respectfully Yours,

JOTTINGS BY THE WAY.—April 23rd, from Thornbury to Kimberley, farmers ploughing odd ones seeding, Kimberley folks gardening and planting trees, some seeding in the Valley, although some snow in fence corners.

April 24th found a few ploughing near Orangeville and through Caledon near Toronto and round to Oakville no more forward farming than the northern places above. From Oakville to Port Hope, farmers show small signs of spring work except near Whitby, Oshawa and Bomanville. 27th at Port Hope snowy, ditto to Lindsay and Peterboro farming operations from Port Hope right through to Beaverton and Orillia, more backward than around our own Markdale vicinity. As to business generally, I must indeed give our own Markdale preference and a proud pre-eminence, for its size in no place was business so brisk, grain prices so good, trade so brisk, our own mills are more busy than any I saw, except in such places as Toronto, Oakville, &c., wheat and flour centres, of course I include Thornbury, Clarksburg and Owen Sound in our prosperous list, especially in Grain and flour business, but for general manufacture and trade I have yet in my about 500 miles travel to see as buisy a little place as our own spirited go-a-head Mapkdale.

Mr. Simon Plewes has bought the Creemore mills and intend making a complete roller mill. He will receive a good welcome and the housewife will rejoice and give him their support in exchange for white and light bread.

Scott Act came in while I was in Orillia and Saturdays market in Barrie altho a pet crowd was there, was real sober and quiet, altho a busy throng was there inside the Hotel I tell you it was a picture of the sober serious system. More anon.

McINTYRE, May 6th, 1885.

Rev. John Chisholm, B. A.:

Pastor of Osprey Presby. Church.

REV. SIR & BRO.,—We, Sons of Temperance Lodge No. 310, Rachabite Division, on behalf of ourselves and the congregation over which you have so long and faithfully as a minister of the Gospel presided, avail ourselves of this opportune occasion to give expression to the high esteem in which you are held and the candid appreciative affection entertained towards you.

During four years of earnest labor for our spiritual welfare you have under God succeeded in building up and permanently establishing one of the finest congregations in this county.

Your unceasing efforts have been largely felt in organizing and promoting the interests of this lodge and the literary club in connection with it to the numerical and financial success it has now attained whilst the unremitting perseverance with which you have sought to stamp out the very appearance of evil and the assiduity with which you have advocated the principles of loyalty to our British institutions, of loyalty to the church of Knox and Wishart, of loyalty and dependence on God, the giver of all, have endeared you to your whole congregation.

When we consider the various difficulties and discouragements which ever strive to disturb the harmony of your work. When we remember the patient zeal and energy with which you have labored with us. When we look upon this handsome and commodious church which we hope will long stand as a memorial of your efforts, we feel that no public recognition of your services, however hearty or however unanimous, can be at all commensurate with the deep debt of gratitude we owe you.

In your frequent visitations amongst the people, your uniform courtesy and urbanity have won universal respect; your pleasantry of manner has made you a most welcome visitor at every house; your uniformity of temper has smoothed over many difficulties; your strong common sense has enabled you to adapt yourself to the requirements of your parishoners, and your ever ready sympathy has been a support and encouragement to all who have labored with you.

We indeed are very sorry to part with you, but believe that in so doing you are following the path of your destiny.

We feel proud to think that a minister who has labored with us so long should be selected from hundreds of elegible men, and appointed by the Home Mission Society of our church to fulfil the divine command of preaching to our Canadian brothers in Nicola Valley the gospel of Christ and Him crucified.

We trust that throughout your future sphere of duty, your usefulness may be no less marked than it has hitherto been, and that you may find that your conscientious response to the call of duty may be followed not only from the satisfaction that arises from a sense of its faithful performance, but also that you may find your field of labor abundantly productive and ripe for the harvest.

As a token of the sincerity of the feelings to which we have here given expression, we beg the acceptance of this Chamber's Encyclopaedia, complete in ten volumes, hoping that it will often form a sweet reminiscence of your McIntyre congregation as you peruse its ample pages for its rich lore of useful information.

In conclusion we express the hope that the abundant blessings of God may rest on you in the fulfilment of your high mission of promoting the interests of the church and advancing the cause of our Redeemer, and that you may long enjoy the fullest happiness and at last pass triumphantly through the golden gates of the city of immortality.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

TWO DESTRUCTIVE CONFLAGRATIONS.—On Tuesday, 12th inst. the large frame barn and sheds on the farm lately occupied by Mr. Bruce on the 9th concession, Artemesia, was completely destroyed by fire. It would appear to have been a diabolical act of some one, as we have been informed that pitch or tar had been put upon the shingles of the dwelling near by, we suppose that ey might readily ignite. It is supposed to be the work of some ill disposed person. Also on Saturday last a destructive fire occurred in Eugenia, the Methodist parsonage and some other stabling being consumed. We understand the Rev. Mr. Strongman's loss is heavy. Considerable furniture, two very valuable gold watches belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Strongman, and $40.00 in cash, also a great many other valuables destroyed. Mr. Strongman had a narrow escape for life. Going up stairs for some things, upon trying to return found his way of escape shut off. He had to jump from an upper window, his fall being broken by the ready hands of men below. The fire originated about the stove pipes.

Artemesia Council.

This council met in the Town Hall at Flesherton on Monday, May 4th, 1885. Present — Messrs. Christoe, Reeve; Blakly, Deputy-Reeve: Elliott, McArthur and McKee, Councillors. The minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed. A letter from the Clerk of Proton re statute labor on the town line was read, also a letter from John McRae re Thomas Gane's road work for 1884. The following accounts were presented and ordered to be paid:—A. R. Fawcett, printing auditors' report, $13; R. J. Sproule, postage to date, $2.85; Richardson, stationery and telegraphing, $6.80.

McArthur—McKee—That $7.70 be accepted from Thos. Gane as taxes for 1884 on his lots in Priceville, and that the County Treasurer be instructed to erase all taxes of 1884 charged against said lots.—Carried.

McArthur—Elliott—That the Reeve be appointed to examine that portion of Kincardine Street, Priceville, in dispute between the St. Columba congregation and John McAulay, and report at next session of council.—Carried.

Elliott—McKee—That the Clerk correspond with Glenelg council in reference to an equivalent to $75 expended by this council in grading town line south of Markdale, and urge upon them the necessity of graveling said road at once, in the event of Glenelg council refusing or neglecting to expend the same, the Reeve and Deputy Reeve to bring that matter before the County Council at its June session.—Carried.

A First-Class Stallion.

The trotting stallion Bancroft, bred by the celebrated Powell Bro's. is a grandly bred horse and ought to be highly appreciated by the breeders of the County of Grey. Bancroft was foaled in 1879. He is a very rich bay, 16 hands high, of fine carriage, having splendid legs and feet and a beautifully proportioned horse throughout. Though not trained for speed he is a natural trotter showing a bold swinging stride very taking to the eye. A glance at his pedigree presents substantial evidence that all breeding goes for anything he ought to get trotters, Bancroft foaled in 1879 by Volunteer Duroc, by Volunteer, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, by Abdallah, by Mambrion, by imp. Messenger. Bancroft's Dam Lady Carr, by Robert Bonner, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, etc., etc. Bancroft's granddam Bet, by Telegraph. Volunteer Durock's Rockland Maid by Strant's Durock, by Sir Henry, granddam Onderdonk's Durock. Without continuing the pedigree any farther back it is only necessary to draw attention to the fact that through his graddsire Volunteer, Bancroft is related to such high and mighty flyers as St. Julien, 2.11¼; Gloster, 2.17; Alley, 2.19; Bodine, 2,19¼; Driver, 2.19½; Amy, 2.20½; Huntress, 2.20¾; Powers, 2.21, and fifteen others in the 2.30 list. Of Rysdyk's Hambletonian it is scarcely necessary to speak at any length, he ranks a central figure in the history of the American trotter. Tracing directly on both sides of the house of the imported horse Messenger the founded of the two most successful families of trotters—the Hambletonians and Mambrino Chiefs—he ranks an ultra fashionable amongst the best of them, and as with the hero of Chester so with Bancroft the latter also on both sides tracing to Messenger. As an evidence of the greatness of Hambletonian in the male line—three of his sons George Wilkes, Happy Medium and Volunteer have sired seventy-seven horses in the 30 list. Through his great grandsire Bancroft is related to Dexter 2.17½, Nettie 2.18, Orange Girl 2.90, Gazelle 2.21, Jay Gould 2.21½, Artillery 2.21¼, Bella 2.22, Deucalion 2.22, George Wilkes 2.22 and 30 others in the 30 list. Such a sire as Bancroft is deserving of a liberal patronage at the hands of the breeders of his neighborhood, who are to be congratulated on having a Company in their county possessing the enterprise to bring within their reach such a royally bred trotting stallion, one capable of doing a great good in improving the stock of the northern country."—Canadian Sportsman.

The Nickel Plate Shows.

The first circus of the season will arrive here by special train on Wednesday May 27th afternoon and evening. These trains will come direct from Chicago, Ill., the home and winter quarters of W. H. Harris, the proprietor, and Dan. Castello, the king of translantic arenas, who accompanies the show. This great circus having met with brilliant financial success last season contrary to the expectations of many large concerns which complain bitterly of having lost heavily on the season's business, Mr. Harris has made a new and redical departure this season determining by honest merit to render the show in every way worthy the confidence and patronage of all lovers of first class amusements, and we have no doubt its vibrations will be felt on the better side of the ledger account in the ticket wagon. They do not gull the public by sending out a string of empty baggage wagons on the streets, cutting off a useless and expensive luxury, but give their entire show in the tents instead so on the streets and bill boards. However, just prior to the afternoon performance, the Nickle Plate Cornet Band will parade in their band chariot.

A THROAT CURE.

A cure for Croup. There is no better remedy for Croup than Hagyard's Yellow Oil taken internally and applied according to special directions. This is the great household panacea for rheumatism, stiff joints, pain, inflammation, &c.

The virtue of Carbolic Asid for healing, cleansing and purifiyng is well known; but from the many modes of applying it, the public is uncertain how best to use it. To meet that want, McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate is prepared, and may be used with confidence. Do not be misled. Take only McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. Sold at Hill Bro's. 4

EASILY CAUGHT.

It is very easily to catch cold, but not so easy to cure it unless you use Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, the best remedy for all throat, bronchial and lung troubles, coughs, colds and consumptive tendencies.

Mrs. Robert Hooper, of Kinloss, county of Bruce, in a letter, says: "I have been troubled with Dyspepsia and Liver Complaints for a number of years, and am glad to say to the public as well as friends that McGregor's Speedy Cure brought me around, and I am now all right, thanks to McGregor's Speedy Cure. Hundreds of like testimonials are frequently received, and are daily proving that this is truly a wonderful remedy, curing Sluggish Liver, Bilious Headache and Costiveness, where all else fails. Sold at Hill Bro's. Trial bottles given free. 4

A GOLDEN OPINION.

Mrs. Wm. Allan, of Acton, declares that Hagyard's Yellow Oil is the best household remedy in the world for colds, croup, sore throat, burns, scalds and other painful complaints. Her opinion is well founded.

CARSON PLICE.

Dated this 18th day of May 1885. 241-46

AGRICULTURAL.

A farmer, to be successful, should never sell poor sheep, but sell fat ones and fatten the poor ones. Some farmers do not stable sheep, claiming that they can make them thrive out of doors. Now it is absurd to tell people that sheep will do better out of-doors, and that it does not pay to shelter them. A man that can make a sheep fat out in the wet and cold, would make a good success of feeding in shelter, if he would put his attention to his work like he would have to out-of-doors. A man should never keep more sheep than he can shelter without crowding, although some breeds will stand crowding more than others will.

The first thing in feeding is to be regular. Feed at a certain hour, and then stick to that time; for where feeding is done with regularity, you can go about the stable and sheep will not pay any attention to you until the feeding hour.

Second is cleanliness. Keep the troughs clean, and do not let them stand in the wet manure, but use plenty of straw.

Third, I would say that good hay or corn-fodder should be used. If you have poor hay, feed it to the cattle, but never to the sheep. Corn shelled and mixed with oats and bran makes a good feed, but when the farmer has the money, it is good to buy oil-meal; but we do not always have the money. The best rations are shelled corn, one bushel; oats, one peck; bran, one peck, and to make certain that they get salt, mix a small amount with the grain, for feeders are apt to be forgetful when it comes to giving on a cold morning.

The last, and most important, is water. A great many farmers claim that sheep do not need any water. I often wonder how they would like to be fed on bread and potatoes for six months without water. Water is necessary to animal existence, and why deprive them of it? To feed successfully, sheep should have water accessible at all times. In these days of bored wells it will pay a farmer to have a well by the sheep stable.

Do not scare your sheep, but make them know that you are their friend, and they will thrive; and it will be a pleasure to stand in the stable and watch them crack corn and eat hay without being on the watch to see if any danger is near. Shoot all stray dogs and some that are not stray. I believe the best motto would be, shoot all dogs not with their owners, and it would be better for the farmer and shepherd.

To Preserve Fence Posts.

A correspondent of the Country Gent'eman recommends saturating fence posts with crude petroleum by boring a half dozen holes into them obliquely, near the butt, with a three-quarter inch bit, then filling with petroleum, and plugging to prevent waste. After the operation the posts should lie in piles a week or ten days, when the pores of the wood will be completely saturated as high up as they are specially liable to decay. A paint composed of raw linseed oil and pulverized charcoal is then spread freely over the lower end of the posts, and six inches above the surface line when set. White oak posts, cut in February, and sawed 4x4 at the butts and 4x2 at the top, and prepared as directed, are claimed to be good for any man's lifetime, if occasionally covered with a fresh coat of cheap paint. A four inch wide strip, one inch thick, should be nailed on for a top rail, and the posts then sawed off square, when a five inch strip nailed to top of posts, and edge of the four inch strip, will keep water from getting into the tops of the posts and rotting them. Two strands of barbed wire below the top strips will make a fence that will turn cattle and look well. The wire should be put on in warm weather to secure the proper tension, and one or more additional strands should be used if sheep or swine are to be pastured.

To Kill Wheat Smut.

A correspondent, at the risk of being laughed at by scientific men, contributed to the American Miller his experience in clearing his wheat from the black smut. Before applying the remedy the men at threshing time were as black as Africans. The wheat, before sowing, was soaked for to hours in strong lye made from wood ashes, and was then sown while yet wet. The application made the young wheat plants look as if a coat of manure had been spread upon the land. After two years smut entirely disappeared from the farm, and none has been seen since, although the experiments were made nearly forty years ago. Our advice is to try such a remedy on a small scale before risking the entire crop. Lye will quickly start the hull from grain, and it will also eat the skin off the hands of those who may handle it. It is customary to roll and dry soaked seed in plaster of Paris before trying to sow it by hand or with a machine. The remedy, if effectual, would doubtless be equally applicable to oats and other spring grains.

Domesticating the Indian.

One of the experiments in the civilization of the Indian undertaken at Hampton, Mass., this year is taking several young married couples from different Indian tribes and teaching them how to make a home. It has been very successful, and the dawning gentleness of the men to their wifes and children, the new tenderness and pride of the women, their eagerness to learn how to sew and their pleasure in cleanliness are encouraging in every way. It is funny, and yet touching to see the men with their children, their awkwardness in handling them and yet their determination to carry the heavy youngsters and share the care of them with their squaws. And these are not the Creeks and Cherokees, but the warlike Sioux and Omahas.

OUTRAGEOUS OPIUM.

Its Dreadful Effects.

Although quite common in almost all the large cities in the West, the pernicious habit of opium smoking or "hiting the pipe," as it called, is quite unknown in some districts.

This habit has grown to an alarming extent on the Pacific slope and in all other localities where Chinese are to be found in any great numbers. I have visited many of the Chinese opium joints, both in New York and San Francisco, and can tell at a glance whether a person is addicted to the use of the deadly drug or not. I have had strangers come into my store whose facial appearance indicated that they were the slaves of the habit, and so far as I know there is no sure cure for it except to shun the drug as one would a viper.

The opium used by the Chinese is of an inferior quality, and is brought to this country in the form of a paste, put up in small round foil-lined boxes similar to those used for pills. The pipe is a curious-looking contrivance, and might be taken for a common walking stick were it not for the little metallic bowl placed midway between the mouthpiece and the end of the stem. The stem itself is constructed of bamboo, one end being plugged, the other fitted with an amber or metallic tip. In the bottom of the bowl are two small holes, one of which leads through into the stem, the other only about half way.

In using the pipe a small quantity of the opium paste is rolled up into a pellet and placed on a wire, the end of which is inserted in one of the holes in the bow of the pipe. The smoker stretches his or her form on the floor or a low divan, as the case may be, and ignites the opium by applying the bowl of the pipe to the flame from a charcoal brazier. If it be his first attempt the initial whiff will be sufficient to partially strangle him, as the fumes of burning opium are exceedingly pungent and distasteful. Very soon he becomes accustomed to the peculiar taste, and gradually succumbs to its influence, as one does in taking an anæsthetic, and finally drops off into a deep sleep. I tried it once and that proved sufficient for me. I had the most delightful dreams, and imagined that I owned the earth, and had a chattel mortgage on the other planets. When I regained consciousness my head felt as large as a Saratoga trunk, and for two days at least every bone in my body ached as badly as if I had been punished with a club. I had no desire to try it again.

"Second Wind."

The reader may not be aware that in ordinary respiration we only use a portion of our lungs, the cells at the extremity not being brought into play. This is the reason why those who are not "in training," and who try to run any distance, soon begin to gasp, and, unless they are courageous enough to persevere in spite of the choking sensation, are forced to stop. But if they will persevere, the choking goes off, and the result is what is technically known as "second wind." When the second wind is fully established, the runner does not become out of breath, but goes on running as long as his legs will carry him. I know this by experience, having been accustomed for some years to run three miles every morning over a very hilly road. The fact is, that on starting, the farthest portions of the lungs are choked with effete air and the remainder do not supply air enough to meet the increased circulation caused by exercise. By degrees, however, the neglected cells come into play, and when the entire lung is in working order the circulation and respiration again balance each other, and the "second wind" is the result. Now, let the reader repeat his experiment of holding his breath against time, but first let him force out of his lungs every particle of air that he can expel, and then draw as deep breath as his lungs will hold. If this be repeated some seventy or eighty times, by way of imitation of the whale, the experimenter will find that he can hold his breath for a minute and a half without inconvenience. Should he be a swimmer, he should always take this precaution before "taking a header," and he will find that he can swim for a considerable distance before he needs to rise for breath.

Red Pheasant.

This Indian Chief is the head of a band Crees, about one hundred and forty in number of whom sixty-nine are men and women able to work, who have for some time been settled upon a reservation a short distance to the south-east of Battleford. While that post was the Indian headquarters for the North-West, this band received a great deal of attention, but while they were encouraged to break up land, given implements and tools and were provided with houses, they appear to have become actually pauperized. They are spoken of in the last reports as being "apathetic," and as having made but little progress. In all they had twenty horses and about fourteen oxen. The first offensive act of this band was the breaking in upon their instructor, Mr George Applegarth, and their pursuit of him and his wife as they escaped over the plains toward the south. Poor Payne, the instructor upon the adjoining reserve, was not so fortunate, having been killed. The two bands, which in all would amount to about 450 souls, then appear to have abandoned their reserve and gone northwest to join Poundmaker the leader of the Indian rising west of Battleford, as when Col. Otter's column reached the reserve, it was entirely deserted, and as our correspondent stated in his dispatch, the dead body of the murdered man was discovered and has since been buried at Battleford.

Betting.

It is generally assumed that the first rudiments of that spirit of gaming which makes itself conspicuous from time to time among all classes of Englishmen at the present day, may be traced back to the associations of the Saxons with our earliest ancestry. And it is perfectly reasonable to believe that the helpless Britons, when they invited the piratical Saxons to land on their shores, and protect them from their domestic foes, may have readily fraternized with a tribe scarcely less barbarous than themselves, adopted their habits and customs, and followed some of their favorite amusements. We read how the plungers of the period would boldly stake all they possessed, even to their personal freedom, till the losers were often made slaves to the winners, and sold in traffic like other merchandise. But, after all, we can hardly lay the burden of our vicious practices on the shoulders of the ancient Saxons, for the habit of gaming was never confined to any particular tribe, but it is common to all countries, and almost every age; and it is not till long after the fusion of the Anglo-Saxon with the Norman races that gaming in England was carried to such excess as to call forth the intervention of the legislature. In the middle of the sixteenth century we find the first act prohibiting gaming to all gentlemen, and interdicting tennis, cards, dice, and bowls to all inferior persons except at Christmas time; and a hundred years later on it was enacted that any person losing more than £100 at any one time should not be compelled by the law to pay the same. From that date onwards the legislature has passed various acts to restrict the evils of gaming, and has latterly directed its attention principally to gaming-houses and places of betting, while still refusing to acknowledge the legality of any sums of money won or lost in wagers. How the enriched fraternity of bookmakers can drive coaches and any number of horses through these fragile restrictions, and how the smaller dependents on the betting ring can evade such ambiguous penalties, the broken ranks of infatuated backers of horses can testify to their own grief and to the amazement of the uninitiated lookers on.

Statistics Concerning Women.

Almost all the Southern States have a nearly equal number of each sex. In Massachusetts the females between twenty and fifty years of age exceed the males of the same age by about 44,000. In seventy-eight cities the excess of females is 148,000. That illiteracy prevails more among women is due probably to the foreign population. Women contribute less to pauperism, the proportion being 31,000 to 36,000. The ratio of prison inmates stands 5,068 women to 54,190 males. Women are in excess among the insane, men in excess among the idiotic, blind and deaf mutes. The proportion of women who engage in occupations outside of the household is smaller in the United States than in foreign countries, but in no country is the proportionate number engaged in superior industrial occupations equal to that in this country. Of the 2,647,000 women in occupations 595,000 are engaged in agriculture—most of them colored women in the Southern States; 632,000 are in manufactories, of whom about one-half are in New York, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania; 282,000 are milliners, &c., 52,000 are tailors. Of the forty-four occupations recorded as "personal service," forty find women in them. The 525 female surgeons of 1870 have increased to 2,473; the 7 lawyers to 75; the 65 clergymen to 165. The number of laundries has increased from 61,000 in 1870 to 122,000, and of the latter 108,000 are kept by women. This large increase shows a great lightening of the housewife's labor.

Getting up his Appetite.

"Out in Portland, Oregon, where distances are so deceitful, a very amusing incident occurred last summer among a party of friends with whom I was travelling. It happened that one of our number was troubled somewhat by insomnia, so much so that he arose one bright morning just as the day was beginning to dawn, dressed, went to the office and inquired of the clerk at what time the matutinal repast began. Being told that 7 o'clock was the earliest hour, he walked to the piazza, looked around for a few moments, returned and inquired what mountain that was in the distance. Upon being told that it was Mt. Hood, he said to the clerk: If any of our party inquires for me, say that I am going to take a run over there to get up an appetizer; will be back in time for breakfast!' Now Mt. Hood is some twenty or thirty miles from Portland, but has the appearance of being not over two or three. As the hour for breakfast approached, our party began counting up its numbers, but Mr. A—— was nowhere to be found.

"Inquiry was at once instituted as to what might have become of him, when it was ascertained from the clerk that he had gone to Mt. Hood for a morning walk, and, with a merry twinkle in his eye, he added, 'he might not be back in time for the first breakfast;' consequently we took our breakfast minus the absent Mr. A—, and immediately after took carriages for a drive to Mt. Hood, if possible to overtake the prodigal. Finally, after riding an hour or two, we came to a little brook, and there, sure enough, was Mr. A— divesting himself of all his clothing. When asked what he was about to do he replied that he was 'going to swim across' 'But why don't you step over?' said some one. 'Well,' replied Mr. A—, 'in this country of magnificent distances, how do I know but it is two miles across?'"

Pie-A-Pot.

This redoubtable chieftain has probably been a greater source of trouble to the Indian department than any other Indian in the North-West, and although he has not yet got into any trouble the fear that he will soon be "up" has created a panic more than once. His reservation, to which in 1882 he withdrew his people because if he had not they would have starved to death, is in the vicinity of Indian Head, and is of his own choosing. His band numbered, in 1882, 562 souls, but they have suffered much since they came under the treaty, forty-five dying in ten months in 1883, no births occurring during that time, and the rations list for 1884 was for 370 persons. They have made but little progress in agricultural pursuits, as there are only about twenty-two acres of land broken, and their entire crop for the last harvest was 250 bushels of potatoes. The trouble with Pie-a-Pot runs over a considerable number of years. He and his tribe followed the buffalo south, and for some years he and his people loafed around Fort Walsh, utterly and entirely refusing to return and live upon the reservation offered to him. In 1882 he was induced to come back and settle on a reservation of his own choosing, but he with a large portion of his band almost at once returned to Fort Walsh. He could obtain nothing to eat there, however, and during the month of August, with 436 followers, he went to Fort Qu'Appelle and demanded food. The chiefs of the district, with 600 followers, assembled to meet him, and for a time things looked serious, but the Indian agent was firm and would neither feed nor pay a cent of subsidy to the Indians of Pie-a-Pot's band further than a supply of six days to enable them to rest. Pie-a-Pot, at last, in the face of threats and privations, started for Indian Head, dallied three days irresolutely on the road finally reached his reservation, submitted to the Government, and was given the food he required to feed the women and children. It was the same chief with whom Mr Dewdney, the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West, got into serious difficulty regarding a spring cart, which he promised Pie-a-Pot, and then did not give to him, provoking the Indian to most immoderate expressions of disgust.

Naval Service in Shallow Streams.

The naval service of the delta, with its many hundred miles of shallow channel, is done by seven or eight small gun-boats of peculiar pattern and half a dozen steam-launches, each carrying a Hotchkiss (French, Oshkees) gun, and manned by six or eight sailors. The gun-boats are called cannonieres. They are nearly all of them of the same pattern, broad, flat-bottomed, and not drawing more than three feet of water, even when heavily loaded. The idea is a peculiarly American one, borrowed entirely from the little shallow steamers that have for the last half-century nearly been running on the upper water of the Ohio, Mississippi, and Missouri, and more directly from the tin clads that did such excellent service during the rebellion. The boilers are in front, protected by a thin steel plating sufficient to turn any fire to be expected from hostile forces in the delta. The engines are aft, and similarly protected. The quarters of the officers are amidships, or, if the pattern is varied, wherever convenience dictates. The armament is usually two medium steel guns forward on a revolving platform, with a range of two miles, the gunners being protected by semi-circular steel plates at the edges of the platform, and two or three Hotchkiss guns at the sides or on a mast guarded in similar fashion. The wheels at the stern are sometimes masked by broad plates of steel, a continuation of the plating on the sides. The small-arm is the Mauser rifle, a heavy weapon, but considered by the French the most efficient. These vessels are all painted gray. They were built in France brought out in pieces and put together either at Saigan or Haiphong. Two are now on the stocks at Haiphong, which will in a few days be added to the delta squadron, making it the most useful for the special duties exacted that could be devised.

The Weird Bird of the Southern Atlantic.

As the craft bowls along in the [South] Atlantic a new world seems to open [to] the voyagers. The constellation of the Southern cross has scarcely become familiar to him before he begins to [see] mal, or rather bird, lite altogether [new] him. One of the greatest novelties this kind that can ever impress itself the mind of man is the albatross. [In the] morning the lounger will reach the [deck] and, casting his eye in the wake of the ship to judge her speed, will see a [speck] just above the horizon far astern. Coming larger and larger as it approaches, finally develops into a gigantic bird, [which] the old sailor, couning the helm, will gruffly suggest the fact that it is proper for the tyro to wet his first introduction to an albatross. There is something [unex]pressibly wierd about the bird itself as well as in its manner of flight, and it is a matter of little wonder to those who have seen it that a brain such as Coleridge should have hit upon it for the text of the Lay of the Ancient Mariner. With [scarce] a beat of wing, without motion of the body, the bird will, by long, easy [glides] tacks, swoop up from astern until it is within easy watching distance from the ship it chooses to follow. It will then "lay too" at that respectful distance, and after taking thorough stock of the stranger that has invaded its domain will, with [no] apparent effort, swoop past the ship to port or starboard, as the case may be, pass it by several cable lengths and then laying too on the opposite hand to its advance, allow the ship to pass it, and will then once more take up its post as rear guard of the procession. Nothing can be more ghost-like than the action of the albatross in thus passing or being passed. No stroke of the wing occurs and all the motion apparent, except that of the head, the half turn of the bird's head toward the ship, made as if to see what manner of beast this was that had come to bother it. Though sailors are over prone to superstition, they seem not to be very particular as to the sacredness of the albatross and will always assist in a capture in spite of the curse Coleridge associates with its killing.

Increasing Size of Ocean Steamers.

The Etruria, the latest addition to the Cunard fleet, has made her trial trip. She is said to be the most powerful steamship in the world. Her dimensions are: Length, 520 feet; baeadth, 57 feet 3 inches; depth, to upper deck, 41 feet; to promenade deck, 49 feet; tonnage, 8,000; horse power, 10,000.

Comparing these with the dimensions of the first steamships that crossed the Atlantic by use of steam during the entire voyage, and it will be seen what amazing progress has been made in increasing the size of sea-going steamships. The dimensions of the Sirius, which left Cork on the 4th of April, 1838, and arrived at New York on the 22nd of that month, were: Length, 178 feet; breadth, 25 feet 6 inches; depth, 18 feet 3 inches; tonnage, net, 450; horse-power, 270. The dimensions of the Great Western, which left Bristol some days later than the Sirius and arrived a few hours later on the day of the arrival of the latter vessel, were: Length, 236 feet; breadth, 35 feet 4 inches; depth, 23 feet 3 inches; tonnage, 1,340; horse-power, 400.

The difference in the speed of the two classes of ships is also nearly as great as the difference in tonnage. Thus, the Great Western's best time was 12 88 miles, while that of the Etruria is expected to be twenty-one miles per hour. On her last trip from Queenstown the Umbria, the sister ship of the Etruria, for twenty-four hours made twenty nautical miles per hour.

Yet, after all this enlarged size and this increased speed, it is only the great ocean steamers carrying large numbers of saloon passengers that are at present, on account of the great trade depression the world over, making money.

It may be interesting to the marine antiquary to know that the Sirius, which was built in 1836, was stupidly left a few years after she had made two trips to New York, on the Smith's rocks, to the east of Cork harbor, and that the Great Western, which was built in 1838, was broken up in 1858.

Tamed With Electricity.

Nearly every day some new use is found for electricity, and one of the most recent applications of this power is in the interest of the professional tamers of wild animals. The inventor is a tamer himself and his instrument is an apparatus shaped like a stick and highly charged with electricity. When the animals become unruly, he gives them shocks from this battery, and the effects are said to be instantaneous.

Three of his lions immediately showed signs of the greatest terror. They were seized with trembling, and growled fitfully. The tiger was more quickly subdued, became stupefied, and crouched in a corner of the cage. Bruin was more refractory to electricity, which seemed scarcely to effect him. He would growl and show his teeth, but was subdued after repeated discharges.

The most astonishing effects, however, were perceptible in the boa constrictor. On receiving the discharge the specimen from Cayenne, nearly twenty feet in length, became at once paralyzed and remained motionless for six hours afterward. When he recovered, he showed signs of helplessness for three whole days. Finally the elephant, on being electrified by a touch of the stick upon the tip of his trunk, set up a series of wild cries and became so frantic that the tamer feared he would break his heavy iron chain.

WIDOW JOHNSON'S WILL.

Mr James Fox was the junior partner the firm of Plumley & Fox, the prinl solicitors in the somewhat dead-alive Cathedral town of Slumborough. He a smart, well-set-up young man, of or three and thirty, with carefully med black wiskers, a silken manner, an unlimited flow of more or entertaining small talk. Hence came to pass that he was an exdingly popular man among the ies of Slumborough, both old and young, d, had his views lain in the direction of rimony, he would have had small diffi-lty in inducing any bashful damsel or ly widow to share his lot. But the ndsome solicitor was ambitious; his re in the business did not at present ng him more than a moderate income, d he had long ago determined that when married he must consider not only nty, but more solid advantages.
Heiresses, however, were not plentiful Slumborough, and so, although Mr Fox's entions frequently fluttered a virgin om, he was carful not to commit him-f too far, and not even the local gossips uld fairly say of him that he had com-mised a reputation or knowingly raised e hopes. There was, indeed, one ng lady who had made a deep impresn upon the soilcitor's heart, but she was e daughter of a county magnate with om poor Mr. Fox was not even on vis-g terms. He had at met her the Annu-Hunt Ball, she had danced twice with m, for Mr. Fox was an excellent waltz-
; but her mother had doubtless warned against him, for when they next met, me six weeks afterwards, Miss Laquer-passed the unfortunate man without much as a bow. Miss Laquerton, hower, was lovely and rich, and Mr. Fox not a man to be easily discouraged.
knew that if he could afford to cut the ice and blossom in to landed proprietor would have just as good a chance with as anybody else; so he waited patient-in the hopes of one day discovering the d which leads to fortune and success.
The firm of Plumley & Fox was a highly pectable and old-fashioned concern, ich avoided litigation, and kept almost irely to family business. Plumley was fairly good lawyer, but Fox's legal owledge was of the most limited charter, and he was much too lazy to take e trouble to increase it. So it came to is business was technically termed keeping the connection together," and mited Mr. Fox very well indeed. It a while he was thus keeping the conction together that Mr. Fox made the quaintance of a certain rich old widow y, named Mrs. Johnson, and so well d he play his cards that before long Plum-& Fox became Mrs Johnson's family sotors, land agents, and confidential ad-ers. The firm made a pretty good thing of Mrs. Johnson. In accordance with e usual arrangement, Plumley transactthe business, and Fox became a con-nt visitor at her house, and worked his y into her good graces by his wonderful wers of amusing conversation. There as yet another accomplishment which ood our solicitor in very good stead, d this was an accurate knowledge of emistry and medicine, which he had cked up as boy in the shop of his uncle, e chemist. The horrible smells young r had created in his experiments and e ugly stains he had made on his hands termined him to forsake medicine for e law, but he never entirely forgot his ly experiences. He could talk fluently out every known drug and disease, and ew a great many which had not been scovered; he diagnosed Mrs. Johnson's mptoms at least as accurately as Macius, the Scotch doctor, and would even ve prescribed for her had not the stal-rt Scot angrily threatened to kick him he did so. But he retained a very proinent place in the old lady's affections, d it began to be whispered about that he d an excellent chance of succeeding to r very considerable property.

The disposal of Mrs Johnson's money as a matter which had long furnished eculation of unfailing interest to the wn of Slumborough, and filled many a wning gap in conversation at afternoon
. Mrs. Johnson had but one relative the world, Miss Lizzie Roberts, the ughter of her late sister. This young dy, however, it was agreed, had not the ghtest chance of being mentioned in her nt's will. A handsome, well-bred girl, e was left at her parents' death to make r own way in the world, inheriting no-ing but the battle of life and the diske of Mrs. Johnson, who had not seen e child since it quitted its baby clothes.
his strange antipathy was traceable, as me people said, to times long gone by, hen Mr. Roberts, Lizzie's father, then nowned for his manly beauty, had been assiduous visitor at the house of Mrs.
Johnson's parents. She being the elder aughter, and taking all his attentions for erself, and had felt it keenly as a per-nal insult when her sister dared "to atch him away"; and even later on, afr having made a much more brilliant atch herself, she never could forgive this arly defeat. Death even had not buried e grudge, which not unnaturally passed om mother to child.
How far this saying may have been ue or not, one thing was certain; poor Lizzie Roberts had not the ghost of a hance of ever seeing a single penny from er aunt's money box; her claims were learly quite out of the question. There remained, then, only Miss Nelly Brown,
Mrs. Johnson's lady companion, and Mr.
James Fox.
Mr. James Fox knew from his partner, who had cautioned him in a friendly way, that Mrs Johnson was not going to divide her fortune, but would leave the whole of it to her "truest friend," though she had evidently not yet made her mind up as to who deserved that title. More than once had Mr. Plumley been suddenly summoned to draw up a new will; so slight an annoyance as a cold cup of tea having caused her to destroy the one in Miss Nelly's favor. Then two days' neglect on the part of Mr. Fox, and a constant supply of hot tea at the hands of Miss Nelly, again reinstated this lady in Mrs. Johnson's good graces. Mr. Fox, therefore, had good cause for anxiety as to what would be the exact state of affairs when the old lady was finally called upon to join the majority.

"With such an old woman," he said to himself, "who is ready to make a new will any day and to burn it the next, there is no dependence, one's future hangs upon a whim; a remedy must be found. The safest thing would of course be to make love to Miss Nelly; she is rather 'thirtyish,' and altogether not very attractive; still, if she were to get all the money, she would be anything but undesirable.

So Mr. James Fox set to work at once to make himself agreeable to Miss Brown, yet without going too far; for he had by no means forgotten Miss Laquerton, but he felt it was better to have two strings to his bow, and therefore he determined to do his best to keep Miss Nelly in good humor. This lady, however, was not so easily satisfied as the solicitor expected, for now he had once begun to pay her attentions, she wanted a decided offer of marriage, and not being able to get it, she took refuge in a stratagem. This consisted in suddenly making the discovery that Mrs. Johnson's health was in absolute want of some German waters—in fact, she decided that it was quite dangerous for her to spend the spring in England, with all the changes of heat and cold. The old lady was therefore soon persuaded to yield to such tender solicitude, and away the couple went, leaving Mr. James Fox in a rather awkward dilemma. What was he to do? If he wrote cool letters to Miss Nelly, she would be offended, and all his chances would be lost in the event of her inheriting Mrs. Johnson's property; on the other hand, if he played the part of a lover, he committed himself, and gave her the materials for a breach-of-promise case should the good lady die when his name only figured in the will, and should he then turn his attention to Miss Laquerton. What, then, could he do?

The worthy Fox was baffled for the moment, but after deep deliberation he hit upon a great idea which his chemical studies suggested to him. Chuckling to himself, he went to a chemist's shop, purchased several drugs, and mixed and remixed until a magnificent black ink was produced, which had the grand advantage that in about ten days after being committed to paper it would fade away, without leaving the slightest trace. Emboldened by the happy result of his experiments he became at once the most tender and zealous correspondent any woman could wish for. His letters, in fact, overflowed with promises of everlasting devotion. Miss Nelly beamed with joy; for she was now convinced how true and unselfish was the attachment of her admirer.

Under such circumstances it was not surprising that the German waters speedily did Mrs. Johnson so much good that her careful nurse considered that the cure could be shortened, and accordingly the couple returned to England much earlier than had been expected.

Whether, however, the waters had really disagreed with the old lady, or something else had upset her, was never quite clear, but soon after their return to England her health and strength began seriously to fail. She complained bitterly that Miss Nelly had induced her to take an unnecessary and useless journey, and that ever since she had neglected her altogether. The end of it was that one day in the height of her anger, she burnt the then existing will, and made Mr. James Fox sole heir to everything she possessed. This decision seemed to have exhausted her remaining energy, for she died not many days after.

Mr. Fox, who had been apprised of the state of affairs by his partner and friend, almost lost his senses with joy; still his excitment did not prevent him investing some money in hatbands and crape, and looking as mournful as if the sorrows of the whole world rested upon his shoulders. Miss Nelly, too, almost melted away in tears, and could only be comforted by "her Jamie," as she now called Mr. Fox But the latter seemed to have turned quite dull with grief. He did not appear to understand her at all, and day by day as she became more demonstrative he grew less affectionate. The afternoon before the funeral Miss Nelly was extremely broken hearted, and amid her sobs remarked how comfortable and happy she had always been with her late dear friend. To her astonishment Mr. Fox attempted to comfort her by saying with cool civility, "I hope you may soon meet again with such a happy home as you have had here till now."

On hearing this Miss Nelly's tears suddenly dried up, and with eyes dilated with astonishment and anger, she cried: "It is you whom I expect to make me this happy home!"

Mr. Fox, however, simply shrugged his shoulders, saying: "I do not deny that I may have once had such ideas; but of late I have grown wiser. Everything alters in this world; why then should our opinions not do the same? That is what we call progress."

Upon this he bowed and left Miss Nelly crying and fainting in an arm-chair.

He did not hear anything of her till a few days later, when a gentleman called upon him, saying that he had been intrusted with Miss Nelly Brown's affairs, and suggesting that perhaps Mr. Fox, before matters went further, would prefer making some private arrangement about his breach of promise of marriage with his client.

"And what proof of that promise has Miss Brown except her saying so?" asked Mr. Fox.

"Oh," answered the young man, "I have seen a box full of letters from you."

"Have you read them?" continued Mr. Fox sarcastically.

"Not yet," replied the other; "but I have seen the box."

"Well, you had better go and read them first before you take any further steps, and if you can find a single line from me to Miss Brown, I am quite willing to let her have ample damages without their being awarded by a court of law."

There was something so diabolical about Mr. Fox that the young defender of innocence found it best to retire for the present, leaving his opponent to rub his hands triumphantly and build castles in the air about the country-seat and the horses and carriages he was going to buy in order to dazzle Miss Laquerton, whom he felt justified in seriously thinking about now.

Miss Nelly had meanwhile been informed of the conversation at Mr. Fox office, and, with an indignant exclamation about "such incredible untruths," she went to fetch her letter-box. There, sure enough, were the letter, all in a little packets, neatly tied up with blue and pink ribbons but strange to say, she could not see an address; and, oh, heavens! when she undidthe packet they contained nothing; but paper—all white paper, without a single word on it. The wily lawyer had evidently deceived her by some demoniacal trick.

The shock was so great to the poor love-sick lady that she had scarcely the courage to show herself when the will was to be read; but she rallied at last, hoping against hope that it might still be in her favor, when she could treat with scorn and contempt her faithless lover and his paltry damages.

Mr. Fox, although he considered himself already master of the house and everything in it, felt considerably excited on the morning of the day appointed for the reading of the will, and when Mr. Plumley, as chief executor, sat down and slowly got his spectacles out, his junior partner came over so faint and his heart fluttered to such an extent that he fancied all his hopes and beautiful castles in the air were crumbling away as in a dream. Why did not his old friend at once read the document? Why did he make the suspense so unbearably long? Why did he continue to stare first at the paper in his hand then at those around him, and then once more at the paper, without uttering a single word? and then at last, when he did speak, why did he stammer, "I—I do not know; I see nothing—in fact, it is the same paper, but——"?

"Could it be? Yes, sure enough, there was the paper on which the will had been made out, but there was nothing upon it now; it was merely a blank, a white sheet!

"Good heavens! With what ink did you write out that will? burst out at last Mr. Fox.

"With what ink?" repeated the old gentleman indignantly, "with your ink. As I found the inkstand up stairs dry, and the old lady was in such a deadly hurry, I rushed down myself to get some, and seeing your bag in the hall, I took from it the little inkstand which you always carry about.

Mr. Fox turned deadly pale, and without saying another word vanished, like his ink, before anybody had found time to ask for an explanation. When the rest of the company had composed themselves again, Mr. Plumley said:

"I knew that the testatrix has destroyed all former wills, so that their is none at all in existence, and, by law, therefore, the property will go to the next of kin. I know, also, that Mrs. Johnson had no relatives whatever except Miss Lizzie Roberts. She is consequently sole heiress."

A Good Story.

The following instance shows the keen sarcastic wit of the late Wendell Phillips. As he was journeying over the New York Central a rather pompous clergyman approached him and asked;

"What is your aim in life?"

To which Mr. Phillips bluntly replied:

"To benefit the Negro."

"Why don't you go down South, then, and do it?" inquired the reverend gentleman.

"Well that is worth thinking about," answered Mr. Phillips; "but," continued he, "I notice you wear a rather white necktie; I would like to ask what is your aim in life?"

"To save souls from hell," was the answer.

"Well, then, why don't you go to hell to do it?" asked Mr. Phillips; but he received no reply. His clerical friend had gone into another car.

A boy in one of the public schools while engaged in defining words, a few days since, made a mistake that was not a mistake. He said, "A demagogue is a vessel that holds beer, wine, gin, whiskey or any other kind of intoxicating liquor.

A girl with three arms is one of the attractions of a Louisiana side show. This young lady ought to be sought for by every marriageable young man in the neighborhood. She could put two arms around a man's neck, while she turned pancakes with the other.

An Irishman caught a bee after it had stung him, and examining it carefully, he said: "Ye dirty little blaggart! Yez bin sittin' round till yez worn the nate out of yer breeches, an' bedad o'ye found yer knoife shticken through the hole in yer hip-pocket, yer little haythen!"

REVOLTING MURDERS.

Educated Criminals.

Strange impulses to murder, or curious deliberation, have marked three of the most extraordinary crimes ever known in the United States, apparently demonstrating that none of us, occupying the most intimate relationship, friendships, or ties of betrothal, are safe from the murderous hands of those we deem our best beloved. In one of the cases we find a youth so well endowed mentally that he was the valedictorian of his class at Yale College; so well organized physically that he was remarkable as an athlete, and so popular with his fellows that they style him "a hail fello well met!" Added to these traits are testimonials of his industry, his ambition as a lawyer, and exemplary conduct in general, and particularly in the family circle. And yet this young man, a member of a cultured family, deliberately invites his own mother and his lovely and interesting sister into a grove adjoining the village where they reside, and brutally kills them, ending by his own suicide with the same pistol! Nothing but an inexplicable note, declaring his purpose, and indicating his uncertainty in a hereafter, explains any possible motive to the crime.

Quite as startling is the case of Preller, supposed to have been chloroformed to death in a hotel-room in St. Louis, then despoiled of his money and jewels, and afterwards packed away in a zinc trunk; and all this, as circumstances strongly go to show, done by his intimate friend, beneficiary and fellow-traveler, and an educated physician of the same nationality. The third tragedy, showing in the principals the same good-breeding, education and family connections conspicuous in the others alluded to, exhibits a handsome young Virginia girl, a distant relation of President Madison, alleged to have been first betrayed under promise of marriage by her own cousin, a relative of President Tyler and a member of the Richmond Bar, and then to have been decoyed by the same man to the old reservoir of the city in the night-time and thrown into the basin, where she was discovered dead by the authorities.

It will be remarked that in none of these cases of murderous violence were the known or alleged perpetrators vulgar criminals, or of the ignorant walks of society: that there was every reason, as there was every indication, that the victims felt the profoundest sense of security in their presence, and that the events themselves were as startling as horrible. And yet, suggestive in a way as the crimes are, it does not tend to lessen our confidence in our daily or chance surroundings. This is well, for we do not believe in what is styled the "epidemic of crime" nor has any specialist ever been able to show (save, perhaps, in forms of robbery, bunco, and the like) that the brutal crimes were ever more than coincidences, or the results of organized bands of desperadoes following up devices which have proved successful in baffling the police. An instance of this was the great prevalence of garroting in London at one time; but this was summarily stopped when an Act was passed sending the offenders to Newgate, there to be flogged in the most exemplary fashion; then garroting ceased. But the mere phases of the taking of human life are not epidemic, and it is because of this that the cases cited may be regarded as phenomenal, although they are all remarkable. And, reflect as we may, there is no way to prevent, or foresee, or imagine, any such events. There are, however, a class of suicides and murders which are often proclaimed by their perpetrators, and these certainly merit some prompt action. It is an ordinary, everyday case to hear of men and women declaring murderous intentions, which are lightly dismissed, only to find afterwards that the threats have been carried out. And, finally, much of the misery that comes from violent deaths can be directly traced to the reckless sale of firearms, drugs and poisons, and to the wandering at large of partially or wholly insane people; and we imagine that no better service could be done to society than a thorough investigation, by competent authorities, of what measures should be taken to protect its members from murderous self-violence or otherwise.

Destroying War.

War is a thermometer of fire and death. It blots out a whole crop of grain in a week, destroys the efficiency of a mighty railroad in three days, puts millions a day upon the public debt of a nation, stops credit in every direction, hastens bankruptcy, and lifts into glory yesterday's hostler and street car driver. The idle portion of the world will never go to the poor-house if war can intervene in their behalf. Russia has attempted to come forward among the business nations vainly; her strong card has always been war. She would prefer not to trouble Europe, but unfortunately her path into Asia lies across the apprehensions of England. England, pursuing a huge trading and colonial career, has awakened the jealousy of nearly every nation in Europe which is indifferent to a struggle in the far East or on the seas between the winter giant and the island rover. England is full of gloom, of unemployed people, of the satiety of avarice and of commerce. Both England and Russia have the temptation to arm the great hordes of Asia and use them in war. England has colonies all over the globe, and the attitude of each of these will be considered with interest. War is like fire; you can kindle it anywhere, but where you can stop it is a matter of wind and water.

Hanging on the ragged edge is now rendered tottering on the slippery b-rink.

Not Yet Safe.

We are coming to understand better the character of the contagions to which most infectious diseases are due. We have learned that they are in the main living organisms which, from without, find their way into the system, where they multiply in prodigious numbers, and are then thrown out to multiply again in congenial filth whence they find their deadly way back into the system. We more fully comprehend the relation of cleanliness and ventilation to health. We are being at more pains and cost to secure pure drinking water. We are adopting better methods and measures for the safer disposal of our sewage.

This is all well and hopeful, but important sources of danger remain.

One is the ignorance, carelessness and wicked neglect of plumbers. A large part of the plumbing is far from scientific and effective. The owner knows little difference between good work and bad, and many a plumber knows little more. Besides, the job is largely out of sight. Many a cellar floor in our first-class dwellings covers a cesspool formed from leakage, for which the latter is responsible. We often hire a good plumber, who does his work, without adequate supervision, through an incompetent hand. In one of the finest mansions in Maryland in which the plumbing was supposed to be looked after with unwonted care, and was inspected monthly, infectious diseases compelled a more searching investigation, when it was found out that one of the drain-pipes had fallen out of its place, and beneath the floor were the deadly accumulations of years.

A still greater source of danger is the carelessness of the friends of the sick. Mates are allowed to visit the sick chamber. Older persons come freely to the house regardless of the fact that the poison often fills it. In many cases neither ventilation nor disinfection is looked after. The young convalescents are permitted to play again freely with their companions or to return to school, or are sent to homes in the country, either without being duly disinfected;—especially in hair,—or even before they have passed the point when they can directly communicate the disease. Members of the family often go without any precaution, from the sick room into other families, or to their places of business, and mingle with their shop-mates.

Another danger is from attacks so mild that they either are thought to be harmless, or their nature is not recognised. Now the mildest forms can give rise to the most virulent.

It is plain that, if we would stamp out infectious diseases, much more is to be done by law and by public sentiments than is now attempted.

Abuse of High Health.

High health is one of our best blessings. It enables us to make the most of life with the least wear and with the greatest enjoyment.

With it is connected a vigorous digestion. Its possessors incline to eat more than is needed to supply nervous force to the machinery of the system, or to make good its incessant waste, for they are either unconscious of harm from undue indulgence, or they rapidly rally from its immediate effects. To this class belong those who live to eat, instead of eating to live.

We are not mere animals. We were made to be, predominantly, moral and intellectual beings. Now nature allows no one to violate her laws with impunity. We exalt the bestial in us only at the expense of our higher nature. Some of the Roman emperors thus came to be more brutish than the brute. They were, of course, extreme cases—veritable monsters.

But even the great pulpit orator of England once wrote, "I ate like a hog, and I preached like a hog." Many a man of lofty powers and position has been, for the time, utterly shorn of his strength through the demand made by his stomach on his brain. He who is thus yielding daily to the sway of his lower nature cannot reach the full capability of his higher. If he does not embrute himself, he must come far short of the full stature of his manhood.

But there is another penalty which falls upon our physical powers. Where more food is eaten than is assimilated, it is deposited as encumbering fat; or it undergoes chemical changes that give rise to gout; or it enflames the kidneys in their struggle to eliminate it; or it congests the stomach and liver; or it breaks down the brain with softening or with apoplexy. Men of high health ought to live a hundred years; they are apt to fall of their threescore and ten.

But high health may be abused in the direction of the intellect. Its possessor can work mentally more hours a day than others without exhaustion; can curtail sleep; can neglect physical exercise; can carry great loads of care and responsibility. Now, with such there comes to be, in time, a mighty momentum towards and beyond the limits of safety, and either their own habits, or the influence with which they surround themselves, lead to the partial or complete breakdown of their brains. These are the saddest of all wrecks. But they are numerous.

"So the missis is to be married, eh?" said the gardener to the cook. "Yis; and in illigant stoyle, too. She's goin' fer ter have a dhess thray yarruds long and four pall-bearers ter kerry it."

A girl, masquerading in boy's clothing, slipped and fell. She said, "Ouch!" and this gave her away. A man would have been just as much hurt, but he would have made a different remark.

"I can't say as he want to heaven," remarked a Fort Scott citizen of a deceased townsman, "but he paid a bill of eleven years standing only the day before he died, and you can judge for yourself."

They had just been into the village visiting Miss McColman, who was injured by the runaway on Sunday evening.—Chatsworth News.

Our subscribers will please examine the number following their address on this paper and see how it corresponds with the number of this issue which is 247. If the number on your address is not 247 or over, then you are in arrears the same number of weeks that your number is short of 247; if it is over that number then you are paid in advance as many weeks as your number is above 247. If you are in arrears we would like very much to have you call around, or remit.

Get Ready.—No sensible man should get angry because a newspaper man "duns" him for money. A dun is not an impeachment of a subscriber's integrity, but is simply an outcropping of a publisher's necessities. For instance, three or four hundred men owe us from one to two dollars. We have to dun them in order to get enough money to pay our expenses. Instead of getting angry and "stopping the paper" because the publisher asks him for what is honestly due, the subscriber should thank the editor for waiting so patiently and pay up like a man. We are about to dun and don't you forget it.

Fluid Lightning is simply a marvellous Rheumatic Remedy. I was for two months a cripple, unable to get out of the house from Sciatica. One bottle gave me instant relief, and placed me on my feet again. I have driven fourteen miles to-day (something I could not possibly have done were it not for Fluid Lightning) for the express purpose of procuring another bottle. So says Wm. Dixon, Gananoque. Only 25 cents per bottle at Hill Bro's. 6

A lady letter writer wants to know what a young man won't do when he's in love. Well, he won't eat onions, he won't give his attention to his business, he won't wear a poorly laundered shirt, he won't go to see his girl u he has oiled his hair nnd scented his pocket handkerchief, he won't leave his girl at night until he hears the step of her exasperated father on the stairs, he won't believe his girl is anything but an angel, for he never saw her hanging out the washing with six clothes pins in her mouth at one time. He won't take no for an answer when he is parting with her on the stoop and asks for "just one," he won't—but what's the use of going farther.

The ninth number of The Canadian Pictorial and Illustrated War News is before us. It contains the following illustrations: In the Skirmish Line at Batoche (from a sketch by Mr. E. W. Morrison); The 65th Battalion (Mount Royal Rifles) at Port Arthur (from a photograph by Cooke); Lieut.-Col. Gray, M. P. P., commanding Toronto Field Battery (from a photograph by Hunter & Co.); A Zareba in the North-west (from diagram and description by the "Globe's" Correspondent); Artillery Shelling the Rebels at Fish Creek (from a sketch by Mr. E. W. Morrison). There is also a very fine graphic two-page Supplement, entitled "The Bayonet Charge at Batoche." The paper sells at 15 cents per copy, obtainable from local booksellers and from the office of publication.

Rockford in Ruins.—Rockford Castle, which has long been a prominent landmark of the Garafraxa Road, is now a desolate ruin. About midnight on Thursday last, fire was discovered in one of the upper rooms, and although Mr. Gibson and his wife had not yet retired, the flames spread with such rapidity that all they could do was to save their children, leaving their furniture to the devouring element. Nothing but the bare stone walls (or rather three of them, the front having fallen,) now remain of the hotel; while the stables, which were frame, were also destroyed. The premises was owned by Mr. S. J. Parker, and was insured for $1000, which will be about half the loss. Mr. M. Gibson, who occupied the house, lost all his furniture on which he had an insurance for $800.—O. S. Times.

The revised version of the Old Testament, which was given to the public last week, has been received with every manifestation of approval and favor. Critics are almost a unit in declaring it to be an admirable and learned work undertaken and completed in a broad, and yet conservative spirit, with the conscientious aim of giving to the world the true and literal interpretation of the original text. The revisers have proceeded, cautiously, rigidly adhering to the old version where it truly expressed the meaning intended to be conveyed. In the labor of translation the profoundest scholars of two hemispheres have been engaged. The result is seen in the elegant diction and simplicity of expression characterising the whole work, and which, apart from its value as being the Divine revelation to man, possesses a literary merit which challenges the admiration of Christian and sceptic alike.—Truth.

Rocklyn.

The farmers in this community have finished seeding, and a rich and bountiful harvest is expected.

A sneak thief entered W. H. Dodson's store on Tuesday last and stole $5 or thereabouts, out of the cash drawer, Mr. Dodson at the time being in another part of the shop. Strong suspicions, but no arrests.

The 12th of July will be celebrated in Rocklyn, when six or seven lodges will be present.

A meeting will be held in W. H. Dodson's Hotel on the 4th inst, for the purpose of discussing the advisability of celebrating the 1st of July in this village. As this will be the first of the kind for Rocklyn, a grand day's sport may be expected.

Capture Of Khartoum.

TWENTY THOUSAND LIVES DESTROYE BY THE MAHDIS TROOPS.

The Chiro correspondent of The Paris Tempt has sent to that newspaper an account of the captain of Khartoum by an eye-witness. Ahmed Mahommed Saleh, a sergeant of the Egyptian army, who was in the neighborhood of this Palace occupied by Gen. Gordon, but has just escaped from the conquered town. He arrived safe at Assouan on the 27th of April last. narration, literally translated from the Arabic, is as follows:—

Khartoum was at the point of being reduced to famine. All kinds of food were selling at exorbitant prices. In the course of one night the rebels, numbering 25,000, under the command of Walad el Nogan, filled up the ditches outside the town. That operation could be carried out in consequence of the trason of several of General ordon's officers—principally Farag Pasha, Ahmed Bey, Ali Gelab, and Hassan Bey el Bagnischani.

At day break while the inhabitants were still asleep, the soldiers of Mohammed Ahmed entered the town, shouting and began to massacre all those whom they met. Then they attacted the Palace of the Governor General, who after having killed two of his assailants, was over powered by numbers. His head was cut off and taken to the Mahdi. The slaughter and pillage continued until mid-day.

Towards sunset, the Ababdehs, who act as spies for the rebels, warned them of the approach of vessels coming from the north with soldiers and and provisions. These troops coming to the rescue of the town, were obliged to turn back: and two vessels were destroyed. If the English had reached Khartoum at a few hours earlier they would have saved the town, which was well fortified, and contained a garrison of 18,000 men. The greater number of these were killed. The Shaggiehs perished to a man in the slaughter.

Three days after the occupation the rebels put to death Farag Pasha and Ahmed Bey. As regards the third traitor, Hassan Bey el Bagnischani he was spared, and has joined the troops of the Mahdi.

The correspondent adds, that the women of Khartoum were sold as slaves, after a number had been reserved by Mohammed Ahmed and some of his chiefs. The dead amounted to more than 20,000. The bouies, under the instruction of Mohammed Ahmed, were lying unburied. The Mahdi lives at Omdurman, a village on the right bank of the Bahr el Abiad, commanding the route to Kordofan. He goes every Friday to say prayers at Khartoum.

The World Would Be Better For It.

If men cared less for wealth and fame,
And less for battlefield and glory!
If writ in human hearts, a name
Seemed better than in song or story;
If men, instead of nay and strife,
Would learn to hate it and abhor it;
If more relied on love to guide—
The world would be the better for it.

If men dealt less in stocks and lands,
And more in books and deeds fraternal;
If Love's work had more willing hands,
To link this world to the supernal;
If men stored up Love's oil and wine,
And on bruised human hearts would pour it;
If "yours" and "mine" would once combine—
The world would be the better for it.

If more would set the play of life,
And fewer spoil it in rehearsal;
If bigotry would sheathe its knife
Till good became more universal;
If custom, gray with age grown,
Had fewer blind men to adore it;
If talent shown for truth alone—
The world would be the better for it.

If men were wise in little things—
Affecting less in all their dealings—
If heart-had fewer rusted strings
To isolate their kindly feelings;
If men, when wrong beats down the right,
Would strike together and restore it;
If right made might in every fight—
The world would be the better for it.

AVENGED;

OR, CALM AFTER STORM

"'Look here, Harriet!' he said, coming close up to the table where I sat at work, and fingering his cable-chain rather nervously. 'We'll have no more of that, if you please; my home is going to be yours for the rest of your life, and, to set your mind at ease, I will tell you the real state of the case. I won't deny to you,' he went on, growing suddenly red in the face, and turning the contents of my work-basket over in the most reckless fashion—, I won't deny that I was just a little disappointed in Julia when we first met. Of course time had stood still with her in my thoughts, and I wanted the bloom and freshness of twenty years back. In fact, I was unjust enough to think her a little old-maidish and affected, poor soul; but that was my fault, of course, and has nothing to do with the present matter,' he added, with a sudden fierce look, as though he defied me to contradict him, which I had not the slightest idea of doing. Seeing this, he finished more mildly, and in a very feeling manner. "'What I mean to say is, the marriage will be a good thing for us all—for me and my children, who are all at sixes and sevens, with no mistress at the head of a big house; for you two, you may have some peace and comfort at the end of your days, if you did not get it at the beginning—I could not find it in my heart and conscience to go back to Australia and leave you two girls toiling for your daily bread!'"

"What a good, kind man!" Cressida cries, with a little thrill of unselfish enthusiasm. "I am sure you will be glad to go, Miss Smerdon! I am sure you will be happy in Mr. Osborne's home!"

"That's as may be, child," is the doubtful answer. "If I am not, it will be from no lack of kindness on his part, for, if ever a good man lived, he is one. However, the offer is one I cannot afford to refuse, for I am getting an old woman, and the new-fashioned teaching is just a little beyond me; and, when I cease to teach, I may as well cease to live, for there will be little enough for me to live on; but, Cressida, have you thought of how all these changes will affect you?"

Cressida does not answer immediately. Slowly but surely she is realizing, with a sickening sort of chill, that the gates of the past—the gates that shut in her innocent untroubled childhood—are closing for ever behind her; that she is standing, breathless and trembling, upon the threshold of a new strange world.

Beech House is to close, the Misses are to pass away to another hemisphere, and be known to her no more. It has been no very pleasant home; but it is the only one she has ever known, They have not been kind or tender guradians; but they have grimly parodied all the sweet and sacred ties of life to the orphan girl, and she clings to them now with a passion that surprises herself.

Whether she stands literally alone in the world or has some claim on some one's love and protection Cressida Leigh does not know, and the Misses Smerdon are as ignorant as she. Thirteen years ago, her young mother had come to Beech House College as a lady-boarder, bringing the little girl of three as a pupil into the school. But her stay was not a long one. The hand of death was on the fair girlish brow of the young widow, whose soft pathetic eyes touched Harriet Smerdon's heart with an unwonted pity; and in less than a year she had quietly passed away from a world that had been too hard for her.

"You will keep my little Cressida," she had said with her last faint breath. "There are a few hundreds—that will pay you till she can teach in her turn—my poor baby!—it is all that I can do for her!"

It was not a charge Miss Smerdon much cared for; but she was a kind-hearted woman in the main, and she could not look into the eyes over which the film of death was glazing and refuse that earnest prayer. Moreover, as Miss Julia suggested, the immediate hundreds would come in useful in the hand-to-mouth existence of a small struggling school. And so Rosamond Leigh passed away almost contentedly, leaving her child in the safe shelter of those grimly-folded arms; and the little Cressida became a part and parcel of Beech House Academy, and grew up therein, knowing nothing and less than nothing of the world that lay beyond its walls.

It has been a dull gray life, brightened only by a sunny nature and the flower-like fancies of healthy youth; but, now that it will all be cold, it grows suddenly pathetically dear—Cressida forgets that she herself has in a measure broken from it, forgets Isadore St. Just and his lately declared passion—forgets all but the sharp pain that sets her pretty lip quivering, and makes the slow heavy tears roll down her pale cheeks and fall drop by drop on her clasped hands.

"Don't, child!" Miss Smerdon cries, in tones of sharp remonstrance; and she rises and paces the dimly-lighted room in a Napoleonic attitude of agitation, her large head bent forward, her arms crossed behind her back. The sight of the woe-begone white face stabs her like a knife-thrust, and the slender dejected figure introduces a new element of doubt and discord into her well matured plans. "If you cry so—if you take the matter like that, I will not go!"

Her energy at once calms and frightens Cressida. She rouses herself with a vigorous effort, and smiles bravely through her tears.

"It was only for a minute. I was a great coward," she says apologetically. "You have made all your arrangements, then?"

"All but those that concern you," is the gloomy answer. "Julia talks of putting your name down as a governess agency or recommending you to a private family; but——"

The color flushes again over Cressida's pale face, and she says rapidly—

"Don't let my future trouble you——"

"Don't talk preposterous nonsense!" is the tart answer, while Miss Smerdon rubs her hands more vigorously than ever, and flicks a stray teardrop from her stubby gray lashes. "You might as well tell me not to breathe, child! When we are away, and the house shut up—— No, I can't do it!" she adds, rising and stamping her foot with sudden determination.

"The desertion would be too base and cruel! Your mother would come back and haunt me!"

Cressida stares at the excited woman with eyes of wildest wonder. Is it really Miss Smerdon, her hard unsympathetic task-mistress, who is thus oddly moved? Are those tears that glitter in the heavy lustreless eyes Is it a sob that shakes the dictatorial voice? Cressida's breath comes faster, her heart is strangely thrilled and touched; she feels as though she has rendered hitherto a loveless obedience in a wholly different light. If the school-life could but come over again she would only be too glad to please this Miss Smerdon, Cressida thinks; but the school-days are passed and done with now.

"Oh, you may well look puzzled, child?" Miss Smerdon's voice is sharpened by the painful agitation of her thoughts, for nature is unkind in every way to the poor school-mistress in whose aspect even sentiment grows shrewish. "I never seemed to care for you—I dare say you hated the cross old woman who worked and worried your life out."

"No, no!" Cressida interrupts remorsefully; but Miss Smerdon nods her old head.

"Little blame to you, if you did, child; but I tried to do my duty, and keep my promise to your poor young mother, though I did it in a grudging fashion, I admit."

And now the large hand tightens with sudden energy on the girl's slender shoulder, the rugged face grows almost noble in its look of renunciation and resolve.

"No—Julia and her husband must go without me; I will not leave you friendless and alone,"

All Cressida's frank and generous nature thrills in quick responsive answer to the generous words; her fear of the woman and her promise of secrecy are alike forgotten as she flings her warm young arms round the withered neck, and sobs out the confession that will set Harriet Smerdon's mind at rest.

"I am not alone, not friendless; I am to marry Monsieur Isadore St. Just!"

CHAPTER III.

The words are far from having the reassuring effect that Cressida Leigh expected. Miss Smerdon repeats them in anything but a delighted tone, and unclasps the clinging arms energetically, so that she may more easily survey the brightly-blushing face. What she reads there seems to startle her still more. If Cressida had been six, instead of sixteen, she could not be more utterly surprised than she is by the idea that she should have taken to herself a lover, and be calmly looking forward to her married life.

"Julia is too old decidedly," she says irritably. "I do not counsel any one to wait too long; but you—— Why, child, you are not out of your short frocks yet!"

And she glances at the short gray skirt beneath which the pretty feet are all too plainly shown; then, as Cressida flushes a little indignantly, her thoughts fly o at a fresh angle.

"Isadore St. Just, too!" she repeats, as though there lay some cause of offence in the syllables of the pretty un-English name. "I've no great opinion—— What did he mean by filling your little fool's head with his ridiculous romance?"

Cressida Leigh is loyal above all things and Miss Smerdon is wounding her loyalty now. Mere personal abuse she has borne and will bear patiently enough; but there must be no fault found with her lover.

"You must not say that, Miss Smerdon," she says bravely; and her look is so composed and womanly that all in a moment the thought of love and marriage in connection with little Cressida grows less and less absurd in Harriet Smerdon's eyes—becomes indeed a possible, though startling solution of her difficulty. And, while she turns it over and ponders it, Cressida stands before her with linked hands and proudly-lifted head, speaking still in her lover's defence. "Mr. St. Just has done nothing wrong; he found me very lonely, very friendless, as he thought—and as I thought till to-night," she adds, with a shy side-look that brings a remorseful pang to Harriet Smerdon's heart. "He pitied my loneliness; he was very, very kind to me."

"I dare say; men usually are kind to faces like yours," Miss Smerdon comments in a judiciously-inaudible grunt. Aloud she says, with sudden determination—

"Well, never mind the preliminaries, child! The long and the short of the matter is—you and my French master have fallen in love with one another. Isn't that it?"

She takes the little nod and rosy glow for a sufficient answer, and goes on crossly—

"Of course! I wish old Dupont had had the decency to keep his rheumatism at bay. Nobody ever fell in love with him, and, to do him justice, I never heard of his trying to turn a schoolgirl's head."

"Miss Smerdon!" Cressida interrupts, such burning indignation in her look and tone that, cross and troubled as she is, the schoolmistress cannot keep back a faint smile.

"Oh, yes, I know!" she continues grimly. "Poor old Dupont took snuff, wore a scratch wig, and had not a half dozen teeth in his old jaws; but he was the soul of honor. And his handsome fascinating deputy—— Well, never mind; I am not going to say any more now. Monsieur St. Just wants to marry you soon?"

A very faint, hesitating "Yes" drops timidly from Cressida's red lips.

"What means has he—what position to offer you?"

Cressida rounds her bronze-brown eyes in simple wonder. If Miss Smerdon knows nothing of her French master's ways and means, her own ignorance upon the point is by many degrees blanker still. He is kind and handsome, and he loves her. These salient facts are all she knows or cares to know of the man in whose charge she is about to commit her life.

"I do not know," she says, in a childishly-apologetic tone—for she reads in the other's face that she has in some way acted foolishly. "He did not say anything about—about that sort of thing, and of course I did not ask him."

"But I will," Miss Smerdon says, drawing her desk before her as she speaks; but Cressida, with a flash of remembrance that pales her lately-blushing face, lays one slim hand upon the thin arm clad in the merino sleeve.

"Pray do not do that," she cries quickly; "he will be so vexed! He told me——"

"To keep this affair a secret—not to trust me?" Harriet Smerdon finishes, with a flush of righteous indignation.

"Then the more reason that I should call him to account. No, child"—raising her hand with an old imperative gesture that Cresaida Leigh has all her life unquestioningly obeyed—"you are only wasting breath—I am your guardian, your mother's representative, and I shall act for you here, whether you like it or not. If Isidore St. Just is an honorable man and a gentleman, he can marry you when John marries Julia, in my presence and in the face of the world; if he is not—well, the sooner you are quit of him the better."

"But, Miss Smerdon," Cressida interrupts tremblingly.

"But—you go to bed, child," is the prompt answer—"go to bed, and leave me to manage my own business in my own way."

She is so much the imperative awe-inspiring schoolmistress of the old days that Cressida, who, despite her avowed love and projected marriage, is at heart a timid schoolgirl still, dares not even venture a remonstrance. She creeps away, feeling very small and snubbed, despite the novel grandeur of her engagement, to the little white couch that stands lonely now in one corner of the big deserted dormitory; and, making up her mind to a night of wakeful agony, quietly cries herself to sleep almost as soon as her golden head touches the pillow.

And, in the meantime, with infinite pains and labor, Miss Smerdon composes the letter that is to bring Monsieur St. Just to the point. When it is written, she reads and re-reads it with a very dissatisfied look.

"I have been plain enough at least—that is one comfort;" and she folds the paper with an impatient sigh. "I ought to be glad—I shall be glad if all turns out well. Her mother could ask no more than that I should leave her in her husband's charge; but—I wish it had been an Englishman—some one I knew and could trust. But there—there"—pushing her chair back with vicious energy, as though it were a disagreeable thought—"it's no good wishing; I wonder what he will say to my letter?"

What Monsieur St. Just does say, when over his matutinal coffee he peruses the carefully-concocted epistle, would assuredly shock and startle the modest spinster's ears that are wholly unaccustomed to the more jarring and dissonant chords of masculine speech.

The Frenchman's handsome face grows black with passion, certain delicately-marked veins on his brow and temple swell ominously, fine lines round the curved lips and cruel-looking eyes develop themselves with curious distinctness, changing the whole character of the face as completely as though a mask had suddenly dropped, and revealing something that augurs ill for the future of any one who might chance to lie at Monsieur St. Just's mercy.

"Little fool—little wretch!" says Cressida's lover, pacing his snug bachelor apartment in a fury, and cruelly kicking from his path the pretty black-and-white kitten that, a minute or so back, was purring luxuriously on his knee, that seeks now to show its gratitude by rubbing its sleek head against his ankle. "Little idiot! Could she not obey me even for an hour? My faith, she shall pay me for this some day!"

There is a savage menace in the words that are ground out through the short gleaming white teeth; but Monsieur St. Just's fury seems to exhaust itself in the rapid walk and in the running fire of maledictory French and English that accompanies it. When he comes again to the table, throws himself back in his lounging-chair, and rolls a cigarette with delicate untrembling fingers, his face, though a shade paler, is composed and tranquil; there is even an old triumphant smile flickering in his dark eyes and curving the corners of the full mobile lips, whose eloquent play the small pointed moustache does not serve to hide.

"Oh, but she is subtle and skilful, this gaunt schoolmistress!" he says sipping his cold coffee with disproportionate relish, and coaxing back the offended kitten to her perch "She guards her lamb well; she will bind the wolf down under pains and penalties; she will chain him with a lock and key—a tamed animal on the domestic hearthrug! How clever she is and how prudent! What wolf can hope to baffle her—the astute demoiselle Smerdon?"

Then he calmly surveys the dark beauty of his face in the little mirror that hangs between the windows.

"The poor wolf!" he says, pursuing some loop-line of his previous train of thought, as he turns from the glass with unabated complacency. "All the world opposes itself to him—all the world upsets his little predatory plans. Who can complain, then, if the poor ill-used and suspected animal assume for the nonce the lion's hide, and make his enemies the dupes of their own ignoble cunning? The lamb has so many defenders, the poor wolf finds no champion save himself."

It is not a reassuring soliloquy; but Monsieur St Just's appearance is anything but wolf-like when, a little later, he enters the dingily-furnished drawing-room wherein the two Misses Smerdon and Mr. Osborne are assembled to receive him. It is a formidable phalanx, but it abashes him not one whit; he has made up his mind what part he will play, and is perfectly indifferent as to the audience he plays to; they are certain not to appreciate the fine finish of his art, he thinks, with a contemptuous shoulder-shrug, as he surveys the too-anxious faces before him.

So he salutes the assembled court with a smile, the frank graciousness of which is all-embracing, and a bow so graceful and unembarrassed that John Osborne, who is constitutionally awkward and Philistine to the backbone, half-admires half-resents it as something that goes beyond the probabilities of nature.

"Oh, John, isn't he handsome?" Miss Julia whispers, clapping her little hands and rolling her pale blue eyes in a girlish ecstasy.

"Nothing to make yourself a fool about, Ju!" is the gruff answer. "Good looking enough, but too much like a play actor for my taste. He walked in as though the curtain had just rolled up; and, for my part, I feel as though I ought to applaud him before he begins."

Miss Julia colours and tosses her yellow head, indignant alike at the depreciatory criticism of the man she sincerely admires and the uncivil remark to herself. Fortunately however there flashes across her mind a suggestion so flattering to her vanity that her good temper and complacency are restored as by magic.

"John is jealous," she thinks, with a thrill of triumph—"jealous of that handsome Isidore! Poor fellow! Well, I can't be cross, and I can't snub him, though he does show his feelings in such a terribly brusque fashion!"

And she sighs to think John never will be what she considers a lover, a being all smiles and sighs and dantiest compliments—but smiles over the comforting reflection that, unromantic as he is, he has at least come from the other end of world to endow her with something more substantial—a husband and a home!

"No; I don't like his face," John grumbles on sotto voce, innocently unconscious of the suspicion that flits through his companion's head. "For all his straight features, curls, and black eyes, I don't like him; and, if Harriet's of my mind, she will put him through his facings pretty sharply. However, he's here to speak for himself, and it is only fair to listen to what he has to say."

Miss Julia nods her head, and John prepares himself with outward stolidity but attentive interest to listen.

What Monsieur St. Just has to say is so gracefully worded, so frank and straightforward, that both the women are won over at once, and even the male listener is forced to grunt a reluctant and audible approbation that brings a quick gleam of what cannot be amusement, but oddly suggests that opportune sentiment, to Isadore's brilliant eyes.

He is indebted to madame for ever, he says, his soft rich voice thrilling with the fervor of his words. She has given him the opportunity for which he longed, with an eagerness unexampled and indescribable. And he bows, and makes a movement as though he would kiss the thin shrivelled hand that plays nervously with a gilt paper-knife—a demonstration that so alarms Miss Smerdon that she instantly places the menaced member out of danger's reach behind her.

Isidore draws back with undiminished grace, and proceeds fluently with his speech. Consulting his own inclination he would rather have bitten off the hand that had written that letter; but he thought the occasion the scene required the minute, and was ready to sacrifice himself as an artist.

"You really love Cressida Leigh, and wish to marry her?" Miss Smerdon asks sharply.

Ancient Rings Recently

A considerable quantity of bron were found in the side of a railway at Bergen, in the neighborhood of stein, in Upper Bavaria, a short since. They were lying together in about two and a half feet below the face, and so cemented by the surrou clay that they had to be separated pickaxe. They were grouped in of five each, each bunch being quite ed, so to say, in the clay, apart fro others. Each ring was about one metre thick, open; the ends being th and somewhat flattened, and the respectively as hook and eye; those where about seven centimetres (2 apart. The outer surface of the rough, destitute of any ornament, and do not seem as if intended for a p use. Indeed their size and appea weighing about seven ounces and a diameter of from four and three-inches to five and a half inches, help toward forming any opinion their use. Similar rings have been in other parts of Germany, chiefly southwest, but never in graves, excluding the supposition that could have been designed for p adornment. It has been suggested they were simply "raw material," into this shape for convenience of p transport to market by retail dealers the flat metal buckles which have found in abundance. Some owner them for safety probably thousa years ago, and either failed to re the spot or never returned to dig property. At all events here is opportunity for learned research.

The Key of Death.

In the collection of curiosities preserved in the arsenal of Venice there is a key of which the following singular tradition, says a contemporary, is related:

About the year 1600 one of those dangerous men in whom extraordinary talent is only the fearful source of crime and wickedness beyond that of ordinary men, came to establish himself as a merchant or trader in Venice. The stranger, whose name was Tebaldo, became enamoured of the daughter of an ancient house already affianced to another. He demanded her hand in marriage, and was of course rejected. Enraged at this, he studied how to be revenged. Profoundly skilled in the mechanical arts, he allowed himself no rest until he had invented the most formidable weapon which could be imagined. This was a key of large size, the handle of which was so constructed that it could be turned round with littled fficulty; when turned, it discovered a spring, which, on pressure, launched from the other end a needle or lancet of such subtle fineness that it entered into the flesh and buried itself there without leaving external trace. Tebaldo waited in disguise at the door of the church in which the maiden whom he loved was about to receive the nuptial benediction. The assassin sent the slender steel unperceived into the breast of the bridegroom. The wounded man had no suspicion of injury, but, seized with a sudden and sharp pain in the midst of the ceremony, he fainted, and was carried to his house amid the lamentations of the bridal party. Vain was all the skill of the physicians, who could not discover the cause of this strange illness; and in a few days he died. Tebaldo again demanded the hand of the maiden from her parents, and received a second refusal. They, too, perished miserably in a few days. The alarm which these deaths—which appeared almost miraculous—occasioned excited the utmost vigilance of the magistrates: and when, on close examination of the bodies, the small instrument was found in the gangrened flesh, terror was universal; every one feared for his own life. The maiden thus cruelly orphaned had passed the first months of her mourning in a convent, when Tebaldo, hoping to bend her to his will, entreated to speak with her at the grate. The face of the foreigner had been ever displeasing to her; but since the death of all those most dear to her it had become quite odious, and her reply was most decidedly in the negative. Tebaldo, beyond himself with rage, attempted to wound her through the grate, and succeeded. The obscurity of the place prevented his movement being observed. On her return to her room, the maiden felt a pain in her breast, and, uncovering it, she found it spotted with a single drop of blood. The pain increased; the surgeons who hastened to her assistance—taught by the past—wasted no time in conjecture, but, cutting deep into the wounded part, extracted the needle before any mortal mischief had commenced, and saved the life of the young lady. The State inquisition used every means to discover the hand which dealt these insidious and irresistible blows. The visit of Tebaldo to the convent caused suspicion to fall heavily upon him. His house was carefully searched, the infamous invention discovered, and he perished on the gibbet.

Vordac narrates in his memoirs that during a visit to Italy he was in the town of Plaisance, and went to pass a night at an hostelry, in which the landlord's mother died the preceding evening. The landlord having sent one of his servants to fetch some linen from the room of the deceased, the valet shrieked on his return that he had seen his mistress, and that she had come back and was now lying on her bed. A less chicken hearted servant was sent, but he returned with the same tale. The master of the lodging-house then went himself, accompanied by a valet, to ascertain the truthfulness of their statements. Whenever he came downstairs he cried to his lodgers, "Yes, gentlemen, it is my poor mother, Stephana Hanna; but I have not had the courage to go and speak to her." Vordac then took a torch, and motioning to a churchman that was present, said—"Let us go, monsieur." "I wish very much," replied the clergyman, "provided you go first. Then the whole household wanted to join the party. When they entered the chamber and pulled aside the curtains, Vordac saw the form of an old woman, black and wrinkled, with the hair done up very neatly, and that put on the most ludicrous faces. When the landlord drew near to see if it was in very deed his mother, he said, "Yes, it is my poor mother." The valets all declared the same thing. Said Vordac then to the ecclesiastic, "You are a priest; go and speak to her." The priest advanced to question the dead, and at the same time threw some holy water on its face. The ghost feeling itself somewhat moistened, leaped on the clergyman's shoulders and bit him, at sight of which everybody fled. During the scuffle with the priest Vordac saw the head-dress tumble down, when, lo! the ghost became suddenly transformed into a veritable monkey.—[From Foreign Literature.

Living in Persia.

Except during the three winter months the climate of Persia is warm and dry. For nine months no rain falls, and scarce a cloud is to be seen. One who has not experienced such a steady climate might think it would prove monotonous. But those who have enjoyed it are very well satisfied with it, and never miss the variable and stormy climate of Europe, and especially that of America.

It is delightful never to be obliged to make calculations as to the weather, or to be disappointed by seeing a storm come when one has promised himself a picnic. It is true that the temperature of Persia is very warm in summer, but the natives do not seem to mind it, while the Europeans seek refuge in the villages at the foot of the mountains. Nine miles from Teheran is a group of charming villages, over five thousand feet above the sea, and one thousand three hundred feet above Teheran. Directly behind these villages soars the range called the Shimran, or Light of Persia, to the great height of thirteen thousand feet.

Nearly all summer its crest is crowned with snow, which melting, flows down to the garden below. In winter, this range is white to the plains. As one walks the streets of Teheran, he can see this magnificent range rising above the roofs of the city. A little east is Demavend, the great mountain of Persia. It is a regular cone, twenty thousand feet high, looking like a mighty pyramid. When illuminated by the setting sun, the snows of Demavend take a lovely rose tint. After one has lived at Teheran a few months he becomes very much attached to this grand old peak, and learns to look for it whenever he leaves the house.

The climate of Persia naturally makes life there an out-of-door existence. In the cool weather the people may put on furs or woollen outer coverings, but work is still performed in the open air as in summer. The shops are shallow and entirely open, the customer generally standing in the street to make his purchases. The carpenter who his planing a board allows it to project into the street if too large for the shop.

The tea-houses are all open to the public, and even the schools are exposed like the shops, often with shops on each side. The boys sit on their heels in rows and repeat the lesson after the master, apparently undisturbed by the hubbub going on around them. The barbers' shops are likewise entirely open. One of the most common sights in the streets of Teheran is a man seated on the pavement against a wall while a barber shaves the crown of his head.

The Red Sea.

The origin of the name of the Red Sea must perplex every new-comer, who, passing from the exquisitely clear green waters of the Suez Canal (the aquamarine of shallow sea-water above a bed of white sand) finds himself floating on the beautiful deep blue of the gulf. While pondering over this question I heard with exceeding interest the solution offered by two naval officers, who separately told me that in some of the broiling summer days when not a breath stirred the sultry air or rippled the oily surface of the water, they had noticed a reddish scum gathered in places, and had little doubt that to some such simple cause the name was due. Various other sailors less observant than these laughed at the notion and vowed that in all their longer experience such a thing had never been seen. It was the old story—"eyes" and "no eyes." It was therefore with infinite pleasure that I stumbled on a passage in the writings of Moquin Tandon, in which he states that the Red Sea was so called from the prevalence of a minute bright red plant, so small that in one square inch 25,000,000 plants find room to live. He quotes a passage from Ehrenberg, who tells us how he saw from Tor, near Mount Sinai, the whole bay of which that village is the port, red as blood, the open sea keeping its ordinary colour. The wavelets carried to the shore during the heat of the day a purple mucilaginous matter, and left it upon the sand, so that in about half an hour the whole bay was surrounded by a red fringe, which, on examination, proved to consist of myraids of tiny bundles of fibres, about onetwelfth of an inch long—namely, the red trichodesmium; the water in which they floated was quite pure.

The Cost of Anglo-Russian War.

At a time when loose statements as to the magnitude of the issues at stake in an Anglo Russian contest are so general, it may be useful to recall some of the statistics of the last war in which Russia took part. From the crossing of the Danube in June, 1877, until February, 1878, the Russian loss in killed and wounded was 89,304. The cost of that little war in money was equally frightful. The official report of the total expenses was 902,000,000, rubles, averaging 32,200,000 monthly. The silver ruble is equal to about 80 cents, but the rubles current in Russia then depreciated nearly one-third. During the war this paper currency swelled from 711,600,000 to 1,154,000,000 rubles, and loan followed loan. Still the lesson of peace does not seem to have been learned. Under another such burden killing taxes and virtual bankruptcy must follow peace whatever the issue of the struggle, and it is not impossible that even if absolutism be victorious in the field it may meet its death blow at home. At least that is the view of king killer Hartmann, who, speaking in the name of the nihilists, is reported to have said that during the war the terrorists would be quiet, confident in the belief that the sequel of the war, whoever conquers, will be the ending of the line of czars.

RIEL IN MONTANA.

His Career as a Boss, a Rum-Seller, and a Fine-Worker.

Mr. Frank Eastman, who has been clerk of the United States senate committee on claims for the past two years, was district attorney at Helena, M. T., in 1882. In a conversation on the Canadian insurrection, Mr. Eastman said: I know Louis Riel well. He was the leader of the Red river insurrection in 1872, and was guilty of the most atrocious and inhuman crimes ever perpetrated by man. Add to the tortures of the inquisition every agony that devilish ingenuity could suggest or invent, and you may get a faint idea of the manner in which Riel treated the unfortunate captives who fell into his hands. In November, 1882, Riel was engaged in selling whisky eight or ten miles inside of the lower border of the Blackfeet reservation. He procured the liquor in Fort Benton, and, failing to pay his bills, and being unable to secure any more credit, he transferred his valuable custom to Helena. Here his credit also ran out, and when C. A. Broad was the partner and agent of Wilder, of St. Paul, told him he could be credited no more, Riel said: 'All right, Meester Broadwater, but I would like to meet you out on ze perarie,' thus conveying a delicate suggestion of the hereafter. Riel was shortly after indicted for selling rum to the Indians, and when brought to trial refused to answer any questions frankly, stating that he refused because he did not care to criminate himself. During the trial a juror asked Riel if he was not the man who incited the Red river insurrection in 1872. 'Sair,' replied Riel with great dignity, 'I am ze man who attempted to introduce republican institutions in zat country.' As no other witnesses could be procured, Riel was acquitted, although there was no doubt in the world as to his guilt. He was indicted at Benton for election frauds at Rocky Point in the spring of 1883, and, being unable to procure bail, was imprisoned in jail for two or three months. Then he succeeded in securing bondsmen in the persons of William H. Hunt, the son of the ex-secretary of the navy, and then collector of the port of Fort Benton, and Thomas Cummings, a former collector. After being released he went up into Manitoba, and judging from recent events it is evident that he was engaged in laying his plans for the present insurrection. He returned to Fort Benton and was tried, but as the people around Rocky Point led nomadic lives it was impossible to obtain any witnesses save Riel's half-breed wife and brother in-law. Of course he was not convicted.

"Riel is a magnificently handsome man. He has a superb figure, standing over six feet in height. His beard is long and silky and coal black, and he has melting Italian eyes, as soft as a woman's. If his beard was lighter he would be the image of Guido's Christ. He is a rank coward, and is absolutely devoid of the courage such a man should have. He was in very bad odor with the half-breeds around Fort Benton and Helena, and one day in the fall of 1882 he went to Gov. Bodkin and begged that official to make him a deputy marshal. He said his life was in danger, and he would live in daily dread if it was not protected by official sanction. His request was very properly refused.

Hints to Hunters.

The hunting season is now upon us, and a few hints and suggestions to the gentlemen who go out in the afternoons and make life insecure in the suburbs, may not be out of place. In fact, by paying attention to our suggestions, they may save themselves a great deal of trouble and expense. As a general thing, the domestic animals that are to be found in the vicinity of large cities belong to farmers. When the amateur Nimrod makes the mistake of shooting some of these harmless and useful animals, such as cows ducks, mules, geese, dogs, etc., the owners become excited and chase the Nimrods with fence rails. Some of the farmers, while laboring under a fit of exasperation, may do personal injury to some of the aforesaid hunters, unless the latter promptly pay for the loss of the domestic animals. In order to avoid the complications that may result, we propose to give a few simple directions that may be of great use to the aforesaid amateur Nimrods.

A deer is a quadruped, and may be distinguished from the mule by the fact that he is not seen as much as the mule is; he is not so frequent, as it were. The deer has horns upon his head, which adornment we seek in vain on the mule. Because both the mule and the buck are in the habit of showing the same end to the hunter, it must not be supposed that they are identical. The deer does not wear shoes like the mule, nor has it the fine baritone voice of the latter.

The cow may be distinguished from the buck by the fact that the latter is not branded and has a much stronger tail. Another sign by which the cow may be distinguished from the deer is that the cow gives milk and butter.

The rabbit has much longer ears than the cat. Whenever a rabbit is seen in a tree, or up on a barn, or walking on a fence, it is sure to be a cat.

The buzzard may be distinguished from the turkey by the way of flying; the buzzard flying much higher than the turkey. There is a fine of twenty-five dollars for mistaking a buzzard for a turkey. If you are fined twenty-five dollars, you have shot a buzzard. If you shoot at ducks near a house, and they fly away, they are not tame ducks, and the farmer cannot make you pay for them.

Paste this on your flask when you go out hunting.

The Ameer's Realm.

It is, we suppose, pretty generally admitted by this time that the conference at Rawul Pindi between the Ameer and the Viceroy of India was not the great success it was commonly believed to be when it took place. There is, as a result of the Ameer's obvious unwillingness to admit a British army into his territory, a disposition to blame him for not carrying out the terms of the contract upon which he receives an annual subsidy. This is, we think, entirely unreasonable. The subsidy is a mere retaining fee, and it is necessary to pay it because the Ameer must get money from somewhere. Unless he receives it from Great Britain he will take it from Russia—this much is quite certain. It is a mistake to regard him as a Sovereign of one complete, homogeneous State supported by the taxation of the country. It is always more or less of a mystery how Oriental potentates live unless they have power enough to plunder their subjects right and left; and this mystery is all the greater in the case of Abdur Rahman, because he is merely the head of a single tribe which has succeeded in asserting its supremacy over the other tribes of Afghanistan. Herat and Kandahar are so purely tribal in their organisation that they have really nothing to do with Cabul and its ruler. The Ameer governs these two places in the sense that they do not fight against him, but of real authority he has none. There is no such thing indeed as an Afghan race, for the people consist partly of Aryans and partly of Mongolo-Tartars. The Aryans again are divided into the Galcha branch, inhabiting the northern and southern slopes of the Hindoo Koosh; and the Iranic branch, which is to be found in Cabul, Herat, and Beloochistan. The Mongolo-Tartars inhabit the Northern Highlands between Bimian and Herat and Afghan Turkestan. Altogether there are no less than twenty three tribes which are, by a convenient fiction supposed to owe allegiance to the Ameer, but only four of them have the slightest political power. The Usbegs in Afghan Turkestan are one of these four; but the fact that they are practically identical with their kinsmen of the adjoining Khanates of Bokhara and Khiva shows in some degree how immensely difficult it will be to delimit a frontier where nature has placed none, and where peculiarities of race and type supply little or no assistance. The Ameer is, for purposes of internal defence, the nominal chief of the Duranis, the Ghilzis, the Waziris, the Afridis, the Mongols, the Momands, and Jusufzais; but as each of these tribes forms a complete little State in itself, and as he has not yet tried the experiment of getting them to combine for a common object, such as the repression of a Russian attack, Abdur Rahman is naturally enough unwilling to put the fragile bond of cohesion he has established to too severe a strain.

If, after the frontier has been delimited Russia again tears up a sacred covenant, as she probably will do, and if after tearing it up she succeeds in gaining possession of Herat, British troops must be enabled to seize and to hold Kandahar. It is a very open question whether it would not be worth while, from a commercial as well as from a military point of view, to complete the railroad to this city. The inhabitants take a considerable quantity of British goods and textile fabrics, and they could send us in return far greater quantities than they now do of wool, tobacco, silk, and drugs. An army advancing from Herat towards India would have to crack this very hard nut of Kandahar; and as the inhabitants are far from being averse to the British, it may be found the simplest thing to do to treat this city and not Herat as the first point which will be held against Russia with all the strength of the British Empire. There are hosts of questions connected with the future of Afghanistan which will have to be considered and disposed of the moment the northern frontier is delimited; and for that reason it is a good thing to know that before many weeks are over both Sir P. Lumsden and Mr. Condie Stephen will be in London to assist the Government with their advice.

MIRTH FOR MINISTERS.

A Pennsylvania minister thinks girls ought to be watched. If he would run out and stand in the vestibule of his own church after-service he would change his mind.

"Papa, do you think our preacher writes his own sermons?" "I have no reason to doubt it, my son; why should you?" "Why, 'pears to me that if he wrote 'em he'd know enough about 'em to take his eyes off the paper once in a while when he reads."

There is a clergyman in Manchester, N. H., who never allows himself or any of his family to attend a church entertainment without paying for admission. There should be a big demand for this pastor from churches all over the country, and the larger his family the more pressing should be the demand.

"Was there there such an unfortunate man as I?" sighed Parson Textual; "here I have been at work all the week on a sermon upon the horrors of war and the blessings of peace; and now, according to the latest advices there is to be no war after all, and I've had all my labor for nothing! Was ever anything more discouraging."

Fogg—How is your minister now? I understand that he has been quite ill. Brown—Ill? I should say so. There was one time he was not expected to live from day to day. He hasn't preached for six months. Fogg—Ah! Then he is improving? I'm glad to hear it; glad to hear it.

MARKDALE JUNE 4, 1885.

ROYAL KINDNESS.

Our readers may have hitherto noticed that our recent Royal Governess, Princess Louise, had contributed a fund for the procuring of comforts for our wounded and suffering boys at the front. This act of thoughtful care on the part of the Princess will render her memory—already dear—doubly dear to every Canadian member of the Empire.

THE BRASS BAND.

We are gratified to be in a position to announce that Markdale is now possessed of a brass band. The instruments arrived last Friday and were paid for spot cash. There is many things yet to be provide[illegible]n the way of music, helmets, torch-lights, uniform, &c., &c., so that those who have not yet paid in their subscription will greatly oblige the band by doing so at their earliest convenience.

We have already had the pleasure of music from this new institution, and, though they have had but three nights practice, they have made wonderful progress, and will master a number of pieces by the 1st July.

The following are the officers and members of the band:—

E. Jones, Captain, E Cornet; W. J. Benson, Solo B Cornet; G. Richards 2nd B Cornet; W. Mason, E Claronet; E. Large, Solo E Alto; J. R. Mathews Treasurer, 2nd E Alto; W. T. Jackman, B Baritone; F. Porter, Secretary B Trombone; D. McFarlane, 2nd B Tenor; J. Beaton, B Bass; W. Armstrong, E Bass; Alex. McDuffie, Bass Drum; T. Clarridge, Snare Drum; T. Newlove, Symbols.

Trustees—The village police trustees, Messrs. Wm. Brown, Thomas Mathews and George Grant.

Auditors—W. J. McFarland and J. E. Marsh.

OUR BRAVE MEN.

Canada has certainly good reason to be proud of the bravery of our volunteers. The young men of the country nobly and heartily responded to the call of duty when their services were required, and in no instance do they appear to have flinched for a moment to march into the thickest of the danger and battle. Their coolness and discipline, too, has been of the most creditable character, and cheerfulness with which they have endured the great fatigue and privations so necessary in such a campaign, in such a climate and in such a country, deserves our highest admiration. All honor to our noble volunteers. Unfortunately too many of them will never return to us again. What a pity that such noble lives must be sacrificed because of the acts of such mean men, and in defending our country against such an uprising?

RIEL'S TRIAL.

THE CROWN PROSECUTORS TO START AT THE END OF JUNE.

B. B. Osler, Q. C., who has been appointed by the minister of justice to go to the North-West as a crown prosecutor of Riel in company with Christopher Robinson, Q. C., is a Liberal in politics, having contested Welland in 1882 in the Reform interest, and was a very strong candidate. Before a jury he has no superiors, and will doubtless make the best of the case. They leave about the 25th of June, and the court will likely open soon after their arrival. It is almost certain that Stipendiary Magistrate Richardson will preside at the trial and that a jury of six will be empanelled. In the North-West Territories there is no provision for equality in the nationality of the jurors.

SCENES IN THE NORTH-WEST.

The Rev. E. R. Young, in an admirrable article in the Methodist Magazine on the North-West troubles, writes as follows: The great cause of the present troubles is the scarcity of meat since the destruction of the great buffalo herds. Both Indians and half-breeds well know that the extinction of these animals is due to the coming of the white man, with his superior firearms, and his wanton slaughter for the mere excitement of the chase, and also his greed for the profits on the sale of the robes.

The buffalo was ever regarded by the Indians as the special gift of the Kiche Manito the Great Spirit. His nutritious flesh furnished the best of food; his hide gives them tents, bedding, clothing and moccasins; the sinews were easily made into the strongest thread. With plenty of buffalo they hardly need anything else. Travellers who visited those broad prairies years ago have given us glowing descriptions of the vast herds that then roamed over those fertile regions, literally the cattle upon a thousand hills. Strict laws, very similar to our present game laws, were rigidly enforced by the Indians to prevent the unnecessary slaughter of these useful animals. Spears and bows and arrows were the only weapons with which they then hunted them. But all this is changed. The pale face has come, and in his mad frenzy to kill he has ignored all the wise laws for their preservation, and so the wholesale slaughter has gone on until now the buffalo is, or very soon will be, classed among the extinct animals. A few years ago as many as one hundred and sixty thousand were slaughtered for the robes alone. When killed in the fall of the year for meat, their robes are about worthless, but during the winter when they are in prime condition as the robes of commerce, the flesh is poor and hard. The result is there was a double slaughter, to obtain meat and to obtain robes.

Is it any wonder that under such wholesale slaughter, those plains that once teemed with plenty should now be devoid of life; and that half-breeds or Indians should, from their present half-starved condition, wish they could see those days return again? I remember once when conversing with the late honoured Rev. Geo. McDougall on the expensiveness of getting in supplies to my northern mission, hearing him say that the matter of obtaining provisions for his own, and son's families, the previous fall was a very simple affair. He said that he and one of his sons, with their pockets full of bullets, with their powder horns on their necks, and with their guns in their hands, had mounted their well trained buffalo runners, and during the afternoon's sport, had killed fourteen fat buffalo cows, which furnished them with abundance of fresh meat all through the winter.

The great yearly event in the life of the half-breeds was the great fall hunt of the buffalo. When the little crops were secured, like a great military procession they wended their way westward towards the vast feeding grounds of these animals. Wives and children followed after in quaint, capacious, ungreased, and consequently noisy, vehicles, known as the Red River carts. Hundreds of buffalo used to be killed, and thousands of pounds of dried meat, and pemmican, and tallow, and hides would be secured. This with the produce of their little farms, although they made miserable farmers, give them abundance of food.

There is no use in disguising the fact that these people are in a half-starved condition. The transition has been too sudden, the old life was too deeply ingrained to be forgotten in a year or even a decade. Placed on their reserves or settlements they have never felt contented, and it will take long years and much patience and firmness in dealing with them.

HOW TO TREAT THE INDIANS.

In the course of a sermon in Selkirk Hall, Winnipeg, on Sunday evening last, Rev. C. B. Pitblado said:—The Indian can no longer find employment on his old hunting grounds. He can no longer get venison with which he satisfies the pangs of his hunger. He can no longer get fur with which to furnish clothing for his body and covering for his tent. And now on the vast prairies, where his father dwelt at ease and lived on plenty, the aborigine of the western land roams an idle, naked, starving outcast. What wonder if, in such circumstances, the Indians should be tempted to take by plundering what he cannot get by hunting? What wonder if he should seek in the new fields of the pioneer settlers the food which he cannot find on the old hunting grounds of the plains! What wonder if, in his desperation, he should.

RESENT THE INTRUSION OF THE WHITE MAN

into his territory by shedding his blood and sacking his home! But to the honor of the redman of the North-West be it said, they have been known to starve rather than steal. They have pillaged whole Indian villages when they would not lay a hand on a white man's settlement. In this respect the untutored heathen has often withstood temptations to which the cultured citizen has yielded. He has patiently borne what you or I would have resented. Perhaps his patience is now exhausted. Goaded on by designing rebels, the Indians have in a few cases been driven on to commit deeds of violence and bloodshed. Their destitution has no doubt been a weighty factor in influencing them to perpetrate crime. One thing is certain. The flames of war between them and the new settler on the frontier have been kindled. If they are not extinguished

THE RESULT WILL BE RUINOUS

to the colonization of the North-West, exhausting to the resources of the Dominion, and detrimental to the interests of Christian truth and morals in our country. Hence our policy with the Indian must still be peace, at almost any financial price. It will still pay us better in every way to feed them than to fight them, and it will be found more ennobling to the nation to hire good farmers to teach them how to cultivate the soil, and for the Churches to send missionaries to bring them under the power of Christian truth, than to keep up an army to exterminate them from the country. The Indian wars in the United States cost the Government $36,000,000, or

MORE THAN FOUR MILLION A YEAR.

The cost of the present disturbance would, under proper regulations, defray the expenses of feeding the Indians and supplying them with teachers and missionaries for many years. Well, if we will not pay liberally to diffuse education, we must pay extravigantly to suppress crime. If we will not pay a little to farmers to instruct them, we must pay a great deal to riflemen to shoot them. If we will not pay a few thousand dollars for provisions to prevent famine, we must pay millions to sustain an army to prevent massacre. When we will not give a few hundred dollars to erect churches, we will be obliged to give some thousands to maintain policemen. When we will not give freely to support missionaries, we will be obliged to pay reluctantly in taxes to sustain soldiers. If we will not pay to uphold morality we will be saddled with the expenses of vice.

Loss of Three Wounded.

Middleton Departs with his Force from Battleford.

GEN. STRANGE'S FIGHT.

GEN. STRANGE MEETS BIG BEAR—A TWO DAYS' FIGHT—ANXIETY CONCERNING A SCOW AND THIRTEEN MEN.

BATTLEFORD, N. W. T., May 30.—The steamer North-West en route to Pitt came across James Grant and Charles Rossiter in a canoe 60 miles up the river. They left Fort Pitt on Thursday night with dispatches for Gen. Middleton, a fight between Strange's forces and Big Bear's band having taken place that day. Rossiter informed your correspondent that Big Bear's location had been discovered on Wednesday and an advance was made the following morning. As the whole of Gen. Strange's troops had not yet arrived at Pitt he could only muster about 300 men; the force consisting of two companies of the Winnipeg Lake Infantry, two companies of the 65th Battalion, the Alberta Mounted Infantry, and Captain Steele's police scouts. A march of ten miles down the river and three miles inland brought the troops to the Indian camp.

THE REDSKINS WERE ENTRENCHED.

just over the brow of a hill and in order to reach them Gen. Strange was obliged to cross a marshy valley. While advancing the Indians commenced firing and the troops were extended in skirmishing order. For three hours and a half a steady fire was kept up from both sides. The troops had a good cover in the shrubbery from the fire of the enemy. The field gun did good service in driving the Indians from their quarters, but the number killed could not be ascertained. Strange's loss was very slight, only three of the 65th being wounded--Marcotte, of No. 3 Company, was fatally wounded, and two in No. 5 Company. The troops.

RETIRED IN GOOD ORDER.

to Pitt. The 65th Companies came down the river in a scow and joined the main body. On the inland march thirteen men were left behind to guard the provisions on board. After the fight the scow could not be found, and neither the men or the scow have turned up since. Rossiter also says Steele's men had a skirmish with the Indians on Wednesday, when an Indian scout was killed and scalped. Gen. Strange wants reinforcements and ammunition. After landing Inspector Perry and the Police, we turned back arriving here late to-night

BATTLEFORD.

MIDDLETON'S FORCE FOR BIG BEAR—ONLY THIRTY SOLDIERS AT EDMONTON.

BATTLEFORD, June 1.—Although it was arranged that the force of Big Bear should start last night they only got away this morning when the steamers Alberta, Marquis and North-West left for Fort Pitt with the Midland, 250; part of A and B Batteries and two Gatlings. Sixty men of Boulton's scouts, 60 of Dennis surveyors corps, 50 of Brittlebank's, late French's scouts, and 50 Mounted Police went by the south trail. The force is expected to land this side of Indian position and with Strange's column on the other side, [illegible] them.

THE EDMONTON FORCE.

There are only thirty troops [illegible] Edmonton with Col. Ouimet, of the 65th in command.

THE TEAMS.

The exact number of teams [illegible] left Calgary yesterday for Edmonton was 228. They were escorted by men of the ninth Batallion, [illegible] Capt. Dupieus. The transport [illegible] calculates he had saved the [illegible] on this outfit, previous rates [illegible] about 17 cents to Edmonton [illegible] he sent this outfit at eight cents [illegible] pound. He believes the supplies [illegible] have to be forwarded from this [illegible] all summer.

CALGARY.

DEPARTURE OF AN OUTFIT—A BAD TRIP.

CALGARY June 1.—A large [illegible] consisting of over two hundred [illegible] and carts, started for Edmonton yesterday escorted by twenty-five of the 9th Quebec Battalion. This is the first sent out under the new transport officer, Major McGibbon, [illegible] trail to Edmonton is said to be in a fearful state. This outfit will have a tedious time in getting through. The last one was seven days in getting to Battle River, 120 miles from [illegible] and would take about seven more to get through.

A Kick Against Monopoly.

The case of Vickers v. Canadian Pacific railway was commenced in June at Osgoode hall before Chancellor Boyd, pursuant to special appointment. The action is one brought by the Vickers Express company to compel the Canadian Pacific railway to carry their express parcels over the Toronto, Grey & Bruce division on their road and the Teeswater branch for a fair compensation. The gravamen of the action is that the C. P. R. [illegible] refused to carry the plaintiffs' parcels on the ground that they had specially contracted with the Dominion express company to give them the exclusive right over that road. The plaintiffs contended that under the railway act such a monopoly cannot be created but that all express companies must be treated alike; they also claim $[illegible],000 damages for loss through the railway's refusal. Five Queen's counsel are engaged in the case, which will probably take all day.

Notices of Births, Marriages, and Deaths twenty five cents.

ANGUS PLEWES.

Fleshertom.

From our own correspondent.

The Teachers Association of South Grey held their annual meeting of that association in the Town Hall in this village on Thursday and Friday, the 28th and 29th ult. The weather was very propitious, in consequence of which there was the largest assembly of teachers of any former meeting of the association here. During the two days session there was many papers read and some very interesting essays given; one essay given which stood out beyond all the others in the praise and credit given by those who were present, was that by our esteemed and popular lady teacher for the junior department of the Flesherton public school, Miss Sarah Hopkins, "The teacher and his work." It was a masterly effort and well deserving of the credit given. Mr. Tilley, Director of Teachers Institutes, was present during all the session and contributed some valuable information on several subjects. The entertainment held in the Town Hall on the evening of Thursday, the 28th, under the auspices of the association was well attended, the Hall being crowded to the doors. Mr. M. Richardson, chairman, gave a very interesting opening address. Songs were given by the Misses Richardson, Miss Damude and Miss Christoe, which were duly appreciated by the audience. Mr. Ferguson gave a reading and Dr. Christoe a short address, the greater part of the evening being allotted to Mr. Tilley for his address, "Relation of education to the State." Mr. Tilley is an easy and fluent speaker and for over one hour deeply interested his audience, after which the company sang "God save the Queen" and the assembly dismissed.

Rev. Mr. McDowell has been absent for some days attending the Stationing Committee of the Guelph Conference. In his absence his pulpit was occupied in the morning by Mr. Suggott very acceptably, and in the evening by Mr. Thos. Osburn.

Maxwell.

Yez' will have to excuse me for not writing last week, as my wife Bridget was not well, and I had to wait on her. The doctor says it was "inflammuntory consumstiun;" but nevertheless she is well now.

We had no fun here on the 25th. some were away to the beaver fishing and done well. C. A. Chant made over 50 nice little fellows kick the bucket.

Over-feeding is often the cause of death. Mr. W. F. Kerton lost a fine colt last week. The poor thing had been trying to die for about three months and could not succeed till the owner commenced to plough with it. Accidents will happen.

Messrs. Herron Bro's have opened out in the cooper line in Guy's wagon shop. Butter tubs will catch grief now.

Our esteemed friend, John Miller, is bound for "Alpena" soon. Wonder if he will take the mules and the little jackass? The latter has answered the purpose of a "town clock" since it came, for it would bray every hour, and we would not like it to go away now. Guess we will buy it.

Mr. Thos. Brownridge has now a very fine house. It has recently been veneered with brick, by Fred Ryder, which presents a beautiful appearance.

The Maxwell boys have joined together and organized a base ball club, which is expected to be a good one. It has now about 30 members. Joseph Gamey and Sandford Tuck were appointed captains of the club, and can act their part well. Johnson Little, President, and Andrew Sharpe, Sec.-Treas.; and no doubt some of the neighboring clubs may get a stump before long. We wish them success.

Mrs. Foley had some of her sheep killed by a bear last Friday night.

Mr. J. Brodie's new frame barn was raised last Saturday. Messrs. W. J. Cooey and R. Shaw were the captains. Cooey and his men won the victory. All went along well without any accidents.

The Wesley church pulpit, in the absence of the Rev. Mr. McDowell, was filled by Mr. W. Buchanan, Jr., on Sabbath last.

The milk waggons, driven by Mr. Stevenson and E. Brodie, are now making their daily trips to Markdale and Flesherton cheese factories.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT AT A RAISING.

On Saturday last at a barn raising for Alex. Fawcett, lot 6, con. 5, Euphrasia, an accident of a serious nature occured, in which five men were wounded. After the timber had been put together in bents and the first one raised and stayed in the usual way, the lower girt was put in place when three or four men got upon it in order to put the upper girt in its place, but owing to the bent not being sufficiently braced, the weight on the lower one caused the stay to give way when down came the standing bent upon 30 men injuring five, as follows; John Ferris was struck on the head and sholder knocking him senseless; W. J. Leary was struck across the back and held fast; Gustie Burrett jumped, lighting on a stone breaking his leg; Daniel Wallace jumped and fell, and another jumped upon him, putting Wallace's ankle out of joint; Wm. J. McGee also strained his arm while jumping. Ferris and Leary were thought to be fatal cases but after the lapse of some two hours they both showed signs of animation. Drs. Christoe, Carter, and McBride were immediately despatched for, and did all in their power for the injured ones, and good hopes are now entertained for the recovery of the worst cases. After the wounded were cared for the raising of the building was proceeded with. This should be a warning against the reckless racing, so common in connection with the erection of frame buildings, and the uncalled for noise and disorder so prevalent when contesting for a victory in such matters.

Honorable Distinction.

We are pleased to notice in the result of the recent examinations for Art Schools throughout Ontario, held in Toronto on the 1st and 2nd of May, that Miss Laura Rorke and Miss Minnie Rorke of Markdale, who have been attending the Ontario Ladies College, Whitby, are among the successful ones in obtaining teachers certificates. Miss Laura Rorke, free-hand drawing, practical geometry, model drawing and memory drawing. Miss Minnie Rorke, practical geometry and model drawing. During the past session over 3000 students have been studying industrial art throughout the Province: 1100 students were candidates for examinations, representing about fifty institutions. The fact that these young ladies were successful in obtaining certificates where there were so many candidates, speak very highly for them as students, and also that they must have natural gifts and tastes for the art. We wish them continued success in their future studies.

Years of experience and successful trial have proved McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate the most complete and satisfactory compound for healing Old Sores, Festerings, Ulcers, Cuts, Wounds, Burns, Frost Bites or Felons, and for keeping out the cold and to cleanse or prevent proud flesh, sloughing or decay. Insist on having McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate, sold at 25c. by Hill Bro's.

Serious Runaway Accident.

Last Saturday afternoon a young man named Tory from Holland, came into the village and took on board considerable of a cargo of anti-Scott act medicine. In the evening he started for home accompanied by his sister and cousin, a Miss McColman, from near Chesley. On leaving Mr. Foster's store he commenced whipping his horses and standing up in the rig he continued to whip them until they broke into a fast run, and kept it up until within a few yards of the side-road at the north end of the village, up which he was going. On turning the corner the rig upset throwing the occupants out, and injuring Miss McColman's spine and bruising her thigh and leg very badly. The young woman were brought back to Mr. R. Green's house, where Miss McColman has been lying ever since in a very precarious condition, but Dr. Oldham who is attending her, has hopes now of her speedy recovery. Miss Tory escaped without injury beyond a hard shaking up, and young Tory, who was the direct cause of the accident, also escaped uninjured. The horses were caught down in the swamp. Perhaps young Tory is sufficiently punished by remorse he must feel at having caused his cousin to nearly lose her life, but most people think he should get six months at hard labor.—Chatsworth News.

I had for years been a miserable sufferer from Dyspepsia, and tried all known remedies and the best medical skill of my acquaintance, but still grew worse, until unable to eat any thing without great suffering, or do any kind of work. I began to think there was no hope for me, and that I must surely die; when, like a drowning man catching at a straw, I determined to give McGregor's Speedy Cure a trial, I at once began to Improve so rapidly that in two months I was as well as I had ever been in my life.—WM. The Afghan Question.

ST PETERSBURG, May 29.—The following is the exact state of the Afghan frontier negotiations. The Ameer surrenders Pendjeh for Zulficar. The question is unsettled whether Zulficar Press shall form part of the boundary or remain wholly in Afghanistan. Russia insists that Meruchuak belongs to Pendjeh. England objects and makes the retention of Meruchuak a sine qua non. This difference is now the main difficulty.

FOR THE FARMER.

Crop Suggestions.

Yellow corn is the surest for cold land.

Better leave "fancy farming" to amateurs.

Test your corn seed before planting, especially if it has been kept in any place except as hung up in braids on the rafters of a warm store room.

A correspondent is confident, from his own experience, that better results are obtained by top dressing with manure than from plowing it under.

On every farm, more or less apple seeds will be scattered in seasons when apples are plenty, and come up in out-of-the way places. These trees should be saved and top-grafted when of suitable age.

The early varieties of potatoes should be planted in good season, because the eyes are stronger than they will be later, and thriftier plants and better crops may ordinarily be anticipated by giving the seed an early start.

Present indications point to a shortage in grain crops in Europe. This and two or three wars on the other side, would cause handsome returns to agriculture on this side of the Atlantic. Truly, it is an ill wind that blows nobody good.

Wheat come out better in the spring when it has been in the drill furrows through the severest weather. The ridges slightly protect the plant, and as the former are broken down by freezing, the fine soil is excellent manure for the wheat roots covering them when partly lifted out by frost.

The small streams which often flow through farms are almost invaluable sources of fertility, if the mud which accumulates in them is every year cleaned out and spread upon the land. All the leaves, together with the fine mold from cultivated fields, find a lodgment in the beds of these streams.

The first year after setting apple trees, corn is a better hoed crop to grow among the trees than potatoes or any roots. It makes a shade for the ground and for trees themselves, besides insuring thorough cultivation, which, however, should be given with special care not to injure the trees by whiffletree and horse cultivating implements.

A horticulturist says that grape trellises made entirely of slate are not desirable, as the tendrils cannot clasp the wood. While brush supports the vines nicely, it does not last long, and is inconvenient to pick from. The best trellises are made of large wires eight inches apart, stretched horizontally from post to post. The tendrils clasp the wires readily.

Harrowing winter wheat in the spring does not injure or destroy the fall-sown timothy to any great extent, although some farmers believe the contrary. A few of the timothy plants may possibly be uprooted, and this is true of the grain, but the remainder will grow so much better that the sod will be thicker the following year where the harrowing has been most thorough.

One of the best manures for the garden is made by mixing two bushels of fine bone with a wagon load of stable manure. The bone makes the manure heat more quickly, and manure softens or dissolves the particles of bone. If water with which sulphuric acid has been mixed is poured on the heap, it will prevent loss of ammonia. Most stable manures are deficient in phosphate, which the bone supplies.

No two roots are more valuable for stock feeding than carrots and parsnips. It is important that they be planted just as soon as the ground is in condition. They germanate slowly, and it is an important aid, especially with carrots, to put the seed in water and keep it in a warm place until ready to sprout. Then cover lightly with fine soil, and the young plants will come up in advance of the weeds. This is a great help, as every one who has grown carrots can appreciate.

Potatoes call for hard labor, but in proportion to what they take from the soil, there is more money in the crop than in any other, provided the land is adapted to them. It would take a crop of 150 bushels of potatoes to remove as much dry matter as in a crop of wheat of thirty bushels. The important difference is, that a large part of solid substance in the potato is of very small manurial value, and is taken from the air, while a large part of wheat is nitrogen and phosphate of lime, both valuable and costly plant food.

Imperfect compact of the soil around the seed, in which is included undue hardening of the surface by rains, is the chief cause of failure in seed germination.

In planting seed corn we have often found a difference of one or two days in the time for corn to come up in favor of that where the seed was pressed into the ground with the foot after being covered. In a very dry time some of the corn not stepped on never came up, and the differences of one or two days was there conditions were apparently favorable. A kernel of corn is large and swells to twice its bulk before the seed shoot starts to grow. The smaller grain seeds are more liable to injury than corn.

Repairing Farm Implements.

Mechanical ingenuity does not come to every farmer. There are those who are possessed of excellent intelligence and yet who have not enough of mechanical skill to make a respectable milking-stool. Such farmers are from necessity compelled to employ a mechanic for every little job that demands attention. On the other hand, there are those who are possessed of great ingenuity and are skilful in the use of tools. This is a faculty that is not wholly acquired, and yet it can and should be cultivated so far as possible. Every farmer should have a workshop in which little jobs of work can be done on rainy days. This should not only be supplied with a good selection of tools usually required, but also with a material such as are likely to be brought into use. The room need not of necessity be large, but of sufficient size for convenience. It should be systematically arranged so that all tools should have their appropriate places. These should comprise saws, chisels, augers, bitstook, bits, hammer, axe, shop hatchet, planes, wrench, files, and many others which it is unnecessary to mention. In the line of stock there should be a supply of a variety of nails and screws, bolts of various kinds and sizes, tacks, wire and leather, and various kinds of lumber and pieces of wood as would be called into use. With these at hand the farmer can many times save not only a journey to a mechanic, but a bill which, with each addition in the course of the year, would be considerable. Frequently the loss of a nut or the breaking of a bolt necessitates a journey to the blacksmith shop if no supply is at hand; but if the farmer has a supply, he has only to replace the missing or broken part and his work progresses undisturbed. If time is money, then the farmer is benefitted in avoiding unnecessary journeys for repairs. At all events, he can if he will spend the time so saved in rest or reading for the improvement of his mind, a thing of great advantage to every tiller of the soil. During the winter the farmer should examine his implements and see that all repairs are attended to.

Hints to Teachers.

Teachers should be very careful how they punish pupils for what they do or say away from the school premises, and should never undertake to punish for such behaviour unless it seems necessary for the preservation of discipline in the school.

The teacher who would be successful must win the confidence of his scholars and be in sympathy with them; he must know their nature, their surroundings, and their needs. In no way can he better do so than by visiting them at their homes. He thereby shows his interest in them and win their love.

Is it not a fact that the progressive spirit of the times demands that, in the education of boys and young men, the practical must be held above the theoretical, and the useful must supersede the merely ornamental? Hence the necessity for institutions where students may be fitted to their places as active workers immediately upon leaving school.

In order to be a successful teacher of boys it is necessary to be their friend. It is necessary not only to take an interest in seeing that their lessons are properly recited, but to be sure also that they understand what they are doing, and take an interest in it; make them feel that it is their business now, and that their future success in business depends on their doing their work well in the present. Boys like a friend—not an overseer.

Education is well. Draw out of a soul all you can. There are some inspired teachers who can draw out of the blossom sweetness and light. Not one in a thousand of teachers is inspired. These other nine hundred and ninety-nine cannot draw anything out of any soul. Let it content them to furnish food whereby the soul may grow; that is, by becoming instructed. Such uninspired teachers may, in their hap-hazard, or dull, plodding way, assist some ravenous soul in finding his path to the tree of life, although they themselves have never tasted one of its leaves.

The effects of strife between nations are more far-reaching than most people imagine. Among those who are adversely affected by the pride, pomp and circumstance of glorious war are the dealers in wild animals, who are dreading lest supplies should run short and wild beasts become unprocurable. The passage of an army drives the creatures away. "The row in the Soudan is going to play havoc in the animal trade this year," a prominent dealer lately remarked. "As long as there is a war, of course no animals can be exported from that part of Africa." Lions are reported as high, though the lion market is dull. A good pair of African lions are set down as now worth nearly £500. As for hippopotami, "if all the hippopotami in the United States were to die, we could not get any more for a long time," a Philadelphia dealer sorrowfully said; and the same authority states that giraffes are very scarce. There are only four giraffes in the whole of America. A couple of young giraffes would be worth as much as a couple of African lions. All this is bad enough for the wild beast trade. Life without an adequate supply of hippopotami and giraffes, and with a doubt about African lions seems to purveyors of such fearful wild fowl to be a sorry waste; and on the top of all this comes apprehension of war in Asia. That will "cut off another wild beast producing country," the authority quoted sadly remarked. The fewer wild animals there are the greater will be the curiosity to see them, however. That is the only consolation that can be suggested.

Mistress, catching the maid asleep on the drawing room sofa—"Why, Mary, I am surprised." The Maid—"So am I, ma'am. I firmly believed you was out."

"I want to get a new nose made," remarked a man with a green shade covering half his face. "Can it be done?" "Certainly it can be. Bill Smith put a whole head on a fellow last week, and he never studied medicine a week in his life."

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

For some time past there has been ill-feeling between Pike Root Perkins and the Hon. Justified White, caused by a dispute over the query: "Is Life Worth the Living." As the meeting was ready to open Brother Gardner called the pair to the head of the hall an said:

"One reason why some people decide dat life am not wuth de libin' am bekase dey make life a burden to deirselves an' werry onpleasant to odders. One real mean man in a community kin make five hundred people doubt if virtue am rewarded on airth. One canting hypocrite in a town kin keep a slandermill grindin' night an' day. One infidel in a county kin cause 5,000 well-meanin' people to kinder doubt if dar' am a Heaben or a hereafter.

"Bekase you two differ in opinyun you go at it an' help to make life onpleasant to each odder. It doan' strike you dat anybody else kin be right, or dat you may be entirely wrong. Brudder Perkins calls Brudder White a fule bekase he can't agree wid him. Brudder White calls Brudder Perkins a bigot bekase he won't accept his opinyuns. Each has his friends an' supporters, an' dese supporters divide off an' feel sigewise towards each odder, an' before we know it de quarrel has involved 200 people. Gem'len, de pusson who argufies dat life am wuth de libin' must prove his argyments by his ackshun. He who feels dat life ain't wuth de trouble of hangin' around on airth can't do better dan to walk down to de wharf, hitch a grindstun to his neck, an' jump into water twenty feet deep.

"You two brudders take each odder by de hand. Now shake. Now go to yer seats. Each one of you has a right to his theories an' beliefs, but neither one of you have de right to denounce de odder. De world am big 'nuff to hold all de theories of all de inhabitants. We have plenty of room far all de beliefs we kin believe in. Dar am acreage fur all de argyments we kin argy. When we realize dis we mus' feel how silly it am fur de Hon. Centrifugal Johnsing to call Judge Merriweather Tompkins a charlatan bekase Mrs. Johnsing had thirty-two pussons to her high tea, and Mrs. Tompkins couldn't count but thirty-one at her low coffee."

LAID ON THE TABLE.

Giveadam Jones sent to the secretary's desk a postal card bearing a message from Prof. Straightout Williams, of Mobile, to the effect that he was in jail in Illinois. The Professor was headed for Detroit, and had been making his twenty-two miles per day right along for several weeks, but after travelling almost across the State of Illinois he had the misfortune to leave a farmer's barn about ten minutes before the building took fire. That explained why he was in jail, and he looked to the Lime-Kiln Club to send him its legal adviser and at least $25 in cash.

"Does Brudder Jones desish to make a moshum or present a resolushun in de matter?" asked the president.

"I dunno, sah," was the dubious answer.

"Den de subjeck will be considered laid on de table till de Purfessor manage to dig his way out an' furnish furder pertic klers."

NOT GUILTY.

The following communication from Detroit not only explained itself, but was very favorably received:

Brother Gardner, Officers and Members of the Lime-Kiln Club:

GENTLEMEN—I trust you will take no offense at me sending this letter to your honorable body, which, if it did not exist, would be a great misfortune to the race it represents. Hoping that your grace will see fit to kindly allow this humble letter to come before your society for consideration, I proceed to say:

A few days ago I was very much startled by reading an account of a recent meeting held by the club in which it was stated that I was an aspirant for Brother Gardner's position. Also that a gentleman residing in Syracuse, N. Y., had sent a letter of inquiry to the club to ask whether or not my papers—the British Lion and the American Eagle—were organs of the Lime-Kiln Club. Being a very modest man, gentlemen of the club, I beg leave to say that I will not say anything further relative to my papers, only this: If the club would speak kindly to Brother Gardner and ask him for his photograph so that I might in some way produce the same in the next issue of my paper, I am certain the people of Canada and the United States would be very much pleased.

And now, gentlemen, I may state to you that I have felt very much embarrassed since I learned that I was trying to obtain Brother Gardner's position. Believe me, gentlemen, such a thing never entered my head. I have to much respect for that good old faithful man, Brother Gardner, than to undermine him from a position which he has held with so much satisfaction to the club and the community. No, gentlemen, I am the personal friend of the club, and though I say it myself, gentlemen, there is nothing mean about me. I have been prompted to send this letter to the club, because I believed the report of my aspiring for Brother Gardner's position has come to his knowledge, the thought of which almost breaks my heart. Gentlemen of the Lime-Kiln Club, to show you that I am not an enemy to the club I inclose to Brother Gardner in behalf of the club complimentary tickets to my famous lecture on the "Hiding Place of the Wind," in Library Hall, Merrill block, May 15, 1885.

Trusting, gentlemen, I have made it plain that I am not an aspirant to Brother Gardner's position, but that I remain a devoted friend of the club, believe me sincerely yours,

A year and nine months ago the disappearance of the Rev. Merton Smith excited much interest throughout England. He was touring in the Pyrenees with a friend, and left his hotel for a walk. He was not seen afterwards, and the most anxious search, stimulated by a reward of £500, failed to discover any trace of him. Mr. Smith's body has lately been discovered among the mountains.

The first South African diamond was found in 1867. It was the toy of a little Boer girl who had picked it out from among the roots of an old tree. A few months afterwards the bed of the Vaal river was known to be a profitable diamond region, and within three years it was discovered that the diamond deposits lay in circular patches of yellow, and, below, still more diamondiferous blue, earth, on the great plain or "veldt," which stretches on all sides around Kimberley.

The infant daughter of Princess Louise of Battenberg received the names of Victoria Alice Elizabeth Julia Marie. Her Majesty has greatly benefitted by her rest and change.

Mr. Charles Villiers, member for Wolverhampton, the colleague of Peel, and Bright, and Cobden in the anti-Corn-Law struggles, is now 83 years old, with snowy hair and whiskers, but hale and vigorous. He has represented Wolverhampton in Parliament for 50 years without a break. But he seldom is seen in the House now except on the most important occasions, and still more rarely does he speak. One evening recently he made a speech on the Reform bill, and it was his first after eight years of silence.

A new volcano has been developed in Russia, 12 versts from the town of Ielna, in the government of Smolensk. On the top of a hill there it was noticed 10 years ago that snow never remained for any length of time. Three years back subterranean noises were heard in the neighborhood of the hill, and smoke was seen to issue from its summit. Lately flames have shot up, and melted iron, cinders, and sand have been thrown out of a freshly formed crater. The ground is so hot that a pole thrust into it is burned in a few minutes. All around the hill there are evident signs of true volcanic energy.

The farmers of Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys, in California, are engaged in a battle with the grasshoppers which have issued from the mountains in larger numbers and with keener appetites than last year. They infest the foothill farms near Chico, and in Antelope Valley, Colusa county, they are fairly ravaging the country. They are swarming over Amador county, and in San Joaquin, Merced and Stanislaus counties the advance guard of invasion has appeared. Ditching, rolling, burning and other expedients for the extermination of the pests are employed.

One of the pleasantest things in connection with the imprisonment of dangerous characters in Claervaux by the French Government is the faithfulness of the wife of the Nihilist, Prince Krapotkine. She has visited his prison daily throughout his long imprisonment, and, though his appearance has changed, her affection has not. One day he appeared with not a tooth in the front of his mouth. They had fallen out. His gums were so accustomed from damp, want of air, and exercise that they fell out as he was eating a piece of bread. He writes scientific articles for Nature and other journals, and she has been allowed to take them out of prison after the Governor read them.

No less than £5 000,000, out of the total value of £7,500,000 exported from South Africa, is accounted for by ostrich feathers and diamonds, the latter being, of course, by far the most important item. Twenty years ago the annual yield of diamonds obtained from all sources did not amount to more than £50,000 worth. Now even the native population around Kimberley earn every year more than £1,000,000 sterling in wages, and during the last fifteen years some £40,000,000 of rough diamonds have been sent out from this district, which have been sold including the cost of cutting, setting, and distribution, for nearly £100,000,000. These figures will give, as much as figures can, some idea of the enormous development of the diamond trade.

Dress Reform.

Speaking of unseen features of feminine toilets, Boston has evolved something in that line, says Clara Belle. The dress reform committe of that city are the authors of what they call the corset-abolishing underwear. One of their enthusiasts, Abby Gould Woolson, has brought some of the articles to New York for misionary purposes. She showed them to an invited gathering, yesterday and I noticed that, very adroitly, the girl who acted as a figure-model on which to exhibit them was a slim-waisted creature who might as well go without corsets as not so good were her natural outlines. The outfit consists of three garments—viz, a balmoral skirt, composed of a deep princesse waist reaching to the knees and joined there to a broad, straight flounce then a suit of white cotton cloth, or muslin, shaped loosely to the form by vertical seams, and terminating in sleeves and drawers. With one thickness of smooth cloth the latter garment covers the entire body from chin to wrists and ankles. Finally, beneath this, a woolen undersuit, woven upon the same model, and, like the chemiloon, buttoned down the entire front. An underskirt of fitting make may be buttoned either to the balmoral or chemiloon, and to the inner side of the latter the stocking supporters are attached. Thus equipped with four garments—a union undersuit, a princesse petticoat, and a princess dress—you have not a belt in your whole attire nor a bit of gathered fullness, save what is found in the skirt flounce. A lift of the shoulders meets resistance only from the tops of the stockings, so loosely worn and connected is your entire garb. Summer discards the flannel undersuit and reduces the number of garments to three. What I am waiting for is to see some roly-poly girl put herself into that kind of an undersuit, expecting to present the same natty appearance that the slender model did. What will happen? Why, she will slump quiveringly down in a mass like a lot of too soft jelly removed from the mold, and the experience will teach her not again to show herself without corsets on. That's all.

Going to Give Him a Rest.

The Nihilist congress held in Russia recently resolved to "let up" on the Czar for two years in order to see if he will accept the constitution which it is now said the late Czar actually signed on the very day of his assassination. The Nihilists having seen a copy of this constitution are quite satisfied with it. A copy was furnished them by the Princess Dolgorouski, the late Czar's morganatic widow. If at the close of two years the present Czar will not grant the constitution, assassination and terrorism will be introduced on a scale never before heard of. It is a little singular that they should resort to this weapon again, when, according to their own showing, they would, but for assassination, have been living to day under a satisfactory constitution. How can they know but that they will assassinate another Czar just after he has agreed to a constitution which his successor will suppress as the present Czar has done? When Hamlet found his uncle at his prayers he refused to kill him because he would then send him into the other world with his sins yet unforgiven. The Nihilists seem to have taken the very moment when Alexander was repentant to dispatch him. This may have been a good thing for the Czar, but it was bad for the Nihilists.

The Universal Celt.

The secret of Gen. Komaroff's dislike to England is now explained. It appears that his grandmother was an Irish woman named MacNamara. That accounts for everything. Most likely his predecessor, Skobeleff, who was a thorough hater of England, had some of the same "drop" in him. Old Crimean veterans used to say, when they got sight of Toddleben, at the close of the war, that he looked like a Connaughtman; and as for Von Moltke, who is by birth a Dane, the connection between the Mulcahys and the Vikings of old is a matter of history.

A Coaling Station in the Far East

The arrangement by which England acquires a coaling station at Port Hamilton, in the island of Quelpart, was the last public service rendered to his country by Sir Harry Parkes. It was at first believed that the arrangement entailed our annexation of "the huge cone-like island of Quelpart," but the fact is simply that we have acquired a coaling station for our ships the North Pacific, similar to that already existing at Labuan. The want of such a station has long been felt, and no better place could have been selected than Port Hamilton, the only advantageous anchorage and shelter for ships around the stormy coasts of Quelpart. This arrangement will attract some attention to this island, and the following description of its position and character may prove useful as well as interesting at the present time. The island of Quelpart, which lies sixty miles distant from the southern coast of Corea, and commands the straits between that peninsula and Kiushiu, the southern island of Japan, has been termed "the Sicily of the Italy of the East." The comparison is not inappropriate. Local tradition still preserves the memory of its origin, as the myth which forms part of the superstitious creed of the people bears out the natural supposition as to its having been created by the action of a submarine volcano. The island is about forty miles in length, and at its widest point seventeen miles broad. It is well populated, and is under close and careful cultivation. Moreover, the scenery provided by its dense woods and lofty peaks is exceedingly beautiful, and the white rocks of Mount Auckland, or, as the natives call it, Aula, the highest point in the island, 6500 feet, wear the appearance of being covered with perpetual snow. The forests consist of pine and a tree giving a red wood resembling mahogany. There are large herds of cattle, and numerous horses of a small breed, which are in great demand on the mainland. Quelpart produces numerous cereals, and the islanders also follow the pursuit of fishermen. An active and flourishing industry is also provided by the manufacture of straw-plaited hats, which are in general use throughout Corea. Quelpart has been frequently used as a penal station by the Corean Government, and therefore it is not surprising that the Islanders should have had an evil reputation. Their ferocity and animosity to foreigners appear to have been much exaggerated, or perhaps their remarkable material prosperity has toned down their faults. By obtaining this advantageous coaling station there can be no doubt that the Government have taken a wise step towards the further security of our naval position in the seas of China and Japan.

Wolseley's Adminstrative Powers

It nas never been my good fortune to accompany a force on campaign under the command of Lord Wolseley, and I write, therefore, under some disadvantage. But the expedition which he conducted from Malta to Cyprus when he went to organize the British adminstration of that island was at least of a semi-military character, and the opportunity offered of watching his methods as well as a commander, as a civil organizer and administrator. His leading characteristic struck me as equanimity. There were many temptations to irritation, in the defective commissariat arrangement, in the characteristic obstructiveness of the Turkish authority whom we were dispossessing, in the hazy indefiniteness of the situation generally, but Wolseley, decisive, nay, inquisitive when occasion demanded, never betrayed a sign of temper. That he was energetic one could discern, not less than that his powers of hard work—and of fruitful hard work—were exceptional; but there was no gustiness in the energy, and he slid through his hard work with apt, bright dexterity. He never fussed; and he never entangled himself in the labyrinth of trifles. The absence of all friction in his administrative methods stood accounted for partly by his own idiosyncrasy, partly—a phase, indeed, of that other reason—because of the perfect organization and thorough interworking of his staff. I travelled out from home with Wolseley and his staff. The latter had been gathered together hurriedly, but its members met, blended, and set to work in the saloon carriage between Dover and Calais as if they had stepped into it out of a department in which they had been co-operating for years. While they settled minor points of detail, their chief meanwhile slept serenely, easy in the perfect assurance based on experience that his subordinates would deal with these as he would desire they should be dealt with. It was clear to me thus early, and the impression but grew in distinctness, that Wolseley was the man who decided, who secreed, the centurion who said, "Do this," and that he recruited for the fulfilment of his behests a set of men on whom he could rely as intelligent and devoted executants, and to whom, therefore, he could and did confide the functions assigned to each, reserving himself as the chief, unhampered by a multiplicity of details, for the big work of resolving and directing. In all this he was making no experiment. He was sure of his "machine;" it was of his construction; he had selected every cog and pinion of it; and had tested its efficiency, both in parts and as a whole.—Archibald Forbes.

A Negro Boy's Wonderful Statuettes.

It is claimed that a genius in clay has been discovered; that what Blind Tom accomplished in music a negro boy by the name of Abram Hanson, age seventeen years, has the genius to create in sculpture if opportunity is afforded him. He was born in Leavenworth, Kan. He has had only three months' schooling, but can read and write fairly well. His general intelligence only seems to be about the average of colored boys of his age. His genius lies in his ability to pick up a piece of clay and model it in a few minutes to almost any form that suggests itself to his mind with a life-likeness truly astounding.

He has been at work down by the river bank for some days, and from the common red clay there found in abundance, without tools of any kind, without any models or designs, he forms his statues of men, his models of horses, dogs, cattle, men on horseback, negroes with pipes in their mouths, and other creations that suggest themselves to his imagination, with a wonderful reality and no inconsiderable artistic talent. These little models he sells at from 10 cents to 25 cents apiece, and the boy is making a fair living from his art already. His creations suggest wonderful possiblities if properly trained and developed.

All "Played Out."

"Don't know what ails me lately. Can't eat well,—can't sleep well. Can't work, and don't enjoy doing anything. Ain't really sick, and I really ain't well. Feel all kind o' played out, someway." That is what scores of men say every day. If they would take Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" they would soon have no occasion to say it. It purifies the blood, tones up the system and fortifies it against disease. It is a great anti-bilious remedy as well.

I kept about, but I felt thoroughly miserable. I had terrible headaches, and bearing-down sensations across me and was quite weak and discouraged. I sent and got some of the medicine after receiving your letter, and it has cured me. I hardly know myself. I feel so well."

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy, and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star

The Toronto General Trusts COMPANY,

27 & 29 Wellington St. East, TORONTO.

President—HON. EDWARD BLAKE, Q.C., M.P.
Vice-President—E. A. MEREDITH, LL.D.
Manager—J. W. LANGMUIR.

Directors—Hon. W. McMaster, Hon. Alexander Morris, B. Homer Dixon, Amelius Irving, William Elliot, William Mulock, M. P., Geo. A. Cox, William Gooderham, J. G. Scott, Q. C., James J. Foy, A. B. Lee, James Maclennan, Q. C., J. K. Kerr, Q. C., T. Sutherland Stayner, W. H. Beatty and Robt. Jaffray.

The Company acts as Executor, Administrator and Guardian, and receives and executes Trusts of every description. These various positions and duties are assumed by the Company, either under Deeds of Trust, Marriage, or other settlement executed during the life-time of the parties, or under Wills, or by appointment of the Court.

The Company also undertakes the investment of money in Real Estate mortgage securities; collecting and remitting the interest for a moderate charge. It will either invest the money as agent in the usual way; or should the investor prefer, it will for an extra charge guarantee the principal and the prompt payment of the interest on fixed days, yearly or half-yearly. Mortgages thus guaranteed and taken in the name of the investor, are the safest class of investment, and specially commend themselves to Trustees, as well as to Municipal Corporations and Public Companies desirous of establishing Sinking Funds.

The Company also acts as agents for the collection of interest or income, and transacts financial business generally, at the lowest rates.

The third annual meeting of the shareholders of this Company was held at its offices, 27 and 29 Wellington-street, east, Toronto, on Monday, 11th inst. The chair was taken by the President of the Company, the Hon. Edward Blake, Q. C., M. P. A large number of the shareholders were present, including Mr E. A. Meredith, the Vice-president; Hon. Wm. McMaster, Messrs. William Elliott, William Gooderham, T. S. Stayner, Robt. Jaffray, Sheriff Jarvis, J. G. Scott, Q. C., J. J. Foy, Q. C., J. D. Edgar, M. P., J. W. Langmuir, J. N. Lake, Arthur B. Lee, J. K. Kerr, Q. C., James Scott, &c., &c.

Mr. J. W. Langmuir, the Manager of the Company, was appointed Secretary, and read the THIRD ANNUAL REPORT OF THE TORONTO GENERAL TRUSTS COMPANY.

The Directors of the Toronto General Trusts Co. beg to submit their third annual report together with the accompanying financial statements, showing the results of the Company's business for the year ending 31st March, 1885.

The Directors have again to congratulate the shareholders on the continued and growing success which has attended the Company's operations in every branch of its business during the past twelve months.

The substantial increase in the work done by the Company in its capacity of trustee, executor, administrator, and other offices of a kindred character is especially satisfactory, as it furnishes conclusive evidence that the Company, as it becomes better known, is steadily and rapidly growing in public favour.

One of the principal objects in establishing the Company was to enable it, in the public interests, to accept and execute these various responsible offices; it being beyond all question that the security and permanency which a wealthy and responsible corporation affords, alike to the parties creating the trust and to the beneficiaries, are infinitely preferable to the uncertain security of any individual trustee. It is, therefore, most gratifying to your Directors to be able to report that the Company is so satisfactorily fulfilling the objects for which it was called into existence, and that in so doing it is laying the foundation of a large and rapidly increasing business.

The profit and loss statement herewith submitted shows in detail the revenue of the Company for the year and the sources from which it was obtained. It will be observed that not only has the entire amount incurred for preliminary expenses been wiped out, but that all commissions and charges paid for obtaining the Company's investments, including the balance due for these services for the two preceding years, have been fully liquidated. After the settlement of all outstanding debts, as well as the current office expenses, there remained a sufficient amount at the credit of profit and loss to enable your directors to declare a dividend of 5 per cent. per annum on the paid-up stock of the Company, besides placing the sum of $11,000 to the reserve account, and carrying forward to the credit of profit and loss the sum of $5,564.90.

At a special general meeting of the shareholders, held on 5th December last, it was decided to make application to the Lieut-Governor in Council for the issue of letters patent to the Company, conferring extended powers upon it, especially in dealing with securities as agent, and, in accordance with this application, supplementary letters patent issued to the Company on the 7th day of January, 1885.

The directors have much pleasure in recording their entire satisfaction with the manner in which the Company's business operations have been conducted during the year by the manager and his assistants.

EDWARD BLAKE,
President.

Toronto, 4th May, 1885.

In moving the adoption of the report Mr. BLAKE congratulated the shareholders on the remarkable and uniform progress of the Company's operations, he also drew attention to the largely increased number of trust estates which had been placed in charge of the Company during the past year and expressed the belief that the more the business and powers of the Company were understood by the public the more it would be availed of in its capacity of trustee, executor, etc.

The resolution was seconded by Mr. MEREDITH, the Vice-President.

Resolutions of thanks were passed to the President, Vice-President, and directors, as well as to the manager and staff for their careful and diligent discharge of their duties during the year.

The following shareholders were elected directors for the ensuing year, viz:—Hon. Edward Blake, Q.C., M.P.; Hon. Wm. McMaster, Senator; Hon. Alex. Morris, M.P.P.; Messrs E. A. Meredith, LL.D.; B. Homer Dixon, Æmilius Irving, Q.C.; Geo. A. Cox, Wm. Gooderham, J. G. Scott, Q.C.; Jas J. Foy, Q.C.; A. B. Lee, Wm. Elliot, James Maclennan, Q.C.; J. K. Kerr, Q.C.; T. S. Stayner, Robt. Jaffray, Wm. Mulock, M.P.; and Wm. H. Beatty.

The new Board of Directors then met and re-elected the Hon Edward Blake, President, and Mr. E. A. Meredith, Vice-President.

Mr. A. McGill of Chatsworth foundry has manufactured this season 175 road scrapers. They are made of steel, of the most approved shape, and altogether a very durable and superior article. Township councils will be consulting the best interests of their several municipalities when they give Mr. McG. a fair trial in this matter.

Say, Trimble, how is it that your store is always crowded with customers anxiously waiting to be served, when you will see in the stores up town everything quiet; no business doing; one clerk outside throwing the shoulder stone, another clerk taking a nap behind the counter, and the bosses reading over the North-West troubles, or discussing the political questions of the day? Why, my friend, that question is easily answered. You know I buy my goods from 10 to 25 per cent. cheaper than the other merchants here, therefore I can give my customers that much better value than any of my competitors.

It is a license commissionership and not an inspectorship that Mr. Geo. Winter has been appointed to. Mr. John Hanbury has the Inspectorship for Brandon and the surrounding districts. These are two gentlemen that will do credit to their appointments, and it shows that the Local Government is awakening to an understanding, the people will bear with dead beats no longer.—Brandon (Man) Mail.

Mr. John Ford passed through on Saturday last to attend his mother's funeral at Erin, she having passed away on Friday, aged 82 years. Mr. Ford has been making very material improvements on his farm at Annan, having during the past twelve months expended $500 in the shape of fencing, cultivating and clearing the land, and over $200 in repairs, painting, &c., on his residence, giving the place a greatly improved and prosperous appearance, exhibiting system and order, peculiar characteristics of Mr. Ford.

The tenth number of the Canadian Pictorial and Illustrated War News is before us. It contains the following illustrations: "Brigade Funerals of Lieut. Fitch and Private Moor, Royal Grenadiers" (scenes from sketches by our own artist, and instantaneous photographs by Mr. Fred Timms); "How the Royal Grenadiers got their Dinner before Batoche" (from a sketch by our special artists, Mr. F. W. Curzon); "Mr. Larmour's Portable Rifle Pits in Acton" (from photographs taken at Stratford, Ont.); "Big Bear, the last of the Rebels" (from a photograph); "The 38th Batallion (Dufferin Rifles) of Brantford" (from a photograph by Park & Co.). Also a fine Two page supplement showing Sundry Sketches from the Front, by Mr. F. W. Curzon. The paper sells at 15 cents per copy, obtainable from local booksellers and from the office of publication.

Extinguished.—On Sunday last about five o'clock p. m. smoke was seen issuing from a broken pain in the side store of Hill Bro's. large brick establishment frounting on Sydenham St., and the back door of the same was found in flames, but was soon extinguished by a few pails of water. This side store is divided in to apartments by a partition, one occupied by J. J. Irwin, as Veterinary Surgeon's office, the other by Hill Bro's as ware house. The doors of both compartments at the rear lead to a lobby about 8 x 4 feet and thence to one outer door; the latter being off its hinges for some time stood in the lobby and in here the fire originated and is supposed to have been caused by children playing with matches, as they had been accustomed to use this lobby for a play house. The two inner doors were burned through and the casing destroyed which was the extent of the damage, had the fire fifteen minutes more of a start the whole establishment would have certainly have been destroyed.

GIBRALTAR.

Sights About the Great Fortress Which Frowns Upon the Mediterranean.

Military discipline is here the great order of the day. Never for one moment can you forget the ruling spirit. You dare not produce a pencil and note book till your sketching pass is duly signed and countersigned, and even that is only given for a limited period, and with the proviso that you must make no drawing of any fortification (as if you could omit the one characteristic of the place.) At every turn you come on new batteries, great guns and mortars, with their thousand hard, black eyes, keeping watch and ward. Death's playthings everywhere, the very gardens yielding only grapeshot and other Dead Sea fruit. Beside the graceful flower vases are heaped up great pyramids or cannon balls; fixed bayonets gleam beneath the spiked aloes; tall plumes of grasses wave over plumed bonnets, and scarlet blossoms resolve themselves into tartans as first one, then another wells known regiment marches down with pipe-playing, for there is a field day on the parade ground in as picturesque a spot as you are likely to find, and Spaniards and Moors Jews and Britons are among the spectator,, to say nothing of rock scorpions, as English children born on "Old Gib" are called.

Doubtless, also, the Barbary apes are looking down at us from haunts among the cliffs, where they will find a refuge, being protected by stringent laws. They are tailless, of course, as their name implies. Poor, humble-looking creatures, yet more precious than all their long-tailed brethren inasmuch as they are the sole representatives of the monkey tribe still existing in Europe. They are found, however, in vast numbers on the coast of Barbary, and this handful of the rock seems to corroborate the story of the former union of the two continents. It would seem that the making of the Phœnician canal had cut off the retreat of this garrison, isolating them from their fellows. But, though they alone remain as living proofs of the time when Europe and Africa were one, there are wonderful caves in the rock where bones of elephants and rhinoceroses, leopards and hyenas, lie bleaching together; as they have lain for countless centuries; strange memorials of still more remote ages, when they and their fellows were free to wander at large through Spanish and Italian forests, and thence pass undisturbed to Calais and across the dry land to Dover, there to leave their old bones for the wonder and edification of curious and inquisitive human beings in this 19th century.

The caves are not at all antediluvian tombs. Some have been homes of the living, who have sought an asylum in times of danger. One of the most interesting of these rock dwellings is known as Martin's Cave; its only entrance is from the actual face of the precipice, the perpendicular cliff towering 700 feet above it, while an equally precipitous wall of natural and artificial fortifications lies between it and the calm blue sea below. The only access to this cave is along a steep and dangerous rocky ledge, scarcely to be called a path, whence one false step would hurl you through mid air to find your rest in the quiet waters of the Mediterranean. But within the cavern you will find still quieter waters. You pass from the glowing sunlight into the dim, ghostly cave, where tall stalagmites rise up to meet the pendant stalactites which adorn the roof, giving an effect of gray pillars, some slender, some massive, and as you peer through them into the innermost recesses of the cave you perceive a still, dark pool, into which from time to time one single drop of water falls with a dull splash from the rock above.

The Russians on the Amoor.

The Manchooria boundary question which China has suddenly raised up is quite an easy one to understand. The disputed territory is on the south bank of the Amoor, and was really never formally ceded to Russia, but which the government of eastern Siberia has, durinng the past twenty years planted thickly with colonies of exiles, reservists, and Cossacks. The colonization extends to from twenty to fifty miles south of the river, on land not included in the last treaty with China, but which China has allowed Russia to occupy and colonize without opposition.

Now the governor-general of eastern Siberia reports that "bands of armed Chinese have crossed the Russian frontier and surprised several Cossack villages." Dire punishment will presumably be meted out to the "depredators" by Russia, unless, indeed, England intercedes; for there is but little doubt that the attack was a result of the proposed Anglo-Chinese alliance which was being negotiated at the time when it seemed likely that France and England were about to seriously disagree on the Bosphore-Egyptian question and a Franco Russian alliance appeared to be a possibility.

To meet this combination England's plan would naturally have been to checkmte Russia and France by aiding the Chinese in Tonquin and on the Amoor. It was suddenly reported that the Chinese refused to evacuate Tonquin, and almost simultaneously the Manchoorian boundary question was raised by the Chinese government. Quite assuddenly, however, the Bosphore-Egyptien question was settled. England thought it wise to come to a peaceful understanding with Russia about the Penjdeh incident, the Chinese goverment quickly repudiated any idea of not keeping her contract with France, only the poorly armed Chinese marauders on the Manchoorian frontier could not be reached in time by telegraph to stay further proceedings.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

"I should like to spoke a few remarks to Brudder Side Bar Skinner," observed the President, as the dust began to settle in Paradise Hall.

Brother Skinner, who is a young man of 23, with a mild eye and a lilac necktie, advanced to the front and the President continued:

"Brudder Skinner, de news has reached my ears dat you am about to be marr'd. I trus' dat de report am true, bekase I believe it am de dooty of ebery young man who kin support a wife to take one."

"It am true, sah."

"Den let me compliment you wid one hand an' spoke a few remarks to you wid de odder. Gittin' mar'd has its werry serious side. For instance, am de gal gwine to mar'y you bekase she loves you, or to spite her folkes bekase dey kept her away from de skatin's rink? Am you gwine to mar'y de gal fur love, or bekase her father has some wealth which you hope he'll shell out fur your benefit?

"Love am a powerful emoshun, Brudder Skinner, but love widout pork and taters to keep it goin' am like de froth on top of sodawater.

"Don't mistake your sentiments. If you am sartin dat you love, go ahead. If it am only lollypop, hire out as a deck hand on a steamboat fur a week an' it will all go away. I hev known couples ez seemed to be dyin' of love. Dair silly ackshuns made 'em de laffin-stock of a hull nayburhood. Dey seemed to dote and dote, but it didn't last. Arter a couple of y'ars de husband war' a home grumbler an' tyrant, an' de wife a gadabout an' a scold. What dey s'posed was love war' only lollypop.

"Doan' marry a gal hopin' dat her father will set you up in de barber bizness. Most fadder-in-laws not only want all dey hez got, but am willin' to struggle fur another $20,000.

"Doan' sot down an' figger dat fo' taters, a loaf of bread, half a pound of meat an' a quart of applesass am goin' to run you fur a week. You will want all de salary you kin ai'rn, an' you had better look aroun' an' find somebody who will lend you a dollar now an' then.

"Doan' flatter yerselves dat all you hev got to do am to hug in de house an' kiss ober de gate. You'll be hungry fur co'n beef an' baked beans; your cloze will w'ar out; your flour an' butter will waste away, an' a bill fur two months' rent will send a chill up yer back. De man or woman who specks dat mar'd life am a green an' shady lane, lined wid orange blossoms on one side an' ten dollar bills on de odder, am gwine to wake up some day an' find de rats leavin' the place in disgust.

"Think of dese things, Brudder Skinner. You kin get a wife in about five minutes, but it takes five y'ars to git shet of some of 'em. Expect about one day's sunshine fur a week of cloudy weather. Reckon on house rent comin' due de fust of ebery month, an' de grocer an' butcher keepin' an eye out fur you each Saturday night. It will amaze you how de woodpile decedes an' how de flour gits outen de bar'l so soon. Doan' walk into matrimony like a lobster into a box, but figger on whether de bait am wuth de risks. If you conclude to mar'y you kin depend on dis club attendin' the obsequies in a body, bringin' along a bounteous supply of ham sandwiches. If you decide not to, it am probable dat you will soon be promoted to some posishun of trust an' responsibility."

STATISTICAL.

In reply to an inquiry propounded by the Hon. Pokeroot Dayton, the Secretary announced that the Lime-Kiln Club now had 163 branch lodges, covering all the States except Maine and Rhode Island, and including Ontario, Canada, Halifax and New Brunswick.

The membership of the Lime-Kiln Club proper was about 7,000, counting honorary members, while that of the branch lodges was over 40,000.

The club and its branches represented spot cash to the amount of $1,500,000. The members included poets, preachers, lecturers, orators, statesmen, editors and all the trades of daily life.

ONE MORE GONE

The President announced that he was in receipt of a postal card from Savannah announcing the supposed death of Brother Hereditary Knox, an honorary member of three years' standing. Brother Knox was engaged in "hooking" cotton bales aboard a steamer and fell from the gangplank into the river. As he did not return to his work after a reasonable time had elapsed the supposition was that he remained at the bottom and that the club would get no more dues out of him.

The three cotton-hooks on the north wall of Paradise Hall were ordered to be draped in mourning for the space of fifteen days, and if it can be ascertained that the deceased brother left a widow the usual resolutions of sympathy will probably be passed.

Just the Same

Every time. Everybody who has used or sold Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor reports that it is the only sure pop Corn Cure extant. C. "Throw Physic to the Dogs" when it is the old-fashioned blue mass, blue pill sort, and insist on using Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," a modern medical luxury, being small, sugar-coated granules, containing the active principles of certain roots and herbs, and which will be found to contain as much cathartic power as any of the old-fashioned, larger pills, without the latter's violent, drastic effects. The pellets eradicate thoroughly but harmlessly, establishing a permanently healthy action of the stomach and bowels, and as an anti-bilious remedy are unequaled.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star

A country seat—the milking-stool.

Taking experience as the test there can be no question about the superior quality of the "Myrtle Navy" tobacco. From the firs year of its manufacture the demand for it has steadily grown. Even in the years which were marked by our business depression, there was no pause in the increase of the sale of it. In the dull years of 1876-'77 and '78, the sales of it were vastly greater than in the prosperous year of 1873.

The Eagle Steam Washing Machine.

A washing machine has been invented which executes its work with a great saving of time, labor, and wear to clothes, also fuel. In the States this machine is sold by the thousands, and is just now being introduced into Canada by the manufacturer, who has sent out some hundreds of machines on trial, and to prove the worth of this machine, not one has been returned, and house wives who once test this will find it an invaluable addition to saving of labor. Any amount of "Canadian" testimonials may be seen on application to the firm, 78 Jarvis street, Toronto. See advertisement in another column.

FOR THE FARMER.

Poultry Points.

Eggs for hatching should not be over two weeks old.

According as hens take on fat they usually fall off in laying. Do not be too bountiful to such birds, but rather follow a medium course of feeding.

A good remedy for roup is to give half a teaspoonful of coal oil once a day. If the fowl is weak give a pill composed of equal parts of gentain, quinine (or Peruvian bark) and rhubarb.

The poultry yard should be in a dry situation, with a southern or south-eastern slope. Some underbrush is desirable for shade, and water should be handy, a running stream being preferable.

No matter what variety of fowls you are breeding, you should improve them by introducing fresh blood into the flock occasionally, from such strains as you have reason to believe are of the best blood.

Ducks should be allowed as much liberty as possible, as they are not partial to confinement like chickens. When they are confined in a yard with hens they become quarrelsome and do more damage than they are worth, and for that reason should be kept separate.

Several small houses, for sheltering purposes, are better than one of large size. Houses twelve feet long by six feet wide will make two apartments, each large enough to accommodate fifty hens and four cocks, which are as many as should be kept together. Ventilation must not be overlooked, and in hot weather should be ample.

A little space sowed to onions, for chicks, will be found an advantage. Onions can go in very early, and both the tops and the bulbs are excellent for mixing with the food of chicks and young turkeys. Garlic and leek are also good, and such crops may be grown on a small space, without demanding excessive labor for their cultivation, though, if grown for crops, the work must be done more thoroughly.

At one time the Houdan was characterized as "the best farmer's fowl," and for all round purposes, where hardiness, precocity, good laying and table qualities are desired, we think this statement a correct one—that is, if the right Houdans are obtained, such as are bred in France. Some breeds are better layers, others excel on the table, but on the whole we know of no variety which can claim a relatively higher position than this one.

For business—that is, for all purposes and all goose qualities and size, no breed of geese equals the Toulouse. Among their good qualities is their extreme hardiness. They need no housing in winter, and only grass and water in summer. When spring comes they are on hand with plenty of eggs. We think them the equal, if not the superior, of the whole goose family for laying. They will produce more eggs in a season than any other breed. It is nothing uncommon for a single goose to lay 40 to 50 eggs from March to July. Compared with other geese, their eggs are apt to hatch well. When the gosling is hatched, after he gets on his feet he is all right for growing up. With plenty of tender grass or lettuce and meal mush, lightly salted, with puddle water for drink, and a dry, warm shelter, he is certain of thrift and a future existence as a young mule.

How to Buy a Horse.

An old horse-man says:—If you want to buy a horse don't believe your own mother. Take no man's word for it. Your eye is your market. Don't buy a horse in harness. Unhitch him and take everything off but the halter and lead him around. If he has a corn, or a stiff, or has any other failing you can see it. Let him go by himself a way, and if he moves right into anything you know he is blind. No matter how clear and bright the eyes are, he can't see any more than a bat. Back him, too. Some horses show their weakness at tricks in that way when they don't at any other. But, be as smart as you can, you'll get caught sometimes. Even an expert gets stuck. A horse may look ever so nice and go a great way and not have fits. There isn't a man could tell it till something happens. Or he may have a weak back. Give him the whip and off he goes for a mile or two, then all of a sudden he stops in the road. After a spell he starts again, but he soon stops for good, and nothing but a derrick could move him. The weak points of a horse can be better discovered while standing still than while moving. If he is sound he will stand firmly and squarely on his limbs without moving them, feet flatly upon the ground, with legs plump and naturally placed; or, if the foot is lifted off the ground will the weight taken from it, disease may be suspected, or at least tenderness, which is a precursor of disease. If the horse stands with his feet spread apart or straddles with his hind legs there is a weakness in the loins and the kidneys is disordered. Heavy pulling bends the knee. Bluish, milky cast of eyes in horses indicates moon-blindness or something like. A bad-tempered one keeps his ears drawn back. A kicking horse is apt to have scarred legs. A stumbling horse has blemished knees. When the skin is rough and harsh and does not move to the touch the horse is a heavy eater and digestion is bad. Never buy a horse whose breathing organs are at all impaired. Place your ear at the heart, and if a wheezing sound is heard it is an indication of trouble.

The Advantages of a Root Crop.

A root crop not only furnishes a large quantity of the best kind of fodder for cattle, sheep and pigs, equal to the feeding of six head of cattle for six months, from an acre of ground, but it enables the farmer to use up all his straw for feeding, instead of wasting it to a large extent for litter. Anything that can be fed to animals, is wasted when used for litter to the extent of the flesh or milk that can be made from it, and the increased availability of the manure made from the fodder. So that when a farmer can use all his straw by cutting it and mixing it with pulped roots, his root crop is doubly advantageous. The straw, aided by a little cotton-seed meal, then becomes as nutritious feeding as hay, and serves the farmer a far more valuable purpose than if it were employed for litter alone.

Hints for the Hay Field.

A good deal has been learned about hay. We know that the earliest-made hay is the best. We know also that the hay which is made with the least exposure to the sun is far better than that which is dried by the heat and wind until it breaks into dust under the foot. Thousands of farmers, who first read of hay caps in the papers many years ago, have learned that they will save their cost every year, if properly used. Experience has taught this lesson. A few short and pithy rules for making the best of hay might just now be repeated, as follows: Get the mowers into good condition, without a day's unavoidable delay; watch the grass closely, and cut it before the seed is formed—just when the blossom is fading. Cut it as soon as the dew is off, but not while it is damp. Before the evening dew falls upon it, rake it up and put it in to cocks holding about three hundred pounds each. If rain threatens, cover the cocks safely with hay caps. Take in no hay until all has been cut and cocked. The hay will cure in the best manner in the cock, and it may stay a week without harm, if covered with the caps. When ready to draw it to the barn, uncover the cocks and throw them over and open them. Have one person doing this, while the others are loading and drawing in. Do not stack it, but place it under a tight roof, if it is only a barrack, open at the sides. Uncover only what can be drawn in in one day. As soon as the field is clear, give it a top-dressing of compost or or some artificial fertilizer; but do not turn the cows upon it—it would pay better to buy some hay from a neighbor. This last rule applies to the next year's crop, but it is rightly placed here, because next year would be too late to use it. It is of the greatest importance, and should by no means be omitted. Finally, gather the hay caps together; dry them, if necessary; lay them evenly one upon another; roll them up; bind them in the roll, and store them in a dry place where no mice can gnaw holes in them. It would be an excellent thing to steep them in a solution of alum and sugar of lead, to preserve and make them waterproof.

Murder Among the Circassians.

According to a Russian journal, quoted in Globus, the Russian law, especially as regards murders, is now to be enforced among all natives under Russian rule. Hitherto the murder of a Kirghiz was punished by their own customs in the following manner; "When in an aul or in the steppe a murder has been committed the relatives and friends of the dead man commence the search for the murderer. Sometimes he is not found until after a long interval, especially if the body is not soon found. Frequently the latter is hidden; then the flight of birds of prey is watched, and other indications are utilized by the extraordinary acuteness of the nomads. When the murderer is discovered the relations have the right to levy from him a so-called kun. This fine, which washes away bloodguiltiness, consists of a number of camels, horses, sheep and clothes, a special kun being due to those who took part in the search for the murderer, to the person who actually discovered him, and to the Judge. The fine, or wergild, for a woman is less than that for a man, and in the latter case it varies with the descent. Thus there would be a greater fine for killing a pure Kirghiz than for killing one whose descent was unknown. If the murderer cannot pay the kun, his kinsfolk must do it for him, and the payment and receipt of this fine is accompanied by a number of different customs. The occasion is a kind of festival in the aul in which the relatives of the murdered man live. Among the animals paid as kun the murderer's horse must always be one. The family of the person killed have, however, the right to refuse all payment and to demand a duel with the slayer. The latter appears in the aul of the others armed from head to foot and mounted on his best steed; a certain distance off the avengers are stationed, and a wild race ensues. If the accused can get away from his pursuers he is safe from all punishment. He can, however, only be pursued to the going down of the sun, and directly the latter sinks behind the horizon he is free. If he is caught he is generally put to death at once. It is remarkable that a murderer rarely remains undiscovered. The Kirghiz hardly ever commit that crime for the sake of robbery; the murder generally takes place after a quarrel or for revenge."

Nothing exasperates a woman who has been shading her eyes from the gaslight with her hand all the evening so much as to find that after all she had left her best diamond ring on the washstand.

"What do you think of my new dress Hubby? Isn't it the handsomest one you ever saw?" "Yes, I confess it is; lace over everything, in fact."

"What is more awful to contemplate," said a lecturer, glaring about him, "than the resistless power of the maelstrom?" And a hen-pecked looking man, in the rear of his building softly replied: "Femalestrom."

THE TENOR OF EVENTS.

The mortal remains of Beethoven and Schubert will be transferred this Spring from their present resting place to the new Central Cemetery in Vienna. It is a melancholy fact that the remains of Mozart have been mislaid, and there is no sign to indicate where he was interred.

Simultaneously with the abandonment of Penjdeh England evacuates the Soudan where she has bunglingly squandered so much blood and treasure. Napier's raid into Abyssinia cost England at the rate of $4,200 a year for each man, and the estimated annual expenditure for camels for General Graham's expedition is $16,750,000.

A Schenectady paper tells a sad story of how two lives were blasted by a fly's misstep. A couple were married several years ago, and lived happily until one morning, when a fly fell into the wife's coffee. It was scooped out by her husband and accidentally tossed upon her plate. She became angry and left the house. The separation is final.

In the memoirs of Lord Malmesbury, recently published, that distinguished English diplomat relates of Marshal Sebastiani, who was a pompous boaster, that his mother, after he was whipped at the battle of Talavera, said: "My son is like a drum; the more he is beaten the bigger noise he makes." The same remark in a different sense might be made of the American small boy. The more he is beaten after playing hookey, the bigger noise he makes.

A new explosive, known as kinetite, it is at present being studied in Germany. It consists of a mixture of oils and gun cotton, and is superior to dynamite, as its manufacture and manipulation are absolutely without danger; it will detonate only under certain peculiar and well-defined conditions of shock. Only the part exposed to concussion explodes, and when fired it burns quietly with a brilliant light. The true composition is being carefully kept a secret.

There is a movement toward uniting all the Protestant sects in one general church, and a meeting has been held in Hartford by its promoters. Among these gentlemen are the Rev. Drs. Howard Crosby, Ormiston and Williams, of New York; Booth, of Englewood, N. J.; Grafton and Clark, of Boston; Boardman, Giles and Newton, of Philadelphia; Merriman, of Worcester; Jenkins, of Pittsfield; Bishop Coxe, of New York; Presidents Smith, of Trinity College; Hopkins, of Auburn Seminary, and Adams, of Rochester, and Govenor Harrison, of Connecticut.

In one of the negro churches of Charlotte, N. C, there is a movement for a division of the memebership on the color line. The pure blacks favor a congregation composed of themselves, and the mulattoes express a similar desire on their own part. At a recent meeting the proposed division was agreed to, but the terms could not be settled. The minister being black, the blacks naturally claimed him, and also the church and furniture. Some of the black men have mulatto wives, and some of the black women have mulatto husbands. The difficulties seem insurmountable.

What Bismarck did at the Berlin Congress he is certain to do again, because the key-stone of his far-seeing statecraft is inflexible resistance to Russian aggrandizement in Europe. No man can read events aright who is unwilling to accept this fundamental postulate. If Russia can be tempted to expend her force in seeking an outlet on the Indian Ocean—a change of objective which might result in transforming her from a European into an Asiatic power—so much the better for Germany, to whose stability and growth Bismarck's whole life has been devoted and in whose pious memory he hopes to see his name enshrined with the august names of Charlemange, Barbarossa, and Frederick the Great.

An official British statement shows that in 1884, notwithstanding the stagnation in all sorts of legitimate business, 1,280 new joint-stock companies were registered in London, with a capital of $590,000,000, against $667,860,000 in 1883, $832,165,000 in 1882, and $865,220,000 in 1881. Here were companies with a capital of nearly $3,000,000,000 created within four years, while for the seven preceding years the total never exceeded $425,000,000 in any year, and sometimes was only half that amount. It is a little remarkable that in this country, where so large a part is played by corporate associations, no attempt is made to obtain an official record of the creation of new concerns.

The Manchester Guardian gives currency to the rumor that the most famous canvas in the world, the beautiful Sistine Madonna of Raphael, is about to change hands again. This was painted by Raphael between 1517 and 1520, and represents the mother of Christ standing in a majestic attitude with the infant in her arms and two cherubs looking up from beneath, while there is a halo of cherubic faces back of the Virgin's head. No picture is better known all over the world from countless engravings and photographs and none has such power to impress even those untrained to art. It was sold by a needy Pope to the Elector of Saxony in 1753 for £9,000, and it is said that the King of Saxony is ready now to sell it to the British Government for £150,000.

"Nothing is impossible to him who wills," says a philosopher. No, nor to the lawyer who conducts the case.

In the game of life few players reach the home base, while many knock before gaining the first base.

The giraffe has never been known to utter a sound. In this respect it resembles a young lady in a street car when a gentleman gives her his seat.

A TRUE HEROINE.

The Story of Alice Ayres' Devotion to Duty

Early one pleasant May morning a silent funeral procession moved out of noisy London to the little cemetery at Isleworth. There was no hearse with waving plumes, no long line of carriages drawn by black horses. The body, that of a young servant-girl, was carried by sixteen members of the London fire brigade, in reliefs of four. The strong men walked with uncovered heads. Behind them came twenty girls, dressed in white, former companions and schoolmates of the dead. A thousand men, women and children, bearing wreaths and flowers, followed them. They were all speechless, but the tears in their eyes gave eloquent expression to their deep sorrow. The cemetery was reached, the silent mourners knelt on the green turf in prayer, the service for the burial of the dead was read in measured cadences, the coffin was lowered into the earth, and the grave half-filled with flowers.

Who was the honored dead? Not one who had "marched to glory or the grave" on a foreign battle-field. There was none of the pomp of war surrounding the death of this person. She met her heroic death with no banners waving, no bugles sounding, no commander directing, no comrades cheering. Probably she had never read the couplet of Tennyson:

> "Not once or twice in our fair island story
> The path of duty was the way to glory."

But she trod the path as resolutely as she had been familiar with all the heroic poetry ever written. She was only a common English servant-girl. Her parents were poor laboring people, living at Isleworth. She came to London to earn money with which to assist them, and found employment in the family of a Mr. Chandler, who kept a paint and oil shop, and lived over his place of business. He had a wife and four young children, and the care of the latter was among her duties.

At midnight a fire broke out in the paint shop. Fed with the inflammable materials, it did not require long for the flames to dart out of the windows of the building. People in the street raised an alarm, and the fire escape was soon heard approaching over the rough pavements. It was, however, several blocks off, and the street was filled with a crowd. The noise had aroused Alice Ayres, the young servant-girl, and she hastened to the window. As she appeared, clad only in her night gown, men took off their coats and women their shawls, and tying them together, held them up, shouting to the girl to leap and save her life. She left the window, however, only to appear in a moment with a mattress, which she threw out. A cheer went up from the crowd as men on the sidewalk raised the mattress for her to jump upon. Alice Ayres disappeared again. In an instant she stood behind the sheet of flame, and, embracing a favorable opportunity, threw a young child on the bed beneath. The babe was scarcely in a woman's arms before another child was tossed through the sheet of flame. The crowd cheered and then shouted: "Save yourself! For God's sake, save yourself!" But the poor girl did not try to save herself. With rare devotion to duty she went back to rescue the remaining children. The third one was placed beyond the reach of danger, and she returned through the heated air and blinding smoke for the fourth. It was in another room, and the flames cut off access to it. The poor, faithful girl came to the window, looked on the persons who were endeavoring to save her, heard their intreaties to leap into their arms, but, exhausted by her past endeavors, fell upon the sidewalk, the shock breaking her spine. She was carried to the nearest hospital, where for a week she lived and suffered. Before her death she asked to have the children she had rescued brought to her, that she might kiss them.

When the flames were subdued by the engines, the dead father was found holding in his hand his money box. The dead mother was also found with a child on one arm and her best dress on the other. It remained for Alice Ayres, the poor servant-girl, to furnish an example of self-abnegation and heroism such as has been rarely displayed on any occasion. Her story might afford inspiration to the living painter and poet. Her grave should be a shrine for English mothers. The lines of Tennyson, already quoted, afford the best inscription for her monument. The names of Alice Ayres and Grace Darling deserve to live in history with those of Gordon and Burnaby.

Lord Wolseley's Early Career.

Lord Wolseley joined the 80th regiment in 1852 while yet a lad of nineteen. The old family connection was manifest in his choice of a regiment, for the 80th is a Staffordshire corps. He did not soldier long with the Staffordshire knot on his coat collar; but his first regiment came under his command when he was sent out to Zululand, where also he found under him the 90th, the regiment in which he had won promotion and glory in the Crimea and India. When he was gazetted to the 80th, it was on service in Burmah, where Sir John Cheape was conducting what is known as the "Second Burmese War." Sir John was operating against a certain Burmese chieftain, who owned the euphonious name of Myat-Loon, and also the reputedly impregnable stronghold of Kyoult Azein, situated in the heart of a dense jungle. The outworks of this stronghold had to be taken by storm, and Wolseley, only just joined, volunteered to lead the storming detachment. His handful of 80th coöperated in the operation with a little band of Madras Infantry under the command of Lieutenant Taylor. Taylor and Wolseley raced for the honor of being first inside the enemy's work. Neither won, owing to circumstances over which neither had any control. Both were simultaneously wounded, and, strangely enough, in the same place. A gingal ball struck Wolseley on the left thigh, tearing away a mass of muscle and flesh. Taylor suffered similarly, but with the more lethal addition that his famoral artery was severed. He bled to death on the spot. Wolseley slowly recovered, but he will bear to his grave the furrow of the gingal ball. When at home convalescent, he was promoted to a lieutenancy in the 90th, then in the Crimea. After a short spell of trench service with his regiment, Wolseley was selected for duty as acting-engineer of our right attack, and filled this post through the long cruel winter. He was gazetted a captain in the end of 1854, but the promotion was cancelled. And for what reason it would not be easy to guess. Because of Wolseley's youth? He was not too young to earn the promotion, but the authorities thought a lad of twenty-one and a half too young for a captaincy! Wolseley, justly incensed, threatened to resign if deprived of the promotion he had won, and the authorities cancelled the cancellation. He was thanked in despatches for his services in the capture of the Quarries, and took part in the first unsuccessful assault of the Redan. When engaged in his engineer work in the trenches in August, 1855 Wolseley was all but shattered by a shell that killed the two sappers who were assisting him. The shell burst in a gabion that had been packed with gravel, and the explosion simply "stuck Wolseley full of stones." Jagged bits of pebbles were imbedded in him all over from head to foot. There was not a square inch of his face that had not its stone; his left cheek was all but torn away, his eyes were closed (to this day he is blind of one eye), and part of the bone of the left shin was carried away bodily. Fortunately he has been able to keep the eye left to him pretty wide open. He was picked up for dead, but astonished the surgeons who were speaking of him as quite gone by cheerily mumbling that he was "worth a dozen dead men yet." This wound, or rather this broadcast area of wounds, temporarily invalided him, and so he missed being present at the capture of the great fortress of the Euxine. He had got mended, however, by 1857 and started with his regiment for service in China.

The 90th was one of the regiments destined for China which Lord Canning's swift steamers contrived to catch en route, and divert to India to aid in the quelling of the great mutiny that had broken out with so fell an unexpectedness. The gallant "Perthshire Greybreeks" were included in the column which Sir Colin Campbell led from Cawnpore to the second relief of Lucknow. From the Dilkoosha Sir Colin had sent the "Black Watch" down the slope on the Martinlere. The 93rd and the Sikhs had made a ghastly shambles of the once beautiful Secunderabagh garden. Peel's men, of the Shannon, were slogging with their ship's guns into the massive structure of the Shah Nujeef, preparatory to carrying it by escalade out of the branches of a tree which grew against the walls of the shrine. Wolseley, with his two companies of the 90th, was sent to the left to carry the "Mess House." The way to its compound wall was across the open. Wolseley's fellows took with them a couple of light guns. So fierce was the Sepoy fire that, to use Wolseley's own quaint colloquialism, "the bullets dropped off tires of the wheels like peas off a drum." The Mess House was carried away with a rush, Wolseley, with his own hand, in the midst of a hailstorm of bullets, pulling down the flag of the mutineers from the staff in its roof, and planting in its place the British banner which he carried. Beyond the Mess House lay the palace known as Motee Mahal, the last rebel post separating the relieving force from their environed fellow-country folk. Wolseley led his detachment forward to the assault of the Motee Mahal, which in its turn was taken and cleared after hard fighting and severe loss. Wolseley took part in the hard fighting which brought about the final reduction of Lucknow, and in the energetic marching and fighting all over Oude, whereby the late Sir Hope Grant contributed so greatly to the stamping out of the great revolt, on the final extinguishment of which Wolseley found himself a brevet lieutenant-colonel at the age of twenty six.—[Archd. GLADSTONE'S GOVERNMENT DEFEATED.

The Government has been defeated in the Commons, England, by a vote of 264 to 252, causing great excitement. Gladstone has resigned.

Promptness.

Promptness is one of the qualities which command success. There are certain gentle, attractive qualities which win it, but promptness makes no suit for prosperity, it commands it. Promptness is leadership; it does not follow like some of the other virtues; it leads the charge, and plants itself first on the obsticle in its path. This is a prompt universe or it would cease to be a universe, and go back into the chaos out of which the divine Builder reared it. Every world sweeps round its orbit without the delay of a second; every planet completes its august circuit through the heavens on the instant; suns rise and set century after century, and the sublime movement of the uniyerse goes forward without the loss of a moment. The overhanging heavens are God's time-keepers, by which earth sets its clocks, and marks the little interval of its life. The heavens which declare the glory of God declare also His promptness; the business of the universe is always done on time. The business of men's lives can be well done in no other way. The man who delays and is late violates that order which is Heaven's first law, and does what he can to turn the world back to original chaos. He destroys his own chance of success; he breaks up the carefully-laid plans of other men more faithful than he; he blocks the wheels of universal progress. Such a man is not only a failure, but a nuisance to the community in which he lives. If you want success be prompt; fall in line with the stars, and do your work on the instant. God is prompt; you cannot afford to be otherwise.

A Neglected Duty.

The following we clip from the Advance of last week: "On the evening of the 25th being in Markdale. I ascertained that there was to be a concert in the Methodist Church; and, when time hangs heavily on your hands, "anything at all" is a relaxation, so thither I went, and I must express to you my astonishment at the high musical talent displayed in the opening pieces of music. I suppose the singers were mostly members of the church in the possession of musical talant that would be envied by many churches here in Toronto. It is not only in the possession of melodious, towering, majestic voice, but in that erudite inflexion of tone which conveys pathos or passion, tenderness or tragic, according as the sentiment expressed in the various moods of the piece of the music. Misses Christoe and Damude of Flesherton, and Mrs. Fox, of Owen Sound, were mentioned to me as being visitors, and certainly they were a rare acquisition.

One of the choir singers, Mr. Anderson, who favored me with a copy of an original poem which I herewith send you-Flag of Brittannia--possesses musical talent rarely met with, even amongst our professionals. In the performances of a choir we can rarely distinguish the best, if all are somewhat equally qualified; but, when he comes to a single handed contest, the ring of true metal "will out." This gentleman's rendering of "Flag of Brittannia, and the March of the Cameron Men," spell-bound the audience. At the conclusion of each piece there was an enthusiastic outburst of applause, that "made the welkin ring." "The March of the Cameron Men" was encored to which Mr. Anderson graciously responded. One peculiarity in this gentleman's singing is, that while it is sweet and melodious, it yet possesses the magnetic electryfing of imbueing his audience with all the fervor of sentiment expressed in his song, and Markdale Choir may feel proud of their colleague Mr. Anderson.

Yours ever,

PERPETUAL TRAVELLER.

Big Bear Comes Into Collission With The Police.

A CLEVER FLANK MOVEMENT MAKES THE INDIANS FLY—THREE MEN WOUNDED—ESCAPE OF SOME OF THE CHIEF'S PRISONERS.

WINNIPEG, June 7.—Lieut.-Gov. Aikens has received a message from Gen. Middleton's camp, near Fort Pitt, dated June 2, to the effect that Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Quinney, Mr. Cameron, and two halfbreeds, who have been prisoners with Big Bear, through the assistance of friendly Indians escaped, and were now in Gen. Strange's camp, twelve miles from Fort Pitt. Mr. Quinney, stated that none of the women have suffered any indignites. Gen. Strange says that Big Bear's band has broken apart, virtually into two parties, and he has still the McLean families and several other prisoners. The general is going to follow both trails with all his mounted men, and hopes to catch Big Bear yet.

Mr. Cameron, one of the prisoners rescued, gives the names of the Frog Lake murderers. He says the Wood Crees saved the prisoners' lives, the Plain Crees wanting to kill them. He states that Mrs. Delaney and Gowanlock have been well treated. All the prisoners were comparatively well treated, and no indignities were offered them.

REINFORCEMENTS FOR GEN. STRANGE.

FORT PITT, N. W. T., June 3, via Battleford, June 6 —Gen. Middleton with 50 men each of the 90th, Midland and Grenadiers and a Gatling left to join Gen. Strange this evening. All the mounted men left early this morning.

AN ENGAGEMENT WITH THE BEAR.

FORT PITT, June 4.—Captain Steel with several mounted scouts and police had an engagement with Big Bear at Two Lakes, fifty miles southeast of here, yesterday. He came upon the Indians as they were striking camp and immediately attacked them. Finding their front too strong he executed a clever flank movement, taking the Indians in the rear and driving them in disorder across a creek, where he was unable to follow on account of his small force he saw no signs of the prisoners during the fight.

Capt. Steel sent an interpreter to McKee with a flag of truce. He advanced but was fired on. He got near enough to be heard and called out to Big Bear in Indian, who replied indistinctly. McKee said, "If you will deliver our people we will cease firing." The Indian replied, "We intend to clean you out."

Capt. Steel's loss was three wounded, Sergt.-Major Furry in the breat, Bill West, a scout, in the knee, and J. Fisher in the forearm.

OTTAWA, Ont., June 8.—When the house of commons met to-day, before the orders for the the day were called the hon. minister of militia said he has just received two telegrams conveying the tidings of the safety of the prisoners in Big Bear's hands. The first was from Fort Pitt via Straubenzie's station, as follows:

FORT PITT, June 8.—News just received that McKay and eight scouts of Gen. Strange have brought in Mrs. Delaney. Mrs. Gowanlock, eight men, five halfbreeds and two Wood Crees, who were in camp by themselves. The breeds say they have been prisoners and one of the Crees is the man who let Mr. and Mrs. Quinney and the other thirteen men escape. We go on to-morrow after Big Bear and shall keep up communication with Fort Pitt.

FRED. MIDDLETON.

The second despatch reads:

STRAUBENZIE STATION, June 7,

via Fort Pitt, June 6

Have opened a telegraph office about 40 miles from here. Gen. Middleton is after Big Bear. Gen. Strange is near Frog Lake. The following prisoners came in yesterday; Mrs. Delaney and Mrs. Gowanlock, Dufresne, Simpson, Gladue, wife and one child; Mozeau, wife and four children; Pritchard, wife and eight children; Alfred Smith, wife and four children, Hazil, wife and one child, A. Drenan, Abraham Motts, wife and six children; Gregorie Dinavie, Peter Blondoin, Henry Dufresne, two of Simpson's step-sons, two Indians and two squaws. The prisoners are all well. VAN STRAUBENZIE.

FROG LAKE.

GEN. STRANGE IN NEED OF MOUNTED MEN--FIND AN INDIAN PROVISION CACHE.

FROG LAKE, June 5th, via BATTLEFORD, June 8th.—Gen. Strange's column arrived here this evening. We are taking forced marches in order to head off Big Bear, who is thought to be making for Cold Lake. where he has supplies cached. Capt. Vallamey's and Smiths companies, Winnipeg, light infantry, are with us, having arrived from Edmonton. The infantry force, including two companies of the 65th Battalion, numbers of about three hundred and twenty-five strong; badly in need of mounted men, the force having only 85, Gen. Steele's mounted men being with Gen. Middleton, who is following Big Bear's trail. The men are in good health, and will follow the Indians to the North Pole if necessary.

PROVISIONS FOUND.

We discovered an Indian cache near the trail to day, and secured fifty sacks of flour and thirteen sides of bacon. The scouts just in report on signs of the enemy. The weather is wet and cold.

The "Buzz Saw" Newspaper.

The May number of Lam Smith's Philadelphia Herald literally sparkles with dynamical and electrical exposures of pernicious newspapers, frauds, quacks and humbugs that infest our land to the detriment of legitimate journalism and business and the morals of our boys and girls. Editor Smith prefers serious charges against Gov. Bunn, of Idaho, and calls on President Cleveland for Bunn's removal. Anthony Comstock, Secretary of the N. Y. S. for the S. of V., is again offered $1800 to explain his connection with W. L. Allen, a notorious fraud and legally indicated blackmailer. The Texas press and officials are appealed to to drive Byron H. Van Raub, of Leon Springs, Texas, from that State. It appears that Van Raub, is trying to establish a harem. "Dr." W. H. Hale, publisher of "Health and Home." Washington, D. C., is again fully exposed. Algernon H. Wilcox, Tom Chichester and "Dr." Fry, all of Philadelphia, are given "Thirty Days Notice" to discontinue their demoralizing "Pennyroyal and Tansy Pill" business. Smith declares if they do not heed his warning he will arrest and prosecute them himself. The Louisiana Lottery Co. is again exposed. The stories, poetry, and puzzle department of The Herald are excellent. Smith scored his forty-sixth victory on the 21st of May, before Judge Arnold, the jury awarding Smith $25,000 damages.

Married Some Kind of a Girl.

"I see," said one high school girl to another, "that Henry Sigourney, of Boston, has married one of the coryphees in a Boston theater. I wonder what a coryphee is?"

"I don't know; but I reckon it must be some kind of a girl. I don't think he would marry anything else," was the logical reply.—Kentucky State Journal.

ANGUS PLEWES.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

Monday last (fair day) was a busy day in town.

Wilmot, Pickell & Co. have been doing a large business in buying hogs in this locality during the past week. On Thursday last there was almost a continuous squeal of the hog as they were being drove in from north, east, south and west. We understand about $1000 was paid out for hogs here that day. The McMillan Bro's drew, for some 20 odd hogs, about $225.00.

Mr. James Leopard, father of the deceased wife of the late Cook Teets, received the sad intelligence by telegram on Saturday night last of the terrible fate of his daughter who lived in Barrie, who, with her four children were burned to death in their beds on Friday night last, her husband barely escaping with his life. He awoke in the night to find the bed on which they were sleeping a sheet of flames. No doubt the bereaved family will have the sympathy of the entire neighborhood in which they live.

Mr. M. Richardson and J. W. Armstrong spent some days at Conference in Owen Sound during its present sitting. Owing to the absence of the pastor, Rev. Mr. McDowell, at Conference, his pulpit has been occupied by local brethren. On Sabbath morning last the brother who was to preach failed to fill his appointment, when Dr. Christoe was called upon to fill the vacancy, and although quite unprepared, the Dr. gave a most excellent address. In the evening Mr. J. P. Nicholson delivered a very carefully prepared sermon on the destruction of Sodom.

The Gospel Army has arrived and opened fire on our town. A number of friends accompanied them from Durham on Monday. In the evening they marched our streets with banner and music, and held their first meeting in the Town Hall in the evening. The Hall was filled to the doors.

Osprey.

From our own correspondent.

The cheese factory at Feversham is doing a good business, and Mr. Henderson, the proprietor, expects the business to continue increasing.

Mr. Mitchell, shoemaker, removed from Feversham last week.

Mr. Chas. Neil and Mr. Geo. Lush, 8th con., each lost a valuable mare last week.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

Business rather dull at present.

Farmers are through seeding around here, and crops look well. Surely "Jack" won't come this year and nip them; but he cannot be trusted.

On Wednesday, June 3rd, a baseball match was played between, Maxwell club and the Feversham boys. The latter was whipped badly, another challenge has been received from the Flesherton boys, and has been accepted; the match to be played on Friday next on the Maxwell grounds.

CHANGED HANDS.—As Mr. John Miller is bound for Alpena next week, the house and lot formerly occupied by him has changed into the hands of Mr. D. A. Holman of the "big boot," an energetic young business man of this place, and he is preparing to erect a large store and dwelling thereon with brick veneering. Well done for D. A.

Mr. John Hamlin has moved from this place, and has taken up his abode in Duntroon.

Weather mild and warm.

Town and country gardens looking fine. A big crop of fruit expected this season.

Steamer Athabasca left Saturday on time with a heavy cargo of freight and some very fine horses for mounted police in the North-West, also a large number of passengers.

Steamer Alberta arrived Sunday morning at 9 a. m. with 60 first and 61 second-class passengers and 26,335 bushels wheat, besides 85 tons deck freight, chiefly flour.

Steamer City of Owen Sound arrived in port last week to undergo repairs after spending a winter on the rock at Michipicoton. She will run between here and Duluth.

A GOLDEN OPINION.

Mrs. Wm. Allan, of Acton, declares that Hagyard's Yellow Oil is the best household remedy in the world for colds, croup, sore throat, burns, scalds and other painful complaints. Her opinion is well founded.

From Prince Albert, N. W. T.

The following is a synopsis of a private letter from Mr. Wm. Donnelly of Toronto, 10th Royals, brother of the late Samuel Donnelly of Glenelg:

May 21st, 1885.

In pleasing health and happiness I write you a few lines. Am out here on the war expedition, and pleased with the tour. I had wished to see this country for some time past, and this suits my wish admirably. We are camped here at present and not aware of any rebel force near or we would be marched out to disperce them. I have no idea where we will be moved to next, or when for home; am contented, however, and would be satisfied to return home any time. I was in two battles, first at Fish Creek, but came up late; heard a few bullets whiz past. I was also in the battle at Betauche for four days, the last of which we made the memorable charge over the pits. I received a slight flesh cut from a bullet on the top of my head, but continued the chase.

The country here looks pleasing. We had remarkable good weather for the season during our march up.

Sad End.

A WOMAN AND FOUR CHILDREN BURNED TO DEATH.

Special dispatch to the Standard.

Barrie, June 6th.

Mr. Wonch is an industrious man who has lived on the Mill road some time, his wife a kind hearted Irish woman, daughter of J. Leppard, near Markdale, Grey Co., and four children comprised the family.

Mr. Wonch, the husband, had been away working all day, when he returned home, at tea his wife told him that a coat of his that hung up in the room showed signs of fire in the lining and wadding and that she had taken it outside and put the fire out. How the fire came in the coat is a mystery. Mr. Wonch took down the coat and examined it thoroughly, but could discover no signs of fire. Putting it on he went out and fed the pigs and completed the other chores for the night. On his return to the house he again examined the coat, and being satisfied that it was all right, hung it up on a nail. He spent the evening in the house writing; about 10 o'clock the children were put to bed by the mother. The baby, six weeks old, slept with father and mother. Being tired Mr. Wonch soon fell asleep. The next thing he remembers was waking to find the whole room and the bed he was lying on one mass of flames, burning like fury. He jumped up, cried out to his wife and tried to catch hold of her to pull her off the bed, but she seemed to be unconscious. The flames bursting out of the bed, completely enveloped her. Within his grasp he then grabbed the bed-tick and pulled when it parted, the straw burning furiously. The floor gave away and it was a rush for life. Not being able to reach the door he jumped through the window, his face and hands terribly burned, one ear hanging singed, his whiskers burned off. He then ran across the street yelling and waking some neighbors who hurried out, but all too late; the fire burned furiously, nothing could save those left behind. The husband offered them everything, but powerless to save the mother and children. When the morning came and the fire subsided, the remains of the wife and four children were found in the cellar, the flesh being almost completely burned up. The remains of the five were picked up and placed in one coffin. The sad affair has cast a gloom over the town, and Mr. Wonch has the deepest sympathy in his great troubles. Several rumors are afloat as to the origin of the fire, such as smouldering in the coat; but this can never be accounted for. Several townsmen saw the fire, but as it was a mile out they thought it was a log or stump burning and paid no particular attention to it.

BREAKING INTO GAOL.—We have often heard of people attempting to break out of gaol, though an attemp to break in is a rarity; but to Governor Miller belongs the honor of conducting such a model establishment that some people are apparently anxious to get into it. Between two and three last Friday morning, Mrs. Macdonald, wife of the turnkey, was aroused by hearing steps on the roof. Getting up she looked out of the window and saw a man on the top of the building, about to decend into the interior courtyard communicating with the gaoler's office and the residence of gaoler and turnkey. Thinking they were prisoners escaping, (for the steps indicated more than one,) she gave the alarm, whereupon they went back over the roof, and made their escape by the gate leading from the roof of the turnkey's house. Mr. Miller at once looked to the prisoners in the cells, but found them all safely locked up. On examining outside the means by which enterance could be obtained soon became apparent. The wall had been scaled by means of a plank, and access once gained to the turnkey's yard the rest was easy. The bold adventurers are supposed to be some who were familiar with the turnkey's house and thought they could make a hall there, even if they had to break into the gaol enclosure to do it. But they didn't find the inmates napping.—O. S. Times.

A WIDE SPREAD EVIL.

The great source of consumption and of ugly sores is scrofula in the blood. Burdock Blood Bitters purify the entire system and cure scrofula, as well as the more common blood humors.

FASHIONABLE POISONING.

Morphine and Ether in the Parisian Club Room and Opera Box.

Would you believe that some persons take pleasure in poisoning themselves simply because their neighbors do it? This is, however, a fact recently affirmed and proved by Dr. Regnard at the Sorbonne. The large audience of the Association Scientifique seemed to be completely dismayed at his revelations. Upon a large table in the amphitheatre were disposed a series of the most brilliant-looking caskets, plated with gold and silver, or perhaps of bronze, or inlaid with pearl. You would think, to see them, that you had a grand display of jewelry laid out before you. Such is not, however, the case. What you see is only an admirable collection of syringes. Some of them are enclosed in elegant cigarette cases, others are contained in charming little reticules, or in smelling-salts flasks. The cases serve to mask the instrument and the little vial which goes with it.

And wherefore these instruments? M. Regnard tells us that these luxurious implements are designed for the pleasure-loving people of Paris, who can no longer find in the theatre, or in gambling, horse racing, and other dissipations, the emotional excitements which they seek for so eagerly. These are the persons who purchase these marvellous caskets, which will at least lend them a temporary elasticity, although they can hardly rejuvenate the used-up brain. The vials contain a solution of morphine, and the syringes are used to inject it beneath the skin. Do you wish to know how a person becomes a morphiomaniac in the world of fashion? He tells his friend that he has tired of his habitual pleasures; that the greatest of them have lost their power to please. The friend replies that he had been in a similar condition. He had found consolation, however, in morphine; the drug has restored his tone and brilliancy. No more than this is necessary to make a morphiomaniac out of a blase man or a nervous woman. But as it is necessary to dissimulate and preserve a sentiment of careless ease in the pursuance of the dread habit, one of the luxurious caskets is purchased. While, therefore, the ordinary syringe used for the purpose may be had for a dollar and a quarter, the fashionable syringes will sometimes realize as high as $70. They are often given as New Year's presents. It is with these instruments, which they always carry with them, that gentlemen at their club or ladies in their opera boxes revive the almost extinguished sensations and sentiments of the past.

Instead of morphine injections some persons inhale ether. People become etheromaniacs for the same reasons that they become morphiomaniacs. It is a vogue, a fantasy, which provokes these abominable intoxications. There are also morphiomaniacs who habituate themselves by degrees to the poison to diminish the violent pains of gastralgia, or facial neuralgia; and we have a whole category of persons who poison themselves simply as a matter of caprice. Dr. Regnard divides morphiomaniacs into two groups—those who poison themselves honestly and those who do so because it is the fashion. The deplorable facility with which it is possible to procure solutions of morphine favors the developement of this new malady among the idle and degenerated beings of high society. Dr. Regnard abused these neuropathic persons in the wittiest way. Nevertheless I recognized several morphiomaniacs in the audience, who applauded the lecturer in the heartiest manner.

An Artificial Sun.

Mr. J. Bourdais has just presented to the Society of Civil Engineers a project that he has been studying, and that concerns the erection of a masonry tower 300 meters (984 feet) in height.

After an examination of the different geometric profiles realizable Mr. Bourdais has adopted the column as being more apt than any other form to satisfy the rules of æsthetics, and also as being the most stable. In fact the highest chimney in the world, that of Saint Rollox, near Glasgow, 433 feet in height, has been submitted to numerous storms without suffering therefrom, and as other chimneys exposed to great wind pressure have never given rise to any accident, it results that a cylindrical form is the one that should be adopted.

In short, Mr. Bourdais' structure would consist of a base 216 feet in height, in which would be established a permanent museum of electricity. Above this would rise a six story column surmounted by a roof forming a promenade and capable of accommodating 2,000 persons. The central granite core, 60 feet in diameter, would be surrounded with an ornamental framework of iron faced with copper. This would be divided into six stories, each containing sixteen rooms, 16 feet in height and 50 feet square, designed for aerotherapic treatments. Patients could come here to find a purity of air that is usually met with only on mountains.

The central core would be hollow, so as to permit of all sorts of scientific experiments being tried. Finally, at the summit would be placed an enormous electric lamp, studied by Messrs. Bourdais and Sebillot that would cast a flood of light over the entire city. This lamp would have an intensity equal to that of 2,000,000 Carcel burners. The lamp would be surmounted by a statue representing the genius of science. This would make the entire structure 1,180 feet high.

"Prisoner, the officer testifies that you were drunk on the street. Common drunks are good for thirty days. Next." "But, your Honor, I am not a common drunkard. I belong to the better classes." "Well, in that case I'll withdraw my former sentence and call it sixty days. Next case."

A REMARKABLE DOG STORY.

A Dog Thrown Overboard at Sea Finds His Master at Castle Garden.

Christian Augenschlager, a German immigrant, who arrived in New York by the steamer "Westphalia" from Hamburg, the other day, met with such a startling surprise when he landed at Castle Garden that he fainted dead away, and it is feared that he will have to be sent back to Germany under the law which prohibits the Commissioners of Emigration from receiving insane immigrants. When Augenschlager went on board the steamer at Hamburg he succeeded in smuggling his favorite dog "Blucher" into the ship. One day the dog escaped the steerage and was found by the cook in the galley helping himself to a large piece of meat. The cook seized and threw him overboard despite his master's tears. It was during the forenoon of Thursday, May 21, that Augenschlager saw his dog thrown overboard. On stepping ashore at Castle Garden, his attention was at once attracted to a dog that lay curled up and trembling on one corner of the dock and which looked remarkably like his lost dog. "Komst du heir, Blucher," said Augenschlager, with a half-stifled voice. The dog responded by creeping up to him. Augenschleger threw up his hands, exclaiming, "Mein Lieber Gott, it is Blucher's ghost," and then swooned. He was cared for by a fellow passenger, as was also the dog, which had manifested no surprise at all on meeting his master under such strange circumstances. The unfortunate immigrant's talk became very wild and incoherent, and it is thought that he will become permanently insane. News of the remarkable occurrence spread rapidly, and finally came to the ears of Ernest Picard, who was a passenger on the French steamer "Normandie," which had arrived a few hours ahead of the "Westphalia." Picard said that on the afternoon of Thursday, May 21, the "Normandie," ran into a whole "school" of icebergs. The weather was foggy and the ship lay too for several hours. While the ship was at a standstill the attention of some of the sailors was attracted to a strange-looking animal in the water, which was taken for a seal brought from the Arctic regions by one of the bergs. The animal swam straight up to the ship's side, and a sailor got down and easily pulled it in. The animal was then found to be a German dog, and, what seemed strangest of all, he had in his paws a beef's liver and lungs, commonly called the "pluck." It was Augenschlager's Blucher and the buoyant "pluck" which he had stolen from the galley of the "Westphalia" had helped him to keep afloat for nearly six hours. The "Normandie," after getting clear of the icebergs, passed the "Westphalia," and Blucher was landed at Castle Garden with the rest of the passengers, in advance of those who came in the steamer from Hamburg. He refused to follow Picard, who had "adopted" him, and remained on the dock as if he expected his old master to arrive in due time.

NOTHING NEW.

Paul Boyton's Joke Antedated Over One Hundred Years.

Paul Boyton's recent prank in placing a dummy torpedo against the British war ship Garnet in New York harbor brings to mind Sergeant Lee's attempt to blow up Lord Howe's flagship, the Eagle, in the same waters in 1776. He used a torpedo boat invented by David Bushnell, afterwards a Captain in the patriot army. It had been tried with success experimentally, and gave promise of being useful in serious warfare. The first opportunity for such use occurred when the British fleet took possession of New York harbor. The Bushnell boat was more like a barrel than a boat. It was of oak, iron-banded and only large enough for one person. When floating upright, the navigator's head was a little above the level of the water. By means of two force pumps worked by the occupant's feet, the vessel could be made to sink or rise in the water by forcing water out or in, and so changing its specific gravity. Its progress horizontally was governed by two revolving paddles in front turned by a crank inside. The torpedo was fastened to the back of the boat by a screw, the release of which set in motion a clock connected with a gun lock and flint. After the predetermined interval of time had elapsed, the clock would strike and ignite the powder.

The torpedo carried by Lee against the Eagle was charged with 150 pounds of powder (some say 130 pounds), and the clock was set to explode the charge in thirty minutes after the torpedo was placed. Lee was towed to the neighborhood of the fleet by a party in whale boats, and then proceeded to attack the fleet alone. He succeeded in reaching the Eagle, a 64 gun ship, undetected, and spent a long time in a vain attempt to fasten the torpedo to her bottom with hooks and screws, a band of iron at the edge of the copper sheathing proving an especially serious obstacle. As daylight approached, he was compelled to leave the fleet and return to the city. Off Governor's Island he was intercepted by a British barge, when, to avoid capture, he exploded his torpedo, escaping from his pursuers during the panic which the explosion excited. If the torpedo had been provided with a strong magnet, the strip of iron which thwarted him would have insured the success of his undertaking, and the use of torpedoes in naval warfare might have been hastened half a century.

Doctor—"Your wife is in a very critical state, and I should recommend you to call in some specialist to consult on the case." Husband—"There, you see, doctor, I was right again! I told my wife long ago she ought to get proper medical advice, but she thought you might get offended!"

A PHANTOM ENGINEER.

Come back from the Grave to Save a Train.

It's only a ghost story. Jim Pace told it one dark night to a little crowd that gathered in the round-house. Jim's a veteran of the rail. He was seventy-two last week, and has pulled a throttle as many times as any living man. "How he used to make old Six walk" is the common expression wherever Jim's name is mentioned in a crowd. He loved the engine better than anything in the world and it nearly broke his honest heart to give her up. Jim never had an accident, but that wasn't his "fault," he always said. "It wasn't me that missed 'em. It wuz ole Six. She wouldn't ever go into the back end of a train o' the blackest night an' all lights out. You couldn't drive her. Couldn't git 'er nigh 'er broken bridge or trestle or washout."

Jim never got any further with his explanation until that night at the round-house when some of the boys begged him to tell them why old Six wouldn't get into trouble.

As I've quit the track, boys," he began, "I don't min' tellin' yer jest why. Reckon y' all know I took to firin' with Dave Griffin, an' all I know about er engine I learnt from him. He was like er father ter me, an when he died I lost the best frien' a lone boy ever had. Lost, did I say? No not lost, but——"

He looked out into the night and the little audience waited for him to finish the sentence. But he went on anew.

"I worked mighty hard an' faithful, but I wuz 'n ole man when they gimme the best engine on the road. You've all heard of ole Six? She's scrap-iron ten year ago. I had run along for er good many years 'thout er accident of any sort an'—y'all know how 't is—had got sorter careless, like. I knowed every rail an' crosstie in the road, to say nothin' of bridges an' trestles an' culverts, an' could shet my eyes an' tell where I wuz by the way ole Six carried herself. Well, one night—it's the darkest night I ever saw; the moon an' stars seemed as if they'd gone out for good an' the black, thick clouds set so close to the earth that yer could feel 'em as yer ploughed through 'em. Head-lights did'nt amount to much them days, nohow, but that night mine didn't do no good at all. Sump'n must've blacked the glass, for I couln't see ten steps ahead of the pilot, an' what dim light ther wus flashed sickly against er solid front uf cloud. By an' by it began to rain. The water came down like the bottom had fell out, an' in less'n five minutes I could hear it roarin' in the ditches alongside the track. The noise it made tearin' through the culverts drowned the rattle er the train. I hope'll never see sech another flood. Lightnin' every minute an' less split the darkness on all sides, an' the thunder boomed 'mong the clouds as if the old earth was explodin' from the inside fires. At every boom the clouds gave down more rain, an' old Six trembled as if she was skeered to go ahead.

"On we went, up hill an' down hill, forty miles an hour an' no stops fur way stations. We climbed the summit at Pinson's an' flashed by like a skeered deer, on down the long grade towards Dyke's Run an' the big trestle. I knowed every stick o' timber in that trestle, I knowed it's the best en the road, an' I wasn't afered to go over it er mile er minute, so I didn't slack up. I leaned back in my seat an' listened to the ragin' storm outside. My fireman had opened the furnace door an' stepped back in the tender for some coal, when suddenly a big white-headed man got between me and the red light of the furnace fire an' leaned over toward the front o' the cab. One long arm reached out, an' takin' hold o' the throttle shut of the steam. The other pulled three long blasts of the whistle, the signal for brakes, an' then before I could say a word the man caught the lever in both hands an' reversed her clean back to the lowest notch. The same long arm again reached the throttle an' pulled her wide open. Ole Six's drivers began to spin around backward an' the train began to slack up. Jumpin' up I made a lunge at the ole man, but instead of hittin' him I fell flat across the cab. I got up an' saw him still standin' there lookin' out ahead. I throwed my arms around him to pull him away, but they passed right through his body an' fell at my side. He turned an' looked at me, an' I saw it was Dave—Dave Griffin, come back from the grave.

When my senses come back the train I was standin' still an' Dave was gone. I nowed there was somethin' wrong ahead so I got out an' walked down the road. A hundred feet away I came to er great gap in the track—the big trestle was gone! The creek was growed to a mighty river roarin,' rushin' and gurglin' over the piles. Boys I didn't feel skeered then, but somehow I couldn't stan' up. My legs felt weak an' give way under me an' I set down on the track in the pourin' rain. I—I didn't go to sleep, I couldn't ha' done that, but my fireman said he had to shake me purty hard to git me up. No, boys, I didn't run ole Six. It's Dave an' me together that's always pulled her through.

The Newspaper.

"Our theory of the newspaper," says Charles Dudley Warner, "is that it is very much what the the public want it and make it and we believe that, as a rule, the tone of a newspaper is higher than that of a majority of its readers. The editor feels inevitably the responsibility of his position, and, no doubt, would often like to make a better newspaper than he does make. But editors (and especially publishers) are human, and many of them have a notion that they must live somehow, and that a little lowering of tone is profitable."

WHEN KHARTOUM FELL.

The Frightful Scenes of Massacre—Women Taken as Slaves.

Two men have arrived in London whose story throws some fresh light on the capture of Khartoum. They were soldiers in Gordon's army, taken at the time and sold as slaves, but who ultimately escaped. Their names are Said Abdullah and Jacoob Mahomet. They say: "Men were slain shrieking for mercy, when mercy was not in the hearts of our savage enemies. Women and children were robbed of their jewels of gold and jewels of silver, of their bracelets, necklaces of precious stones, and carried off to be sold to the Bishareen merchants as slaves.

"Yes, and white women, too—Egyptians and Circassians who wore the burko over their faces, the rabtah and the turbah, and the kurs on their heads—ladies clad in silk and satin gibbehs and saltahs. Mother and daughter alike were dragged off from their homes of comfort. These were widows, wives, and daughters of Egyptian officers, some of whom had been killed with Hicks Pasha; wives and children of Egyptian merchants formerly rich, owning ships and mills gardens and shops. These were sold afterward, some for 340 thaleries or more, some for 250, according to age and good looks. And the poor black women already slaves, and their children, were taken off too. These were sold, too, for a hundred, eighty, or seventy thaleries.

"Their husbands and masters were slain before their eyes; and yet I hear it is said there was no massacre at the taking of Khartoum! They lie who say so, and are in league with Mahomet Achmet. You must not believe all that men coming from Omdurman tell you. Mahomet Achmet Dervishes send you false reports of everything, and you believe them; then they laugh. This fighting and spilling of blood continued till the sun rode high in the sky—red, yet darkened by smoke and dust. There was riot and clamor, hubbub and wrangling over spoil; cursing was heard till the hour of evening prayer.

"But the Muezzin was not called; neither were any prayers offered up to the mosque on that dark day in the annals of Khartoum. The history of those scenes will not be written on its records; for all scrolls and papers and books in the archives were destroyed and scattered.

The Kremlin.

I had heard and read a great deal about the Kremlin, but had no distinct idea of what it was like until I saw it. I had no idea of its vast extent; that within its walls were contained palaces, churches, monastreies, and arsenals. The walls surrounding all these structures are of vast extent, height, and thickness. At frequent intervals are watch-towers of fanciful design, and the battlements are all loopholed for the discharge of missiles. Inside is the Red Square, so called from the thousands of judical murders there committed, and in the centre of it is a group of statuary called "The Prince and Moujik." There are many entrances into the Kremlin, but the principal one is the Redeemer Gate, which is considered a holy place, on account of a certain famous statue which finds lodging in one of its niches. When passing through this portal every one is supposed to take off his hat. The convent of the Ascension is a strange freak of architectural fancy, but beautiful withal. Near it is a place where the holy oil is manufactured, with which all Russian children are baptized. Around the arsenal are hundreds of cannons taken from the French, and there I saw that immense piece of ordnance called the King of Cannon, but which like the King of Bells, also in the Kremlin, is fit for nothing but show. The Ivan tower and the cathedral, with its numberless costly thrones, are both monuments of human skill. It is in this cathedral that the Czars of Russia crown themselves, no other hands than their own being considered fit for the holy office. The palace, which has an unpretentious appearance outside, being coated with stucco, is of great extent. it contains the St. George's Hall and numberless suites of apartments for the guests of royalty. The throne of the Czar was shown to me, and as I stood looking at it I almost trembled as I thought of the undisputed sway, of the limitless power of life and death over a hundred millions of people, which he who had occupied it a few days before held.—John L. Stoddard.

The Sydney Volunteers.

Mr. John Remington, of Sydney, writing to his brother in Manchester in reference to the departure of the Sydney volunteers for the Soudan, mentions the fact that the wives and children of the men were provided for during the absence of the contingent. "The merchants of Sydney," he says, "subscribed eatables and drinkables to the amount of £23,000 for the use of the troops on board ship. A great many of the privates were wearing two or three medals for Egyptian and Indian services. They took on board 250 picked horses. I saw one big fellow amongst them, his wife carrying his rifle and he the baby; he stood 6ft 5½in, and belonged formerly to the first Life Guards. Everyone had their eyes on this trio. The grandest sight the people of Sydney ever saw was the 180,000 people wishing this gallant band God-speed. Balcony windows brought a guinea a seat. Just fancy the Queen's troops going on board with champagne to drink and cigarettes to smoke, free of all expense. One enterprising tobacconist made a donation of 20,000 cigarettes and a ton of mixed tobacco; another 7000 bottles of gingerbeer and lime juice; with all sorts of biscuits, tinned meats and fish. A large American firm gave 4000 cases of tinned salmon.

Metz and the defendant a [man] by the name of Hylebrone, [also] The dispute between the parties [has] ference to a large farm located in the eastern part of the state. The [defendant] in the action has been living on the [farm] for the past five years, and is known [to] the neighbors as Joseph Metz. The [case] is a long one, and adds another [sensation] tion in support of the declaration [that] truth is stranger than fiction. The [story] of the plantiff to his lawyer is as [follows]:

About nine years ago Joseph Metz, a Teuton, residing in the southern part of Germany, decided to emigrate to America. In the summer of 1875 he, with his wife Catharine and his five sturdy children started for the United States. From the sale of his real estate he realized about $30,000, and with this sum he was able to buy a well-tilled farm with a comfortable dwelling in the eastern part of the state, and still have a nest amount of cash on sides. He lived on the farm for five years, but finally the desire to die in his native land took such a hold on him that he and his wife made a deed of the farm to the supposed eldest son, the present occupant, and returned to Germany. The wife and the four younger children accompanied him. With the remaining money in his possession he bought a farm in the vicinity of his old home, which at his death, which occurred about a year ago, he bequeathed to the younger members of the family. The strangest part of this narrative transpired after his return to Germany. It appeared that at the time young Metz, the present occupant of the farm, was born there lived in the vicinity of Metz's home a woman by the name of Mrs. Hylebrone. She was employed at various times as nurse in Metz's household, and was present at the time young Metz was born. This woman made some startling disclosures to the old man Metz just before her death, which in substance were as follows:

At the time of the birth of the child she also had an infant son, and although she was very poor she desired that her son should be raised in affluence. As she had the entire control of young Metz she one night shortly after the infant's birth substituted her own child and reared young Metz to raise. The fraud was never discovered this, and young Hylebrone grew up to manhood as Joseph Metz. She said that she always regretted the act, but was afraid to tell the truth. The real Metz has always been known as her son. The scenes at the father's death-bed when these facts were brought out were affecting in the extreme. The father refused at first to believe the woman's statement and to recognize the young man as his son, but finally, by the cumstantial evidence, the truth of the woman's statement dawned upon him, and he received his newly-found son. The revelation was as unexpected to the son as it was to the father.

A few days later Mr. Metz died, and after waiting a short time in the old country the son came to Pittsburg to commence proceedings against the possessor of the estate in America. He claims that he can eject the present occupant, as the deed was made to Joseph Metz, and has the facts in his possession to prove that he is the party intended. Hylebrone was naturally very much surprised when the foregoing statement was made to him. He refused to believe it, and declares that there is a conspiracy to defraud him of his rights. His mother is also in the case, having left Germany in company with Metz. She says that she is very sorry for what she has done, and it will be her constant work for the remainder of her existence to bring matters out right. When the case comes to trial it will probably be one of the most sensational ones ever tried in this state. Mrs. Hylebrone, the author of the deception, is a good-looking German woman, and appears to be about 40 years of age. She says her only desire in doing what was to benefit her child, and that she did not realize at the time the terrible wrong she was committing against the latter. The farm is worth $25,000, as it is in fine condition. Metz is married, but has no children.

A Sly Old Rat.

Two or three mornings ago one of the citizens missed five of his young chickens. Lifting a board near the abode of the chickens, he scared a large rat away. He found the missing chickens dead and partially eaten. He found, also, a nest of thirteen active, healthy little rats, only a day or two old. He took them away determined that they should not grow up to kill his chickens. He disposed of five of them by feeding them to the cat, and saved the rest for some purpose, he did not know for what. He happened to be speaking of the matter to a friend, and the latter suggested that if he put the little rats into a box and put them into the trap the old rat would find them and come after them, and if the trap were not baited he could capture the old rat, and thus destroy the family. He thought that a good idea and tried it. The next morning he found the trap sprung, but the old rat therein. He rushed to the trap, satisfied with the result of his experiment. The old rat saw him coming, and, putting forth extra efforts, succeeded in escaping from the trap. Then she looked for the little ones, thinking she would set the trap again in the same place when he discovered that the old rat had carefully removed the little ones to a place of safety before running any risk herself and now had gone to join them.

A QUESTION OF [illegible]

Two Young Men Go to Law to Decide [illegible]
Which Is Which.

The papers in a very strange case [illegible] being prepared by a well-known lawyer in Pittsburg. The case is an action of ejectment, in which the plaintiff is John [illegible]. Metz and the defendant a young man by the name of Hylebrone, also known as [illegible]. The dispute between the parties is in reference to a large farm located in the eastern part of the state. The defendant in the action has been living on the farm for the past five years, and is known among the neighbors as Joseph Metz. The case is a long one, and adds another illustration in support of the declaration that truth is stranger than fiction. The story of the plaintiff to his lawyer is as follows:

About nine years ago Joseph Metz, a [illegible] button, residing in the southern part of Germany, decided to emigrate to America. In the summer of 1875 he, with his wife Catharine and his five sturdy boys, started for the United States. From the sale of his real estate he realized about $30,000, and with this sum he was able to buy a well-tilled farm with a comfortable dwelling in the eastern part of the state, and still have a neat amount of cash left. He lived on the farm for five years, when finally the desire to die in his native land took such a hold on him that in the spring of 1880 he and his wife made a deed of the farm to the supposed eldest son, the present occupant, and returned to Germany. The Old Mill.

From the brow of the hill I look
Through a lattice of boughs and leaves
At the old gray mill, with its gambrel roof,
And the moss on its rotting eaves.
And the clatter that jars its walls,
And the rushing water's sounds;
I see the black flats rise and fall
As the wheel goes slowly round.

I was there often when I was young,
With my sweetheart the miller's girl,
I walked with Nellie, the miller's girl,
And waited my turn at the door.
While she to and her ringlets brown,
Arranged and chatted so free.
I see, might stop or the wheel might go—
It was all the same to me.

Twenty years since last I stood
On the spot where I stand to-day,
Nellie is wed and the miller is dead,
The mill and I are gray.
And all we fall in or run and wreck,
Or form one of toil are found,
The race and the stream flows,
And the wheel move, slowly round.

CALM AFTER STORM.

Frenchman's eyes roll upward in [illegible] ecstasy; and he answers with [illegible] prompt itude—

[illegible] is the dream of my life, madame, [illegible]ation that alone excuses my speaking [illegible] the young person before I had conversed [illegible] you."

[illegible] Smerdon listens with a pang of [illegible] With what an ideal lover fate has [illegible]ed that chit of a Cressida! she [illegible]; when would her stolid British [illegible]chieve such a bow or turn such a [illegible] as that!

Harriet, though a little relieved, is [illegible] means so unqualified in her ad[illegible]on.

[illegible] is dreadfully theatrical; but I [illegible] that's owing to his nationality, [illegible] cannot help it," is her mental [illegible]t; then she says aloud, with a [illegible] of the old scholastic severity—"It [illegible] very wrong and very ungentlemanly [illegible] we will not say any more of that."

[illegible]hank you, madame," the young [illegible]murmurs penitently; and, if the [illegible] gleams between the thick black [illegible] is rather mocking than remorseful, [illegible]actually hidden in a gracefully sub[illegible] bow.

[illegible]n I suppose you will have no ob[illegible] to marry her when my sister mar[illegible]. Osborne—that is to say, in three [illegible]m the present time?"

[illegible]ndies the dark handsome face [illegible] but can read there only undis[illegible]y; and, seeing that, she draws [illegible] breath of relief.

[illegible]y well, Monsieur St. Just," she [illegible]rending a large lean hand, which [illegible]ess and bows over, but does not [illegible]e offer to kiss. "I apologise for [illegible]ciences, and thank you for the [illegible]forward answers that have lifted [illegible]t from my mind. One question [illegible]nd I will call Cressida. Are you [illegible]nt able to support a wife?"

[illegible]sieur St. Just's frank smile and [illegible]shrug are as candidly conciliatory [illegible]are modest.

[illegible]Mamoselle Cressida has not been [illegible]in luxury," he says pleasantly. [illegible]all not shrine her like a princess, [illegible]all keep her from want. I have [illegible]t connections, and as many les[illegible] I choose to give. Ca suffit, n'est-ce [illegible]lame?"

[illegible]tainly,' says Miss Smerdon; and [illegible]cloud clears from her wrinkled [illegible]th the words, "And now, Mon[illegible] Just, I have a piece of news for [illegible] When Mrs. Leigh, Cressida's [illegible] died, she left in my hands seven [illegible] pounds, which sum was to be [illegible] the child's board and education. [illegible] spend it; and she would, of [illegible]e penniless now, but that Mr. [illegible]—"

[illegible]long and short of it is," John in[illegible]gruffly, "that, having brought [illegible]child from a baby, Miss Smerdon [illegible]n attached to her, and, as she [illegible]er sees her again, she makes her [illegible] present of her mother's little [illegible]—that's all. And, that being [illegible]ed, there's no need to make any [illegible]s about it."

[illegible]nal looker-on would have credit[illegible]ru qie red-faced man with the [illegible]generosity that really moves him; [illegible] the fine mask of Isidore suggests [illegible]e of the selfish elation he feels. [illegible]ite enough enamoured of Cressi[illegible]cate girlish beauty to take her [illegible] a dower; but the "few hun[illegible]s" which he now hears for the [illegible]e are an inestimable addition to [illegible]ms: and, even while in a few [illegible] well-chosen words he thanks [illegible] and madame for their generosi[illegible]thinking how gaily he and his [illegible]nglish wife will dissipate those [illegible]ndreds in the joyous honeymoon [illegible]some [illegible]hen Cressida is duly summoned, [illegible]es down with paler cheeks than [illegible]kes to see, and lovely, startled [illegible] seem to dread everything they [illegible]. She even shrinks from Isi[illegible]brace, when at last the lovers are [illegible]; and when, in ardent and af[illegible]e terms, he unfolds his plans to [illegible] stares at him for a moment in [illegible]nder, then breaks into a sudden [illegible]ring passion of childish tears.

[illegible]ot so soon, Monsieur—Isidore, [illegible]she cries. "They cannot mean [illegible]uld do such a dreadful—I mean [illegible]emn thing, in such a hurry."

[illegible]moment Isidore's handsome face [illegible]most ugly as he stands looking at [illegible]n bent golden head; but the [illegible]t distorts it passes in a second; [illegible]oes not lift her head, she only [illegible]nd the voice that pleads and ar[illegible]ngerous in its persuasive sweet[illegible]

[illegible] and eloquently he places the [illegible]fore her—shows her how utter[illegible]n the world she will be when [illegible]e Smerdon have left England for their antipodean home; then, as a contrast, how he will love and cherish and worship her; how she will grow in beauty and happiness and make the very joy of his exiled life.

The girl cannot resist such tender flattery; little by little, she yields, until at last, with a quick blush, a frightened upward glance and a long-drawn breath that is half sob, half sigh, she falters forth the "Yes" for which her ardent lover pleads—the "Yes" that seals her doom.

"Heaven bless you, my child!" Miss Smerdon says a little later, clasping the girl with real emotion. "You have made me almost happy!"

And, after that, Cressida can say nothing of her own foolish, childest fears.

CHAPTER IV.

"Whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder!"

It is all over now, and Harriet Smerdon draws a deep breath of relief. She feels as though a world's weight had been suddenly rolled from her shoulders, and she could rejoice in some great new freedom.

The past three weeks has been a busy time for her, but she regrets none of its work and none of its worry, as she stands in the full glow of the July sunshine that streams through the painted window of the church, and bathes the kneeling figures on the altar-steps in a warm rosy light—"two bridegrooms and two brides."

With the loss of that heavy burden of responsibility a long dormant sense of humour wakens in Harriet Smerdon's breast, and she smiles at the contrast of the two couples present. By Julia's desire, she and Cressida are dressed exactly alike, though neither wears the satin and orangeflowers proper to the occasion—a gray travelling-dress and hat, a knot of white flowers at the throat, that is all; and Julia is fully convinced that they look like twin sisters as they bow their heads for the nuptial benediction.

"It is a pity John is such an old frump!" she said reflectively, as she drew on her long daintily-tinted gloves and took a final survey of her own trim figure before departing for the church. "Of course he is the best old fellow in the world, and I love him dearly; but he has no idea of making the best of himself, and will be such a dreadful contrast to that handsome Isidore. Whereas I"—Miss Julia drew up her tiny figure, poising on the pointed tips of her French-gray boots, and smiled at the small person reflected in the mirror with ingenuous admiration. "Really, Harriet, would not any one think that Cressida and I were twins?"

Miss Smerdon, working against time at the moment, had left the words unanswered, and hardly heeded them then; but they come back to her now, and, gazing at the two faces under the soft droop of the long ostrich feathers, she mentally decides that Cressida looks fresher and fairer than ever, with the new solemnity that the sacred rite has brought to the lovely eyes and sweet sensitive lips, while poor Julia's face, with its self-conscious smile of antiquated coquetry, is only more wizened, pinched, and wan.

"Yet she has the better husband," she thinks, a little uncomfortably; for, do what she will, she cannot argue down the vague distrust with which the brilliant Frenchman inspires her, unjust as she honestly believes it to be. "John Osborne is a man in a thousand, and Julia has drawn a prize of which she does not dimly guess the worth. I wish my poor little Cressida had been as lucky, that she too had found an honest high-minded Englishman. Ah, there it is!" she breaks off with a forced laugh, unreasonably glad of an excuse to mock at her own forebodings. "It is a case of national prejudice, after all. I am a bigoted Briton, and cannot believe the men of any country equal to those of my own."

Certainly there is little to complain of in Isidore's conduct to-day. His dark eyes glow with tenderness and pride as they rest on the fair blushing face beside him, and he thanks Miss Smerdon for the priceless treasure she has confided to his charge in such well-turned phrases as John Osborne could assuredly never muster; but, even as she smiles hopefully, and assures herself that all is for the best, there is a lurking uneasiness in her thoughts that makes the wedding-cake bitter, and dims the sparkle of the champagne.

When the modest wedding-breakfast is over, John Osborne takes the brilliant bridegroom aside, and, in his own ponderous kindly fashion, bestows upon him the promised cheque and a word or two of well-meant advice.

"You will be kind to her, my boy," he finishes, a little awkwardly, shaking the slender hand with unconscious energy. "Miss Smerdon tells me she's as good a girl as ever lived, and she is a little unhappy about leaving her."

Isidore, who has taken the cheque with discreetly veiled eagerness and the advice with delicately accentuated respect, now gives the required promise with rapturous fervour.

"Her life shall be all sunshine," he begins, kissing his slender finger-tips in homage to the absent Cressida. But John, who is nothing if not practical, interrupts him with a short laugh.

"No life can be that, my lad," he says not unkindly, for he thinks the rhapsodical speech the honest outcome of a young lover's enthusiasm; "don't bring any cloud to overshadow or storms to wreck it yourself—and shelter her with your love in all the troubles Heaven may send her—that is all Cressida's best friends will ask of you, and so much, as an honest man, you are bound to do—and now—that's all I have to say."

"Quite enough too, mon vieux, since the rôle of 'pere noble' hardly suits your proportions," thinks the much-amused Isidore, though his face is composed to a look of deeply-moved interest; then they return to the room in which all the women are assembled, in which Cressida is bidding her life-long friends—her only friends—"good-bye."

She cries like a child over that parting, and Harriet Smerdon crushes down her own remorseful sorrow that the girl's first glimpse of her new life may not be all dimmed and blurred with tears. True, tears are permissible on a wedding day—Julia herself will shed a few orthodox drops presently; but it is a real tempest of grief that shakes this girl's slender frame. It almost seems as though some sudden foreboding seized her, as she clings round Miss Smerdon's neck in a passionate farewell.

"Heaven bless you, child, and good-bye," the latter says hurriedly, as John's heavy tread and Isidore's lighter foot-fall are heard in the hall. "Write to me if—if anything is wrong; you shall have our Australian address. Be happy, child—or you will lay a heavy burden upon me!"

"Here is your husband, Cressida," Miss Julia's voice breaks in sharply. Julia is rather indignant that Cressida's figure should be thrust so prominently into the foreground on her wedding-day. Cressida raises her tear-wet face, with a rather scared look, and the rest of the farewells are got through without further break-down

The carriage that is to take the young pair to the railway-station is at the door now, and Monsieur St. Just hurries his bride into it with a frank boyish impatience that brings a smile to John Osborne's face, a smile that lingers there when he returns to the house, a smile his sister-in-law finds infinitely reassuring.

"You think he will be kind to her, John? You think I shall not have to repent this day's work?" she asks with an eager anxiety that touches the soft warm heart that rough exterior hides.

"My dear Harriet, he will be a brute if he is anything else," Mr. Osborne says kindly. "I think they are facing the world with as fair a prospect of happiness as most young couples; the rest we must leave to Heaven. And now," he adds, ending the solemn pause with a faintly humorous smile, "don't let one bride and bridegroom absorb all your interest—you have still to dispose of Julia and me."

Miss Smerdon awakens from her reverie with a start. Yes, luckily for her, she has plenty of work to do. In one week from this day she will be on board the P. and O steamer, her back turned for ever on the old world, in which she has known so much of work and pain, in which her youth and middle life have passed wearily away—her face set steadily towards the new, wherein her latter days are to be spent in something like contentment and peace. In one week! She can hardly realise it! There is so much to do still, and she must do it alone, for John and Julia must perforce be allowed one honeymoon week at a fashionable watering-place.

John, indeed, to whom it is always easier to be useful than sentimental, would far rather spend his time cording boxes and writing labels, running errands and consulting time-tables and shipping-lists, than throwing pebbles into the sea and drawing cruel but involuntary comparisons between the pretty sentimental Julia of his youthful recollection and the faded affected Julia of existent fact—John would gladly have relinquished this supplementary journey; but Mrs. Osborne, who thinks her honors have been more than sufficiently clipped, asserts her right here, and of course has her way.

At last however it is all over; the school, as a school, ceases to be; the furniture is all sold, the last personal possession has been carted away; Beech House Academy stands empty and desolate, and Mr. and Mrs. Osborne are steaming away as fast as the good ship Adelaide can bear them to their new home beneath the Southern Cross.

A week or ten days passes, and Beech House remains unvisited of men. By-and-by the owner will put in a number of painters and paper-hangers and noisy workmen of every kind; then he will advertise "this desirable scholastic residence" in half-a dozen newspapers, and then, perhaps, some one will come forward and take possession of it, and new lives will be lived out in the shadow of the red-brick walls, even as the old have been. But, in the meantime, the room in which Rosamond Leigh closed her world-weary eyes—in which Cressida spent her earliest conscious days, is darkened and empty; the garden in which she met her lover is deserted, the flowers bloom and wither, the fruit ripens and drops unheeded on to the grass.

At last, while the owner is still absent on his summer holiday, and the reign of the workmen is yet to be, there comes a visitor to the empty house—a lady whose carriage drives slowly up and down the dusty suburban road—whose servants make anxious inquiries as to the whereabouts of the academy—a lady whose handsome proud face bears visible marks of disappointment when she hears that the school is closed and the Misses Smerdon have left, and when a glance at the palpably empty house confirms the story.

"Is there no one who can give me information?" she asks imperatively of the neighbor's servant, who stares in open admiration at the carriage and servants, at the rich satin of her questioner's dress, and the costly lace that wraps the slender upright figure and crowns the soft silvery white hair.

"Yes mum," the girl says dubiously, "there's the woman at the chandler's shop round the corner—Jamieson's you know. She's got the key, and shows the house, and in course you can question her; but, bless you, she can tell you no more than I—just about the two weddings—that's all!"

With the civility that thinly veils her impatience, the lady thanks her informant and drives on.

"Jamieson's" is easily found—a low-built old-fashioned shop, in which every moderate wish of the human heart is to be gratified, judging from the varied stock of goods its rather dingy windows display.

Mrs. Jamieson makes her appearance—a little sharp-faced red-nosed woman—who, with many bobs and curtseys to the owner of the splendid equipage and wearer of the handsome dress, submits herself willingly for cross-examination.

Yes, she knows Beech House; would the lady like to see it? Oh, it was a pretty house—a pity to see it lying empty like that? They should all miss the Misses Smerdon's school. Did she know the girls by sight? Oh, yes; they mostly bought their sweets here!—with a proud propriatorial glance at the sticky jars and cases—healthy, rosy, happy lasses they were too, who did a credit to their board and to any school. The Misses Smerdons were very particular, but very nice ladies—at least, the eldest was; the one that was married seemed rather silly.

So far Mrs. Jamieson—who is a born gossip and thoroughly enjoys the interview, more especially as it keeps that glorious carriage captive at her door—has rambled on uninterruptedly; but at the last phrase the lady looks up sharply.

"The one who was married?" she repeats, "I understood there were two brides?"

"So there were, ma'am, but only one Miss Smerdon. I was in the church and saw it all, though it wasn't much of a wedding. Miss Julia looked very well, though a little pinched and old-like. But the young lady, Miss Leigh—oh"—Mrs. Jamieson rolls her eyes in an ecstatic admiration she has no words to express—"she was lovely, and for all her gray dress and hat, the very picture of a bride!"

But the lady pays no heed to her ecstasies; her delicately-tinted face whitens a little, and the slender gray-gloved hand tightens on the rail of the chair.

"Miss—what?" she repeats in an oddly startled tone, "I did not quite catch the name."

"Miss Leigh—L-e-i-g-h the woman answers glibly; her Christian name was such a funny one too—Cressida!—I never heard the like of it before. My daughter tells me she has seen it in a play—and so she may, but it didn't sound Christian-like in a church. I thought it as outlandish and foreign as the bridegroom's—every bit!"

"She—Cressida—this Cressida Leigh has married a foreigner, then?"

"Oh, dear, yes, ma'am—the French teacher at Miss Smerdon's, a handsome black-eyed young fellow—almost a boy, as you may say; they looked but boy and girl beside the other couple! After the wedding, they all went off to Australia together. Perhaps they mean to set up a school there," Mrs. Jamieson finishes, entering the larger field of meditative speculation as she finds her facts begin to fail.

"Ah!" but that the pale aristocratic face is so haughtily unmoved, Mrs. Jamieson would think that long-drawn breath a sigh of bitterest disappointment.

The lady thanks her for her information, however, and makes some careless purchase with such unruffled calm that the good woman laughs at herself for her half-formed suspicion as she stands in the shop doorway, shading her dazzled eyes from the hot afternoon sun, watching the carriage bowl smoothly down the dusty road, till it vanishes from her sight.

"All the same, I believe she took some interest in that Miss Leigh," she says, as she goes back to her prosaic daily duties with a haunting fancy that she, Mary Anne Jamieson, has been upon the very brink of an adventure.

And assuredly her suspicions would be strengthened could she pierce the carriage panelling, and see the proud woman who sits there with locked hands and white quivering lips—the woman who whispers brokenly, while the slow painful tears drop heavily from her eyes, those saddest words that human lips can utter—

"Too late, too late! Oh, Rosamond my child, forgive me! Eustace, how will you bear my news?"

Electrical Curiosities.

"Among the interesting articles that we sell," said a dealer in telegraphic and electrical supplies, "is an improved counting machine. It is a very useful appliance for superintendents, telegraph inspectors, and others connected with telegraph construction and repair work. It is a curious instrument and is about the size and shape of a watch. Carried in the hand a single pressure upon a spring that it contains, records one and so on up to 1,000. It is used for keeping tally of any kind, such as counting poles, broken insulation, making inspection tallies of materials, etc.

"A curious name to an important little article is the anti hum. The multiplication of telegraph lines and their connection with buildings of all kinds, has made a demand for stopping the humming noise. The principal of the instrument is simple. An ordinary shackle of galvanized iron is provided with a washer or cushion or soft rubber, which, when connected, takes the strain off the wire, stopping its vibration, which is the cause of the noise. A loop of wire around the instrument conveys the current. An instrument of peculiar interest is an electro-mechanical tower-bell striker. It is adapted to strike by electrical connection large bells of from five hundred to ten thousand pounds weight. It will operate with a light battery power, and all that is required in connection with it is a simple key or press-button and battery. It is used for fire-alarm purposes in connection with the telephone exchanges. As in many cases the telephone is used for sending fire alarms, the operator can with this apparatus give the public alarm on any near tower bell by the simple use of his press-buttons.

"An electric apparatus for blasting is something novel to the general public, although it has been in use some time. It is a magneto-electric instrument of small size and weighs only about sixteen pounds. It occupied considerably less than one-half a cubic foot of space. It has a magnet of the horseshoe character, of iron, wound about with coils of insulated copper wire; between the poles of the magnet there is fitted to revolve an armature of cylindrical construction, carrying in its body other insulated wire coiled longitudinally as to the cylinder. The rapid revolution of the armature by suitable means generates and sustains in the machine an accumulative current of voltaic electricity of great power, which at the moment of its maximum intensity is practically switched off to the outside current in which are the fuses, and in the interior of each fuse the ignition is accomplished instantly. It is a machine of similar description that was used in blasting at Hell Gate when Gen. Newton's little daughter pressed the button that set the apparatus in motion by which thousands of tons of rock were displaced.

Horses in War.

The only two great nations which contain enough horses within their borders to meet all the exigencies of war or of peace are, unquestionably, Russia and the United States, says the London Telegraph. In his "Summer Tour in Russia," published in 1882, Mr. Antonio Gallenga tells us that the unwieldy empire under the domain of the great white czar "covers one-sixth of the habitual globe, while its population hardly exceeds that of Austria and Germany its two nearest neighbors, combined." Mr. Gallenga adds that the Rev. Henry Lansdell, in a journey of five months from the Thames to the mouth of the Amoor, went over two thousand six hundred miles by rail, 5,700 miles by steamboat, and 3,000 miles by the aid of horses—or about eleven thousand three hundred miles altogether, almost in a straight line. This amazing empire, sparsely occupied by human beings when its prodigous bulk is borne in mind, boasts possession of more horses than any other nation on the face of the globe. Gen. Sir Robert Wilson, who was British commissioner at the headquarters of the Russian army during the Moscow campaign in 1812, tells us that no troops in the world are better mounted or can defend ground better than the Russian regulars. "Their artillery," he adds "is so well horsed, and so nimbly and handily worked, that it bowls over all irregularities of surface with an ease, lightness, and velocity which gives it a great superiority. The vivacity and alertness of their cavalry, and the unquailing steadiness of their infantry make it pleasure to command them in extremest difficulties, for, as in the case of a British soldier, the most unbounded confidence may be reposed—to use a sailor's expression—in their answer to the helm in every stress of situation and under the greatest trials. From the same source we learn that the first Napoleon had witnessed with admiration the unyielding valor of the Russian soldiery under circumstances the most unpropitious for its display, and had recognized qualities and propensities which would render Russian armies, when properly organized, pre-eminent in the field. "He had become acquainted with no less resolute character of the Russian peasantry, and had found nothing wanting wh the art and discipline might not supply for the construction of a military force on the most extensive, efficient and economical basis." At that time the Russian soldier's pay was not more than 12 shillings a year, and his only ration in time of peace was water and rye bread baked like biscuit. Behind the army stands an enormous territory, with a reserve of horses—a considerable proportion of them, it is true not more than ponies—numbering from thirteen to fourteen million head. There is no more fatal error than that which arises from underrating an enemy's strength—an error which the history of the past show that, of all others, the country is the most apt to commit. Turning to the United States, we find that not less than eleven million head of excellent horses are contained at this moment in the broad limits of the union, a stock upon which in combination with the equine resources of the dominion o Canada, it is probable that the war department of this country will have to draw largely in the event of a protracted war with such a power as that wielded by Russia.

The Dahomey Girl's Ferocity.

The Amazons of Dahomey are slowly but surely acquiring a better reputation. It has been customary to look upon those ladies as bloodthirsty creatures rather fond of killing men and anything but nice ornaments for a drawing-room. It now appears that they are merely an ornamental body-guard for the King, that they never go to war, while, as for the killing anybody, the dear girls would never think of it. A recent traveler in Dahomey says: "Imagine sixty young women, strong and slender, who without losing any of their womanliness, present a decidedly warlike appearance. Their uniform is picturesque, and the armament consists of combined dancing and singing, sham fights and military evolution, all of which are performed with exactitude and elegance." It is to be hoped that this direct testimony of a man who has met them will re-establish the Dahomey Amazon in public confidence and prevent further allusion to her as affording proof that ladies are entitled to ballots as representing possible bayonets. This proof can be secured somewhere, no doubt but not in Dahomey. The Dahomey girl is flexile and fair, not ferocious.

OF the thirty-eight members of the Wellington county council there are two preachers. No other council in the province can make such a showing. —Mt. Forest Representative.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by indigestion, Consumption, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold by A. Turner & Co. x

NOTICE.—All parties indebted to the undersigned are hereby notified to settle the same not later than the 1st July, at my old business stand or my residence, Mill Street, Markdale. W. H. Rutledge.

A FULL line of samples of the Atlantic Publishing Co's advertising cards, comprising over four hundred designs, at this office. We have secured the agency for this district. Call and see them.

SOME elderly maiden about town don't like us because we occasionally call them old maids. That's no sign we don't like them. Why, our own wife would be an old maid if she weren't married.

GARDEN PARTY.—The L. A. Association of the Markdale Presbyterian Church intend holding their first garden party at the residence of Mr. Thomas Murray on the evening of the 23rd inst. Admission 15 cents.

100 Men's Felt Hats, half price, from 25 cents; 500 Gents' Summer Scarfs 5 cents; 10 dozen Men's Braces 25 cents, worth 40 cents; 790 yards Cashmere Twill Dress Goods, 20 cts., all at McFarland's.

THE illustrations in the Farmers' Advocate for June is, in our opinion, ahead of anything in previous numbers. This able and independent farmers' journal richly deserves the support of all progressive agriculturists.

THE Flesherton Advance is four years old and bids fair to live and flourish. There are but few better local journals; it is crisp, newsy and comes to hand neat and clean. We wish Mr. Fawcett continued success.

MESSRS. W. McCullough, G. R. Middleton, W. H. Steinhoff and J. Gibbons were out on a fishing excursion on Saturday last in the direction of Stayner, and brought home about 300 lbs. of fish. Good, for one day's fishing.—Dundalk Herald.

BREWSTER'S LAKE.—Mr. Jno Large, of Shelburne, has leased Brewster's Lake two and one half miles from Singhampton, for a term of twelve years. Mr. Large intends fitting up tents and making it a summer resort.—Free Press.

MR. THOS. WILLISCROFT of Williamsford is agent for the Massey Manufacturing Co. agricultural implements. We believe Mr. Williscroft is a thoroughly reliable man, and for the machinery turned out by the above Co. they are second to none. See Mr. W.'s advt. in this paper.

W. J. MCFARLAND pays cash down for his goods. He goes to the fountain head, buys nothing but clean, fresh goods. He purchases so largely that he makes it in the interest of the manufacturers to sell him cheaply, and he is contented to take very small profits and make enormously large sales.

AWAY FOR A VISIT.—Mr. H. J. Middaugh and wife left for Indiana this week, on a visit to relations there. The hotel will be just as well conducted as ever, during their absence, as it is under the able management of Mr. Archie Butter, who is deservedly a general favorite.—Durham Chronicle.

WE had an interview with three reliable men last week, one had been to Collingwood another via Owen Sound to Allenford and a third through Chesley and across the township of Brant, and in none of their travels does the crops equal in appearance those of the district surrounding Markdale.

MOVING.—Mr. Cliff & Sons, started their engine at their new woolen factory in Durham. The engine was found to work very satisfactorily, and this week we expect to hear the hum of the carding machine in full operation.—Grey Review. The above engine was turned out of Moffat Bro's foundry Markdale, recently.

NEW CHEESE FACTORY.—Singhampton now boasts of a well appointed cheese factory, with nearly 150 patrons on the books. W. R. Anderson & Co. have just supplied them with a complete outfit of steam fittings, cheese presses, curd mill, tin fittings and milk cans of the most approved pattern.—Collingwood Bulletin.

PIC-NIC.—The ninth annual pic-nic under the auspices of the R. C. Churchs' Congregations of Priceville and Glenelg, will be held at the Irish Lake, on Thursday, 25th June. The usual athletic games will be competed for and prizes awarded. Refreshments served on the grounds at 12 o'clock. Music provided by Parks Bro's.

NEW R. C. CHURCH.—The site on Third street, given by Mr. Thos. Long for a new Catholic Church and parsonage, is now being prepared for the erection of the latter. Mr. John Long will give the new parsonage to the church, at an estimated cost of $2,800, and this will secure to the congregation in Collingwood what has long been a desideratum, the presence of a resident priest.—Collingwood Bulletin.

SOMETHING WRONG.—We are informed, that a certain vacant lot, 1-5th of an acre near the station on Mill street is assessed for $500, while McFarland's elevator and stave factory is put down for $600. One property worth say $300 and the other that many thousand. If this is correct (and we have no doubt it is) it's time to appoint an assessor who has common sense, or integrity.

CORRECTION.—The following portion of Holland Council minutes re Court of Revision reported last week should read real in every place where personal appears. "John Murray too high on personal property, reduced $100; T. G. & B., too high on personal property, reduced $1720; Michael Matthews, too high on personal property, reduced $50; James Lyons, too high on personal property, reduced $100; Frank McCann, too high on personal property reduced $100; Wm. Hamilton, too high on, personal property, reduced $200; Daniel Blaney, too high on personal property, reduced $150."

SUNDAY TRAINS.—During the past three Sabbaths an extensive freight traffic has been done on this line of railway. We were in hopes the first time this Sabbath desecration occurred that it was a case of necessity or emergency and that it would end there, but now that is becoming the rule, it is time a stop was put to it. We hope the authorities will take the matter up and deal with it with a firm hand.

CHANGE IN BUSINESS—W H Rutledge has sold his butcher business to R. Burnside who is now in possession. Mr. Rutledge has not fully recovered his recent illness (inflamation of the lungs) and his physician strongly advised him to give up business and rest for a season hence the above sale. Mr. Burnside is well and favorably know in the same business having followed it here during the past year up to a few months ago.

An excellent whitewash for fences and buildings is made as follows: Slack half a bushel of fresh lime in a barrel with boiling water and cover it meanwhile to keep in the heat. Afterward strain through a fine sieve and add the following: Seven pounds of salt dissolved in hot water, three pounds ground rice boiled to a thin paste, one half pound of Spanish whiting, one pound of clean glue which has been dissolved in water and boiled; finally, five gallons of hot water, and stir well. Keep it covered a few days. When used it should be made and kept hot. One pint covers a square yard. For a dark brown color add burned umber.

A THUNDER storm passed this way last Monday during which the Glenelg agricultural hall was struck with lightning; several holes were made in the roof and one end of the building slightly damaged; the door was torn off and a portion of the door frame torn asunder when the fluid entered the ground beside the steps. The hall has been occupied as a barracks by the Salvation Army for some time, and some insinuated that this fact is sufficient reason for it being struck by lightning, while others say "how fortunate it was that the hall was occupied for such a good purpose, as it might otherwise have been a complete ruin."

WASTED IN LAW.—A Mount Forest paper gives the result of law proceedings over the insolvent estate in that Town. It says:—At last the affairs of the estate of Thos. Swan of Mount Forest has been wound up. The Trustee Mr. A. Lamont, has issued a printed statement declaring the dividend of 6 cents on the dollar. After the long course of legal war over the estate there is $628.22 to divide among 74 creditors. The foolishness of humanity is clearly displayed in this matter, as the total receipts from the estate were in the first place $7751.08. Instead of the creditors agreeing to divide this amount recourse to law was had which together with other expenses has only left the small sum stated.

WE have received the eleventh number of The Canadian Pictoral and Illustrated War News: A Royal Grenadier's Chance for the Victoria Cross: Views at Qu'Apelle, N. W. T., from sketches by Mr. R. B. Urmston; Camp Denison, Humboldt, N. W. T., from sketches by Trooper E. Kershaw, G. G. B. G.; Sketches from Battleford, by Lieut. Wadmore, I. S. C.; The 62nd Batt. (St. John Fusileers) called out for service in the Northwest, crossing the Market Square en route for the Intercolonial Railway Station, from a sketch by Mr. John E. Miles. Also A fine Two Page Supplement, being a splendid portrait for framing, of Major-General Middleton, C. B., commanding the Militia Forces of the Dominion, from the latest photograph by Topley, of Ottawa. The paper sells at 15 cents per copy, obtainable from local booksellers and from the office of publication.

A LONG DRIFT.

Floating Scoria From the Java Eruption.

The following interesting account of ashes and pumice from the volcanic eruption on the island of Java in 1883, found afloat at sea in January last, is furnished from the log of the Antelope of Boston:

From the 14th to the 15th of January, betwen latitudes 1 degree and 4 degrees south, and longitudes 83 degrees and 84 degrees east, we passed through quantities of pumice-stone and ashes. At times the sea appeared to be literally covered by it. The large pieces were heavily weighted with marine growths, and many pieces appeared to be on the point of sinking.

We picked up a small quantity of it, and among it found a small and very peculiar shaped fish, somewhat resembling a turbot. We may mention that a large number of fish similar to the one we caught and a fish resembling an alewive, also lots of small crabs, were among the pumice, and they all appeared to be busily engaged swimming from piece to piece eating barnacles, etc.

The pumice is, no doubt, part of that thrown up by the terrible eruption which occurred in Java Aug. 25 to 28 1883, and, therefore, has been afloat some 500 days. We were surprised to find it in this particular position, and more surprised to find any of it afloat at all after such a lapse of time.

About the 28th of September last the sea beach of Natal, south west Africa, was covered by pumice, cast ashore by the sea. The pumice must have begun its journey about the 28th of August, 1883, and in 397 days it had drifted—taking Java as its point of departure—a distance of 4,400 miles, or 11 geographical miles per day.

This is certainly a most instructive illustration of the westerly current we always expect when crossing the Indian ocean toward the Cape of Good Hope.

But how did the pumice reach the position in which we found it in such quantities.

We can only form conjectures as to the probable course it took. The equatorial current, which originally started this large quantity of pumice and ashes and landed part of it on the African coast, runs from Java in one large body, to about latitude 18 degrees south longitude 70 degrees east; here it divides into two branches one flowing southwest, and the other west-northwest, toward Madagascar. So say the writers on ocean currents.

Ships which arrived at Bombay during last August and September, and passed east of Madagascar, report large fields of pumice off of this island; this comprises one part of our conjecture. The current proceeding to the northwest and reaching to the north point of Madagascar again divides itself, one branch entering the Mozambique channel and running to the southwest; the other, continuing its course to the northwest eventually strikes the African shore to the northward of Zanzibar, and is turned off to the northward, and again, after having been whirled around, and held in bondage as it were, for a time by conflicting currents and the changing monsoons, part of it is carried to the position in which we found it in such quantities by the easterly currents which prevail about the equator during the northwest monsoon; and hear it will again be held by changeable currents until eventually it becomes sufficiently weighted by marine growths and sinks to the bottom.

Part of the large field of pumice, which originally started from Java, will no doubt be carried to the southward of Agulhas bank, off the Cape of Good Hope where the currents are very strong, and turning sharply from the southwest to the southward and southeast, will reach the well know easterly drift, which flows all the year round, and is so favorable to ships bound to Australia when they are south of 40 degrees latitude, and eventually be landed on the coasts of Australia and New Zealand. Thus in the end many thousands of miles will separate what was once a portion of Java.

I may mention that we passed small quantities of it in the South Atlantic. The last we saw of it was when we were about 500 miles to the northwestward of the Cape of Good Hope.

A Captive King.

The authorities of the Maritime Hospital at Brest have, at the present moment, under their guardianship a king, recently brought to France as a prisoner of war. His realms are situated near Porto Novo, on the west coast of Africa; and while wandering about his dominions King Humbo, quite oblivious of his oath of fidelity, incited his subjects to rebel against the French, when their Marine Infantry were recently landed in Senegal.

He was slightly wounded by the French soldiers, and being captured, was shipped off to France in very depressed spirits. Although treated with every consideration in the Brest Hospital, this sable-skinned monarch declines, it is said, to take a cheerful view of life, and appears to be pining after freedom. He can converse with no one, there being nobody who understands his language, so he is obliged to make known his wants by signs. When requested, on his arrival the first night, to undress before going to bed, he very energetically refused to do so, and ever since he persists in keeping his clothes on night and day. King Humbo seems to have conceived a strong attachment for the doctor of the ward in which he is placed; and, now that he is becoming convalescent, he evinces his attachment by diligently brushing that gentleman's clothes whenever he gets an opportunity of making himself useful in this manner. It is not intended to detain the captive monarch in France. When quite recovered from his wound he will be restored to his faithful subjects.

Business Enterprise.

After the discovery of gold in California in 1848, says the Overland, and before any communication was had with American or European commercial ports, the demand for supplies of almost every kind became often oppressive. There were no railways, no telegraph, no steamships by which communication could be made; no intimation when any ship would approach the coast, yet it was of the utmost importance to the merchant that he obtain the earliest opportunity to board an incoming vessel, and make such purchases as would in a measure forestall the efforts of his rivals.

For this purpose each of several trading houses kept in constant readiness a good boat and a set of oarsmen, with which to meet any craft that came into the harbor, and secure the first chance.

In the front rank of these competing houses were those of C. L. Ross and of Howard and Mellus.

One day, a shout was heard:

"A brig is coming in!"

In a moment Howard had the rudder-lines of his boat, and Ross those of his, and every oarsman sprung his "ash" to the utmost. It was about three miles to the brig, and the race was closely contested. Ross was only a hundred yards ahead, when he grasped the ropes and sprang over the bulwarks.

The captain stood at the rail and Ross accosted him in his peculiarly rapid manner,—

"Got any red woollen shirts?"

"Yes," said the captain, "a hundred dozen."

Without asking a single question as to the further contents of the vessel, Ross said,—

"What will you take for your entire cargo—every-thing in the ship?"

"A hundred per cent. advance on the New York invoice."

"It is done," said Ross, as he handed the skipper a hundred dollars; "and this binds the bargain."

As the captain received the money, Howard reached the deck.

There were no red woolen skirts in the country, and every miner must have a pair, even if they cost him a hundred dollars—and Ross knew it.

What is Catarrh?
Catarrh is a muco puurulent discharge caused by the presence and development of the vegetable parasite amœba in the internal lining membrane of the nose. This parasite is only developed under favorable circumstances, and these are: Morbid state of the blood, as the blighted corpuscle of tubercle, the germ poison of syphilis, mercury, toxœmea, from the retention of the effete matter of the skin, suppressed perspiration, badly ventilated sleeping apartments, and other poisons that are germinated in the blood. These poisons keep the internal lining membrane of the nose in a constant state of irritation, ever ready for the seeds of the germs, which spread up the nostrils and down the fauces or back of the throat, causing ulceration of the throat, up to the eustachian tubes, causing deafness, burrowing in the vocal cords, causing hoarseness; usurping the proper structure of the bronchial tubes, ending in pulmonary consumption and death.

Many attempts have been made to discover a cure for this distressing disease by the use of inhalements and other ingenious devices, but none of these treatments can do a particle of good until the parasites are either destroyed or removed from the mucous tissue.

Some time since a well known physician of forty years standing, after much experience, succeeded in discovering the necessary combination of ingredients, which never fails in absolutely and permanently eradicating this horrible disease, whether standing for one year or for forty years. Those who may be suffering from the above disease should, without delay, communicate with the business manager of MESSRS. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King Street West, Toronto, and get full particulars and treatise free by enclosing stamp.—Mail (Canada.)

Notwithstanding the statement that figures never lie, calves are often false.

The experience of the manufacturers of the "Myrtle Navy" tobacco is a valuable lesson in political economy. Previous to their commencing that brand, the tobacco made of the finest Virginia leaf was always held at fancy prices, and put up in some fancy style of manufacture It was thought that only the rich would buy such tobacco, and at the old prices none but the rich could buy it. The makers of the "Myrtle Navy" resolved to strip the manufacture of the tobacco of all its fancy costs and put their profit at so low a rate that no competitor could possibly undersell them with the same quality of article. From the very first until now their rate of profit has been a uniform percentage upon the cost. It is their enormous sales which make their low rate of profit a satisfactory one in the aggregate, and also gives them their firm hold upon the market. Their success is an excellent lesson for manufacturers to study over.

The Morning Dress.

It is said that a lady's standing in society can easily be determined by her dress at the breakfast-table; an expensive, showy costume indicating that the wearer has not yet learned the proprieties. But no one need be afraid of being called "shoddy" if her loveliness is as apparent by daylight as at the hops. Perfect beauty is never the attendant of disease; above all, of those diseases peculiar to women, and which find a ready cure in Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." Price reduced to one dollar. By druggists.

A strict belief in fate is the worst of slavery, imposing upon our needs an everlasting lord or tyrant, whom we are to stand in awe of night and day.

Life in all its various phases is made up of receiving and bestowing, and he who fancies he can do without either loses more than half of life's power and happiness.

VALUABLE SECRET AND RECIPE
For a treatment for catarrh, hoarseness, bronchitis, sore throat, etc. Being both local and constitutional, this treatment always effects quick and permanent cures of even the worst cases. Catarrh causes half of the cases of consumption, and thus carries off yearly thousands of victims: it is folly to neglect it in the face of this fact. If you are a sufferer send for this treatment, and be cured—surely—safely, and quickly. The medicines are cheap, and can be prepared by any person, or at any drug store. I am unable to sell it as a patent medicine, as it keeps only two months. The three recipes with full and complete instructions for self-treatment sent free for $1. Cure guaranteed, or money refunded. Address.

The Revue Bibliographique reports that in Paraguay a tribe of Indians with tails has been discovered. A Guaycuyos child of eight years was captured with a tail a foot long.

In a recent English work, by Sophia Jex-Blake, M. D., on the care of infants, the writer finds it necessary to insist, with great emphasis, upon the rule of "No alcohol and no patent medicines."

A writer in the British Medical Journal says that if the infection of cholera is as largely spread by drinking water as the investigators say, the safe way of avoiding it is to drink distilled water.

A New Hampshire woman who died leaving a good property directed by will that it should all be expended in adorning her burial lot, and so a costly marble monument and a statue brought from Italy will embellish a little country graveyard.

According to the American Naturalist, a hybrid has been formed between the common and the "Darwin" potato, from the southern part of South America. It is believed that the new potato will not be subject to the rot or other attacks of parasitic fungi.

A Russian illustrated paper represents a number of young women seated at a table, each examining meat for trichinæ. It is stated that women make efficient microscopists. Last year they thus examined 30,650 carcasses. The deseased meat is at once destroyed.

A California physician claims, in the Indian Medical Journal that the bruised pulp of eucalyptus leaves, which he had been in the habit of applying to his very bald head for the cure of headache, had brought out a new and abundant crop of hair.

Mrs. Ohm, who professes to cast out devils and perform other feats commonly regarded as superhuman, resides near Laketon, Ind., and is regularly consulted by persons who believe themselves under the influence of a malign spirit. She has been enabled to amass a snug fortune.

They are about to rival America in London in the number and variety of their drinks. The list for London season includes corpse revivers, flash of lightning, al-a-ba-gaun, flip-flap, gin and tansy, black stripe, locomotive, heap of comfort, gin fizz, rattlesnake, ladies' blush, stone fence, and sherry blush.

A Cincinnati furniture exhibitor at New Orleans discovered a man from Arkansas whittling a handsome mahogany cabinet—"to see what the wood was like." Another, who had fitted up a room with the finest specimens of his art, was horrified to find an old lady eating her luncheon of fried chicken seated in one of his satin upholstered chairs. "What's the cheer good for if it ain't to set down in?" she remarked.

A snake, nine feet long and about seven inches in diameter at the thickest part, was found on a farm near Starrica Susquehanna county, Pa., this week helpless from gorging a young lamb, and was killed with a fence stake. The reptile is described as having a peculiar flat head with a circle of short stiff hair around the neck, brown in color, with bands of red about its body at intervals of a few inches.

A colored clergyman who had been put on trial before a jury in Darien, Ga., for some offence, was brought in not guilty, the other day. The defendant said: "Read that again." "Not guilty," was repeated. With a spring he bounded into the air, giving vent to religious ejaculations. The colored women, who crowded the court room, set up a hallelujah chorus, in which the preacher joined, and the Judge had to sit still and let them have it out.

It is eighteen years since Nilsson has been heard on the boards of a French opera house. Managers there will not pay the prices which the stars of opera can get in New York and London. They set their faces against the system, and strive more for good average execution than for the glitter and glamor of one part opera. Patti, too, goes elsewhere, and gets in one week half as much as she could earn in the Paris opera in a whole twelvemonth.

A law proposed in Illinois, and favored by the Trades and Labor Assembly, deals with the problem of convict labor. Its object is to devise means by which convicts can be kept employed without underselling the products of free labor, and so reducing the wages of the free laborer. The bill enacts that the products of prison labor shall not be sold at less than market rates; that not over ten per cent. of the convicts shall be employed on any particular industry, and that a certain percentage of the revenue shall be set aside for the support of the convict's family.

The London Times recently spoke of the black houses of the natives on the Scotch islands of Skye and the Western Islands as confined, dark, and unhealthy. A Highlander in answer writes to that journal that he passed his early years in one of these primitive dwellings or huts, and that their ventilation, although draughty is good, and the inhalation of the peat smoke, with which the atmosphere is charged, protects the lungs from consumption and other parasitic germ diseases. In proof he cites the statement of Dr. Morgan of Manchester that these Highlanders enjoy a singular immunity from phthisis, which is to be ascribed, chiefly, to the inhalation of the peat smoke, and the aniteptic ingredients contained therein—the tar, the creosote, and the tannin, together with various volatile oils and resins, black unctous peat being rich in these substances. Dr. Morgan further remarks that any exemption from attacks of consumption which these Highlanders enjoy is only so long as they reside in their smoky huts.

Ancient Shoemakers.

Rude drawings are seen on the walls of Thebes (B. C. 1405) of shoemakers performing their tasks, showing the trade to be extremely ancient as well as eminently respectable; and we read in Homer of princes manufacturing their own shoes. They have been made of various materials—hides, flax, silk, cloth, wood, iron, silver and gold—and in great variety of shape, plain and ornamental. Among the Jews they were made of leather, linen and wood. Soldiers made them out of brass and iron, tied with thongs. To put off the shoes was an act of veneration The Asiatics and Egyptians wore shoes made out of the bark of the papyrus.

Among the Greeks the shoe generally reaches the mid-leg, like that we now call "boots." Ladies, as a mark of distinction, wore sandals—a sort of loose shoe something like the modern slipper.

The Roman shoes were of two kinds—calceus, which covered the whole foot, and soela, which covered only the sole, and was fastened with thongs. Ladies of rank wore white and sometimes red shoes; other women wore black.

In the ninth and tenth centuries the greatest prince of Europe wore wooden shoes or wooden soles instead fastened with leather thongs.

In the eleventh century the upper part of the shoe was made of leather and the sole of wood. The Saxons wore shoes, or soch, with thongs.

In the year 1090, in the reign of William Rufus, the great dandy Robert was called "the hornet," because he wore shoes with long points, stuffed, turned up and twisted like horns.

Shoes of this kind became fashionable, and the toes continued to increase in length, until in the time of Richard II., in 1390, they had attained such an enormous extent as to be fastened to the garter by a chain of silver or gold. The clergy declared vehemently against this extravagance; but the fashion continued, even for several centuries.

In the year 1463 Parliament passed an act prohibiting shoes with pikes more than two inches in length, under penalty to maker and wearer, and those who did not comply were declared excommunicated.

Even at a late period shoes were twice the length of the foot, or so long as to "prevent them from kneeling in devotion at God's house."

Shoes in their present form came into use in the year 1633.

"TOUGHS"

Mrs. R. Hill, of Lee County, has a chicken which has no feathers on it, being perfectly smooth nearly all over.

An Arcola woman set a speckled hen on a dried-apple pie, and in three weeks the hen hatched fourteen nightmares with ribbons on their tails.

When a young man nowadays wants to call himself a tough, he simply remarks "I'm a spring chicken." Every one who boards will readily understand him.

Among catfish it is not the mother fish that takes care of the eggs and young, but the male or father fish. This only goes to show that even the husband of a catfish may be hen-pecked.

Rev. S. C. Leonard has placed upon our table a curious hen egg. It is about the usual length, with one side flattened; the flat part of it is bordered with impressions that resemble letters.

Lightning struck a hen house in Illinois recently, and killed twenty-five setting hens. How much money was lost? asks an arithmetical exchange. That depends upon what spring chickens are worth in Illinois.

Mr. R. P. Johnson showed us last Wednesday the following articles which were found in a chicken gizzard that was killed at the Johnson house a few day ago: Eight brass pins, two half-inch screws and one cartridge cap.

The Mother of the Rothschilds.

In "Self Help for Women" the following story is told:—"A hundred years ago there was a little shop in Frankfort known by the sign of the Red Shield or Roth-schild, where a Jew and his wife sold second-hand goods, together with old coins, jewels, cameos, and pictures, which were eagerly bought by great people as well as little. The Jew, Meyer Anslem (now celebrated as Meyer Anslem Rothschild), accumulated large sums of money in this business and began gradually investing his earnings by lending to the nobility at high rates of interest. He was appointed foreign banker and financial agent to William Landgrave of Hesse, who, when he was forced to flee from a French invasion under Napoleon, placed in the Jew's keeping all his treasure, amounting to £250,000. This money Rothschild invested wisely, turning pence into pounds with wonderful quickness, leaving at his death 12,000,000 florins to be divided among his family. For many years after his death his widow abode contentedly among her people in the Jews' quarter at Frankfort, relieving the distresses of the poorest, and sympathising with them in their troubles and struggles, never leaving their miserable surroundings except on the occasions of visiting the gardens of her eldest son, Anselm. Proud of her husband's reputation, proud of her children's increasing renoun, the mother of the Rothschilds is more worthy of remembrance than the mother of the Bonapartes.

"You ain't a gwine to give ten cents for that seegar, are you?" "I believe I will, Sally," he said. "Jest to burn up?" said she. "Well," said she, "I'd look at a dime a long time before I'd give it for that thing and then burn it right straight up. If I was gwine to be a fool I'd be a fool in some other way."

Snuff-taking has become fashionable among New York dudes, and the average dude is so weak in the legs that when he takes a pinch it brings him to his sneeze.

She—It is really wonderful to see how well the men keep step. He—Bah, that is nothing! When I was a soldier I used to keep step better than all the rest put together.

The editor who proposed to fill a long-felt want in a new western town accomplished his purpose. He filled the first grave in the local cemetery.

Yes," said Mrs. Spriggins, when she read the menu of a recent fashionable dinner, "the man who got up that there feast must have been an epicac!"

"Yes," said Jones, "when my wife gets mad she reminds me of a vessel under way." "How so?" inquired Smith. Because she's got her rancor up."

An old soldier says that although he fought through the war, he never knew what it really meant to "break ranks" until he fell into a basket of bad eggs.

"Do you consider him a man of veracity?" "Heh?" "I say, do you consider him a man of veracity?" "Well, there's no tellin' what he might do if he was mad an' had a gun."

The countryman who traveled a hundred miles to see "the invisible girl," returned home mad as a hermit because "he got into the room whar she was, and the hanged thing wasn't in sight."

The advent of the seventeen-year locust will furnish a new topic for conversa- this year, but it should be remembered that it is not etiquette to ask a lady how many times she remembers the insects.

"Well," said an irate Whitehaller to another, "the only trouble with you is that you run everything with a big I." "That's better than you do," was the reply, "for you run everything with a big owe."

"Bring me quail on toast, waiter." "Sorry, sir, but we're all out of quail." "What?" "Yes, sir; very sorry, sir." "That's strange." "Yes, sir; but since the war was made on the English sparrows quail has been very scarce, sir."

"I hope you will be a better boy in the future," said his mother. "Yes'm," sobbed the boy. "I guess you will mind your father the next time he speaks to you?" "Yes'm." "Poor boy," she added, sympathetically, "did he touch your heart?" "No'm."

The wicked milkman whose lacteal wares deposit their creamy treasures at the bottom of a basin instead of at the top may argue that the cream is too rich and heavy to be borne by the milk, but he shouldn't tell the story too frequently. It is apt to grow as thin as his milk with too much exposure.

Two rival country editors while at a political meeting were importuning an old farmer to take their papers. "Gentleman, I don't want both," said he. "Well, take mine," replied one of the editors. "Mine has twice as much original matter as his." "That so? Well, I believe I'll take his. I always want the best."

Jones is very green. He came to the city recently, staying over Sunday. When he returned home he was asked if he went to church while he was away. "No," said he, "I couldn't find the men's meeting-house. I went into about a dozen churches, but as they all appeared to be women's meetings, of course I went out immediately. I didn't wish to intrude upon their privacy, you know."

An English flunkey with skin-tight trousers on, in passing through the street of a village, was stared at by a Scotchman, who seemed to be more than amused at the smallness of his legs. The Englishman, not at all pleased at him for his presumption, demanded, to know what was the attraction. "I wis jist wondering' if ye had ony drawers on?" "To be sure I have." "And stockin's?" "Yes, certainly." "Whaur's yer legs, then?"

A well-known professional man who has a brand new baby was advised by friends to rub the little one with lard and camphor, as it was troubled with some complaint that treatment was sure to cure. The father went down into the kitchen, got some lard out of a pan, and, mixing it with camphor, rubbed it all over the baby's feet, face and neck. Next morning the mother found that the poor little thing was covered with a crust of cold mashed potatoes.

The Congo River.

The magnitude of the Congo is probably second only to that of the Nile. We say "probably," because its upper course and head-waters still remain unexplored. When first seen by Stanley as Lualaba, more than one thousand five hundred miles from the sea, it impressed him with its aspect of a great continental stream. There are affluents, too, extending on both sides far into the interior, and probably capable of at least partial navigation, which seem, in the passing glimpses that have been caught of them, scarcely inferior in size to the main river. Untold wealth lies hidden in the primeval forests which come down on either hand of the brink, and in the game countries which in other parts stretch along its course. It must not, however, be supposed that, like the Mississippi or the St. Lawrence, it is open for vessels from the sea along any considerable portion of its course. About one hundred and twenty miles from its mouth are the Yellala Falls its earliest and greatest rapids. Between these and Stanley Pool, above which there is open water for many hundreds of miles, are numerous rapids, cataracts, or falls, all impeding progress, most of them rendering it impossible. In this intervening region, and, indeed, occasionally elsewhere, the path of the great river is most varied. Not only is it tortuous, but sometimes, it expands for miles, and seems to be, not a river, but a vast island-strewn lagoon, in which it is difficult to decide which shore is actually the bank of the stream itself. In other places it is narrow and impetuous, as at Vivi, just below the Yellala Falls, where is situated Stanley's first riverine station. There the current, but five hundred yards wide, is with good reason supposed to be ninety fathoms deep, and attains, during the rainy season, a speed of nine miles an hour,—a greater depth than the world-famed rapids of Niagara, with an almost equal velocity. It is these physical difficulties which constitute the great hinderance to a rapid and widespread development of trade.

"The River Congo," says Stanley, "has a course of twenty-nine hundred miles, from the Chibala range, south-south-east of Lake Tanganyika, or Banana Point on the south-west coast of Africa. Close to the twelfth parallel of south latitude, across eighteen degrees of longitude, there runs an elevated ridge, of from six thousand to nine thousand feet high,—at one part narrowed by a mountain range, at another expanded into a table-land. This is the dividing line between the Zambesi and Congo basins. Out of the furrows, recesses, and folds of its slopes, issue the streams flowing in opposite directions,—northward into the Congo, southward into the Zambesi. Near the parallel of four degrees north latitude, you must look for the dividing line of the waters of the Bhar-el Ghaza and Shari, which flow north, and those which flew southward into the Congo. Draw a line north and south about the the meridian of sixteen degrees east longitude, from four degrees north to twelve degrees south latitude; and a slightly diagonal line from four degrees north to twelve degrees south, running from the meridian of thirty degrees east to thirty-two degrees east longitude; and, within this vast compact area, you have the basin of the Congo. Its greatest length is a line drawn from south-east to north-west fourteen hundred miles, by twelve hundred, its greatest breadth. The number of English square miles that this area contains is one million three hundred thousand.

The Princess of Colonna's Origin

The story of the life of Eva Bryant Mackay, who recently became, by marriage with a titled Italian, the Princess of Colonna, brings to light some strange things. Tom Jordan, one of those characteristic '49ers, who, in the days of Miss Mackay's poverty, mined in Sierra County, California, and one of the gold-pocket hunters whom Mark Twain so graphically describes, said in a recent interview:

"Miss Hungerford, Miss Mackay's mother, when I first knew her, in 1855, was a very pretty little girl of only twelve years, who lived at Goodyear's Bar with her widowed father, Major Hungerford. He was a Louisiana creole, and spoke French and Spanish fluently, as did also the child. Miss Hungerford grew prettier as she became older, and at length became the acknowledged belle of the mining town. Offers of marriage from wealthy miners, store-keepers, lawyers, and men of other callings were refused, until one day the girl met Dr. Bryant, a dashing young man of twenty-six, from the neighboring camp of Downiesville. It was a case of mutual love at first sight. In less than a year they were married. A year later the doctor died from blood poisoning, contracted while making an autopsy in the case of a young woman said to have been poisoned.

"Meantime Eva Bryant was born. Dr. Bryant, who had followed the Western way of living, left his young wife and child in very stringent circumstances, and a purse of $700 was subscribed for them, and Mrs. Bryant took up her residence at Virginia City, then in the heyday of its prosperity. There she met John W. Mackay, who became the wealthiest of all the bonanza kings.

"It's strange, isn't it, that little Miss Hungerford, who used to trot about barefooted among the rough miners of Goodyear's bar, is now the leading and wealthiest American lady in Paris, and the fatherless and destitute baby, Eva, is the Princess of Colonna? And I, a contemporary, who saw it all, and beheld a thousand others go up on the wings of wealth, am a busted miner, eking out my livelihood in the sage brush deserts of Umatilla County."

LOOKIN' FER B'AR.

He Found a Place Where that Gentle Game was Quite Plentiful.

They have bears in the west that are hard to subdue, and so they have need of strong men and women. A settler's wife of this class, on the outskirts of civilisation, overhearing herself described as "half human, half alligator," resented it, and declared that she had "feelin's;" but she was not this woman—the story-teller whom the hunter met.

A New Yorker on a hunting expedition in the far west rode up to a mountain cabin and hailed a woman hanging out clothes in the front yard. "Good morning, madam," he called to her.

"What yer lookin' fur? You must be lost, er sumpin'," she replied.

"Thanks, no; I'm a hunter, and I understood there were bear up in this neighborhood, and could you give me some points?"

The woman dropped the white garment in her hand, and came down to the fence. "Hit's b'ar yer lookin'fer, is it?" she inquired, craning her thin neck forward in an eager way.

"Exactly," madam," he answered straighening up in his stirrups.

"Well, stranger, yer in the right neighborhood. Thar's b'ar here in plenty."

"Have you seen any?"

"I shed say I hed."

"Tell me where I can find a den. I'm looking for a dozen or so. I'm not particular as to numbers."

"Oh, hain't yer? Thet's what my ole man said, but he's changed his min' now, I reckon."

"Is he afraid of the brutes?"

"Not now he haint."

"Tell me about it."

"Well yer see one day me an' the ole man seen a b'ar climbin' in the hog-pen, an' he sed he'd put an end to that b'ar with a club. I tole him to git a gun, but he sed b'ars wus no great shakes, nohow, an' he'd go with a club."

"And did he?" inquired the hunter, as the woman stopped talking.

"I reckon he did; I went in the house an' clim up to the roof, an' purty soon I heerd a mighty racket out in the pen. After a while it got powerful still outside, an' I clim down ter see how it come out."

"Well inquired the hunter, anxiously, "did he get the bear?"

"No, he didn't, the b'ar wuz clear gone."

"And your husband?"

"Well the funeral took place next day. Hit's b'ar yer lookin' fur, is it? Well, stranger, that same b'ar is 'round here yit."

Practical Joking.

How much patience is needed in dealing with the practical joker! Not the one who has more regard for his own rough fun than for the feelings of his neighbor; he deserves only contempt, and is the last subject to whom charity ought to be extended.

But there is a kind of joker who deserves toleration. If he betray you into some ridiculous position, it is not done "before folks," and he is too kind-hearted not to release you from it speedily. Indeed, he is far more likely to hold himself up to ridicule than to inflict it upon any one else.

There are, then, jokes and jokes, and though practical tricks are never quite in good taste, we may assume that their perpetrators are not all ill-bred.

Charles Mathews was always running over with fun. As Sydney Smith said of Macaulay's learning, "He ran over with it, and stood in the slop." Mathews once, in a series of parlor performances, imitated a certain wizard to the life in tricks of conjuring. One evening, the audience found an umbrella suspended in front of the curtain. Mathews directed the special attention of the assembly to this proposed "great trick of the evening," and requested each spectator to keep his eye upon it.

He drew forth a dish of fish and water from a flat portfolio, and gave many other specimens of his marvellous versatility. After a series of miracles he retired, and the curtain fell. The expectant audience was greatly disappointed. However, the performer pushed aside the curtain, and again appeared.

"Ladies and gentlemen," said he, "I wished you particularly to keep your eye upon this umbrella. The fact is, I lately bought it at rather a high figure; and as one never knows what may occur, with so many people about, I thought it best to demand your kind assistance."

He then let down the umbrella, by means of a rope and pulley, and carefully secured it, concluding, —"I am really very much obliged to you, ladies and gentlemen. Good-evening!"

A Lively Bedroom.

One may become accustomed to anything! The writer rarely slept sounder than he did when with a number of others occupying some barn-like buildings, in the roof whereof (to which there was no ceiling) snakes disported themselves, and could be heard and occasionally seen crawling about the beams and rafters. As there was no ceiling, it was not a pleasant thought, as one lay in bed at night, that a snake might fall on one from the roof. Even this, however, was made a joke of by light-hearted youngsters, giving rise to frequent "chaff" during the night as to whose bed a snake heard on the roof might be over! In the darkness some one would say— "I hear a snake!" "Yes!" another would reply. "He's just over your bed!" Then probably a practical joker would toss a slipper or other light article gently on to some one else, who would perhaps jump up declaring a snake had fallen on him, and insist on striking a light.—Times of India.

The Standard.

MARKDALE JUNE 18, 1885.

NORTH-WEST.

Big Bear is being pursued closely and will probably be overtaken this week. Two hundred Chippewayans have surrendered to Gen. Strain.

The country through which the pursual is made is thickly wooded interspersed with lakes and ravines making it almost impassable for man or beast. The troops experience almost unsurmountabl difficultues, and are almost eaten alive with flies.

ROLLER FLOUR MILLS.

Considering the cost, perhaps there is no system undergoing so rapid and universal a change as the milling process, the roller system being introduced into all first-class mills. Our progressive citizen, Mr. J. W. Ford, overhauled his mill a year ago at great expense, and doubtless with much anxiety as to the results, having erected his mill only a few years previous and put in (at that time) the latest improved machinery. Now he has had eight months experience with the rolls; and, notwithstanding the fact that another first-class roller mill was erected not a hundred rods distant, and run to its utmost capacity by a thorough practical man (Mr. Angus Plewes, proprietor), yet Mr. Ford did a much larger business since than any previous year, in fact has been literally thronged with work since the rolls were got into operation. Now, all this means a greatly increased trade for Markdale, and while the new roller system has exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the proprietors of the mills, it has proved a decided benefit to the village in drawing a trade from a distance, as scores of farmers have come from fifteen to twenty-five miles to do gristing, and thereby become regular customers in the various lines of business in our midst. The above mills are now doing a large shipping trade, which proves to a demonstration that the brand of flour turned out is superior to that manufactured under the old process, and to further prove the success of the new system, it is only necessary to say that Mr. Plewes, the proprietor of one of our mills, is this season raising his mill-dam and adding more machinery, which will increase the capacity of his mill by 20 barrels per day.

We clip the following from the Dominion Mechanical and Milling News:

WHAT SHOULD BE KEPT OUT OF FLOUR.

"Milling has for its object the separation of so-called impurities from the starch and gluten cells of the wheat. The more perfectly this the more purer and whiter the flour and the better the grade of milling. The system which does this most effectively is the best system. The impurities to be removed are of three classes: First, there is the extraneous matter adhering to the wheat, with which may be classed the seam dirt; second, the bran; and third, the germ.

None of these should find place in the flour. All of them are properly classed as impurities, both as to color and the baking properties of the flour. All millers are substantially agreed as to the desirability of removing all adhering matter, though some claim that the quantity of seam dirt is over estimated. But with the bran and germ there is a dissonance of opinion. At least, some millers claim that the whitest flour is not the best flour.

Now, it may be stated that with the same wheat the whitest flour is the best flour. Discoloration is caused by one or all of the three impurities named. These impurities not only effect the color of the flour but its bread-baking qualities as well. The latest researches of scientists in this direction all teach substantially the same thing, which is, that every particle of bran and germ and dirt should be removed from the flour. For a long time many contended that the germ should be ground up with the flour, but it has been proved beyond a doubt that every particle of the oily germ retards just so much the process of fermentation. In this matter, then, as in many others, popular taste is vendicated by science, and the "craze for white flour" has a very substantial basis."—Ex.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

In giving a few opinions upon a subject so important as the social position of our teachers, there may be some who will not agree with them, but as they are the honest convictions of the writer, they are worthy of consideration.

The theory of degrading all classes of tutors to a certain degree of submission to the "Power that be," is a question; but let it not be for one moment misunderstood that teachers of public schools are not the mendicants our arrogant chiefs would suppose them to be; and, that in their might they will assert the right, which belongs to the principle of true freedom. Statesism is a principle I do not appreciate; its tendency is enervate: give me the man who thinks for himself, acts for himself and is a man for himself:—that man is worth a centenary of state-educated patriots. True liberty is the only law which will develop the true man.

The school teacher stands next to the mother of the family in the cause of good government. The mother inculcates the social and moral, and the teacher the intellectual qualities of life.

Why have we so few aged teachers? Medicine, Law and Divinity have their learned heads, why not this profession? The answer is readily supplied; the absence of that worldly pelf which prospers other professions, which, at the present day, do not require any higher degree of scholastic attainment, with a five-times greater monetary remuneration, causes the youth of the profession to abandon the calling of teaching.

Doctors, lawyers and other professional men may speak as they choose, but the teacher is bound down to the usually narrow views of three men who, in regard to experience and attainments, are greatly his inferiors.

Hoping these ideas may do some good to relieve the fraternity.

I am yours,

TEACHER.

Eugenia Falls.

This place, until recently, was the favorite resort of tourists, pleasure-seekers, fishing and pic-nic parties; but the frequent absence of any public accommodation, and the rickety condition of the stairs leading to the foot of the falls, rendered it unattractive latterly. A decided change for the better has taken place. Mr. J. McAleer is now the proprietor of the hotel, whose name is a guarantee for good cheer, while his ever-attentive good lady will not fail to make all feel happy who may chance to be their guests. A beautiful grove has been cleared of brushwood and boulders, and a large platform erected for the accommodation of dancing parties, with a commodious "stand" for musicians. Our pleasure-loving citizens, headed by our brass band, could not better enjoy a day of recreation, than a visit to the Falls.

Williamsford Station Items.

From a correspondent.

A SPILL.—On Saturday last one of our merchants sent 8 boxes of eggs to the station to be forwarded per express, but unfortunately the express agent placed them a trifle too near the track and a few minutes later the steamboat express came bounding through knocking two of the boxes into a thousand pieces.

(From an occasional correspondent.)

Weather very hot.

Rowing and sailing is the best resorts Owen Sound now affords; the roller rink not so popular.

The new post-office is fast approaching completion, which will be a very handsome and commodious building, also much more convenient than the old one.

Steamer Algoma left on Thursday at 4:35 p. m. with 50 first, 74 second-class passengers and 400 ton of freight.

Chief of Police Edgerton arrived here on Thursday with a prisoner named James Mitchell. After a hot chase for over a week he was captured in Toronto, charged with having stolen a number of barber's tools.

Steamer Athabasca arrived at 3:10 a. m. on Friday with 47 first, 35 second-class passengers, 21,000 bush. wheat, 8 cars flour, 1 car bran, 5 cars wheels, and departed Saturday 4.30 p.m., with 30 first, 20 second class passage and 100 labourors, 500 ton freight.

The Steamer Francis Smith, Pacific and Atlantic now running in connection with the C.P.R. are receiving a large amount of trade from their docks. The Francis took on board Tuesday evening last 180 Italians for Heron Bay also some freight.

A heavy thunder storm set in about 2:30 Saturday afternoon followed by some very large hail but only lasted a few minutes, and rained the ballance of the afternoon, which will help the crops and town gardens which were much in need of rain.

Some big work done by the C.P.R. Elevator last Friday while unloading the Athabaska, the marine leg lifted 4,200 bush. grain in 30 minutes. The big trouble now is in shoveling the grain which cannot be got to the marine leg fast enough, although there are two steam shovels and thirty men in the hold working all the time. It is anticipated that this leg will lift 7,500 bush. per hour for fifteen hours in a stretch, which is considered remarkable good work. There are at present 80,000 bush. in store, altho' shipments, averaging 20 cars per day, has been made all spring.

Mr. McDowell passed through en routed for the North-West, in charge of supplies for the Halifax battalion on Saturday.

County Court.

From the O. S. Times.

The General Session of the County Court opened on Tuesday last, His Honor Judge Macpherson presiding. The following gentlemen composed the Grand Jury:—

Francis Bole, Foreman, L. Goldsmith, Jno. B. Winter, Chas. Bumstead, Wm. Landells, John McDonald, Robt. Hay, D. W. Morrison, Benjamin J. Marsh, Ed. Kinch, M. Akitt, Norman Kelsey, R. Mickleborough, P. McColeman, C. Eaton, Wm. Tucker, Wm. A. Anderson, James Duff, Jr., S. Foster, John Wood, Wm. Gehl, John Henry, Sr., Chas. Gray.

There is only one indictment, that against E. Shanacy for receiving money, knowing it to be stolen, and the Grand Jury found no bill.

The following cases were disposed of:—

TOWNSEND vs. JENKINS.—Our readers will remember the celebrated libel suit of Jenkins of the Durham Chronicle, against Townsend of the Review, tried at the Winter Assizes, in which Jenkins got a verdict of $50 and costs. He had the Review office seized to satisfy his judgment, when the father of Townsend stepped in and claimed the plant as his, and this interpleader action was to decide to whom the property belonged. Jenkins was again successful. D. Morrison for plaintiff. J. C. Echlin for defendant.

GILLIES vs. BREESE.—Action for alleged illegal seizure for rent. The plaintiff contended that there was a second seizure. Verdict for plaintiff, damages received. Jas. Masson for plaintiff. S. J. Lane, Q. C., for defendant.

LEMON vs. WALTERS.—Action arising out of horse trade. Settled by parties out of court.

A GOLDEN OPINION.

Mrs. Wm. Allan, of Acton, declares that Hagyard's Yellow Oil is the best household remedy in the world for colds, croup, sore throat, burns, scalds and other painful complaints. Her opinion is well founded.

There is now in the United States treasury, at Washington, over five hundred million dollars of Government money, and the authorities are sorely perplexed to know what to do with it. Lying there as it does, it is so much dead matter, and it represents so much out of the money circulation of the country, at a time when the want of money is a good deal felt in many departments of business. The national debt is still large, but the clamour of interested ones, who want the national bonds and securities, is that the debt is being paid off too fast, and it seems as though they are strong enough to prevent payment being made any faster. Some raise the cry that public money ought not to be collected so fast from the people, but as it comes in principally from customs duties, the manufacturers and other protected parties are strong enough to prevent much lowering of the tariff. The predicament is an amusing one. Truth would venture to suggest, as a speedy solution of the difficulty, consulting with the Ottawa Government. If our Premier and his colleagues could not find some company or some scheme to level that pile, they would prove themselves less powerful in grappling with United States affairs than with those of Canada. A five hundred million surplus at Ottawa could be readily got rid of.—Truth.

EASILY CAUGHT.

It is very easily to catch cold, but not so easy to cure it unless you use Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, the best remedy for all throat, bronchial and lung troubles, coughs, colds and consumptive tendencies.

England in Egypt.

"WHY is England interfering in Egypt? What interests of her own is she thereby securing! How come the English to be fighting in the Soudan?" These and similar questions are being asked by many correspondents.

The reason why England has not only interfered in the affairs of Egypt, but has for several years practically assumed control over them, are two: One is a political, the other a financial, reason.

The political reason arose when the Suez Canal was completed, running through the territory of Egypt, and connecting by a water-way the Mediterranean and the Red Seas. This great canal was opened in the autumn of 1869. England found that it shortened the voyage from her own shores to her great Indian Empire by more than one-third.

Inasmuch as that Empire has long been threatened by Russia, it became necessary that England should see that the Suez Canal was so guarded as to enable her to command and use it in time of need; and the only way for England to do this was to acquire a commanding influence over the Egyptian Government.

The financial reason why England is in control of Egyptian affairs is the fact that Egypt is a debtor to a large body of English holders of her bonds and other securities; and it became necessary that the finances of Egypt should be managed so as to pay her creditors their interest, and at the same time, if possible, preserve the Egyptian treasury from hopeless bankruptcy.

The late ruler of Egypt, Ismail Pasha, spent enormous sums of money on public works and improvements. He sunk large sums in the Suez Canal, and thereby at last reduced his treasury to the verge of bankruptcy. He was dethroned by English influence, and his son, Tewfik, was made Khedive in his place.

Then England united with France in the effort to adjust the Egyptian finances. A system called the "dual control" was established by which an English and a French commissioner took charge of the collection and expenditure of the Egyptian revenues.

After a time France withdrew from this arrangement, and England was left to the sole control of the Egyptian Administration. The Government under Tewfik was feeble and inefficient, and it soon appeared that English influence had become paramount, and was really the ruling power.

But now a revolt against this state of things took place in Egypt. Arabi Pasha, Minister of War, headed a large native party, and the greater part of the Egyptian army, is resisting a foreign interference with Egyptian affairs. He took possession of Alexandria, the chief port, and seemed on the point of overthrowing the feeble Khedive.

Then the English, resolved to keep their hold on Egypt, and to maintain the Khedive they had set on his throne, bombarded Alexandria, drove Arabi Pasha from it, followed him up with an army, and overwhelming defeated him, scattered his forces, and took him prisoner, at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir.

Scarcely had Arabi's overthrow been achieved, when a fresh revolt broke out far to the southward, in the vague desert region called "the Soudan." This region was conquered by the Egyptians sixty years ago; and its chief towns, scattered far apart from each other along the Nile and in the deserts, were garrisoned by Egyptian troops.

The people of Soudan had always been oppressed and ill-treated by their Egyptian conquerors, and were ripe for revolt. An Arab named Achmet Mohammed, had already made his appearance in the Soudan, proclaiming himself the prophet of Islam, the successor of Mohammed commissioned by God to restore Mohammedan power throughout the world. This was the man now so well-known as the "Mahdi," or "The False Prophet."

The revolt of the Mahdi in the Soudan was thus of a two-fold nature. It had the double aim of throwing off the Egyptian yoke, and of beginning a new Moslem crusade. The Mahdi began to attack, capture and massacre the Egyptian garrisons with his wild Arab hordes; and soon the revolt grew so formidable that it seemed to threaten Egypt proper itself.

Great Britain, resolved both to retain its hold on Egypt and to maintain the existing government, now "advised"—the advice really being a command—the Khedive to give up the Soudan, and to withdraw his garrison from it. But this proved a task too difficult for the weak Egyptian Administration. So England, to help Egypt out of the difficulty, herself undertook to relieve and to withdraw the garrisons in the Soudan.

This is how Gordon came to be sent to Khartoum, and how it is that English troops have been operating in the Soudan. It is the reason why General Graham has been and is still fighting Osman Digna, a lieutenant of the Mahdi, near Suakin; and why the troops of Lord Wolseley are encamped on the Nile.

In a word, England maintains her grasp on Egypt, because she must control the water-way of the Suez Canal, and because she must guard the interests of the English creditors of the Egyptian Government. And she has been operating in the Soudan because she wishes at the same time to rid Egypt of the burden of ruling that large hostile territory, to get away from it the Egyptian garrisons, and to protect Egypt from the conquering advance of the Mahdi into her territory.—Youth's Companion.

Wise Advice to Young Men.

What are you shooting at—something or nothing? Are you wasting powder as well as time for naught, or are you aiming at a target with a will and purpose to hit it? See the marksman as with steady poise he holds the rifle, and with keen glance sights the centre of the target. That shot piercing the very centre, is the result of skill acquired through long and patient practice. He aimed straight for the mark with a purpose to hit it full and square.

Rifle shots in business, aiming at something and hitting it, are the only effective work in this age of keen, close competition. Too many men scatter powder and shot in trade, with but little purpose. They want a wide mark to aim at, and if they can corner the entire business of a community or neighborhood, are seemingly happy. Their motto is, for all the grist to go to their mill and to take liberal toll. They aim at almost everything in the way of business, and would monopolize it if they could.

They become merchant, manufacturer, farmer, speculator, money lender, but usually are greater borrowers than lenders. They do nothing thoroughly and systematically, but gradually allow their affairs to go at loose ends until at last come failure and bankruptcy.

Double barreled shot-guns may do effective work in duck shooting, but this sort of scattering fire in business has caused too many lame ducks in all the marts of trade.

Successful business-men have a keen eye for the one pursuit in which they are engaged. The target is ever before them and they aim straight at it. That mark is their chief object in life, and with strenuous effort they seek to win the prize.

Rifled cannon are more effective than smooth bores, the ball goes truer and pierces deeper. The shot hits hard and with penetrating power. The powder is not wasted. Just so with business-men that have a distinct purpose in view; they aim to accomplish something and they do it.

Many a merchant has been successful up to the point where he engaged in outside speculations. As long as he concentrated his aims on his business it prospered, but as soon as he attempted to cover too much ground his profits lessened. Outside speculations have proved the sluiceways of disaster to many a hitherto well-to-do merchant, who, in the eagerness to grasp more, lost all.

A man who dabbles in everything never amounts to much in business or professional pursuits. Inventors whose heads are full of all sorts of appliances and devices never make any headway. They give their time and mind up to trifles instead of incarnating some grand idea in solid, substantial form that would benefit the world. The lawyer or doctor who would become each by turns lowers the professional tone of both, as well as lowers himself in public opinion.

In nature there is an appropriateness of means to the end, and consequently permanence and stability. Business conducted under similar conditions is liable to less fluctuations than when exposed to haphazard control. Men must understand their business, cultivate it, attend to it, if they would have it prosper and grow. The means employed must be adequate to the end hoped for, otherwise there will be disappointment and failure.

The great lesson to learn is application. Too much haste is attended with too much danger. A mere surface knowledge of business is like a thin veneer to furniture, it will not stand the rub and friction of active wear. A trained marksman does not shoot at random. That glance along the gun barrel, although swift, is well measured and the aim is deliberate before the trigger is pulled. Long practice and steady application has given the necessary skill to drive the centre.

The same rule holds good in business. Experience and application are all important. Success is not through luck and chance, but through patient and systematic effort. The plodder reapes while the prodigal fails. It is the diligent hand that waxeth rich and strong.

There is a sublime heroism in carving one's own way through the world. Success gained through honest endeavor is a matter for honest pride. It is far more manly to boast of one's own pedigree of moral worth and success than to boast of the distinction of a father's name.

True nobility of character is to aim to be somebody in the world and to get there honorably. Weaklings and pigmies fall to the rear, but men brave of will and single of purpose march at the head of columns.

A WIDE SPREAD EVIL.

The great source of consumption and of ugly sores is scrofula in the blood. Burdock Blood Bitters purify the entire system and cure scrofula, as well as the more common blood humors.

How to Live Well.

To live well, economy is necessary. No matter if persons are rich or have large incomes, they should be economical; for to waste is wicked. Many people would be economical if they knew how, but the practice of economy is an art. Many people use expensive articles of food and dress when cheaper ones would be in every way better and more serviceable. Especially in regulating table-expenses is there great want of economy. A little useful information concerning the qualities of food, the amount of nutritive matter they contain, the wants of the human system, and the best way of cooking, would often save fully one-third, and, in many instances, half the expense. A wise economy in table expenses is favorable to health, and thus prevents doctor's bills and conduces to strength and happiness.

Horticultural Notes.

The ill effects of pinching back the young and growing shoots of fruit trees and grapevines during the summer are greater than the benefit. It is certainly unnatural, and the injury to the second growth entails a loss of vitality to the plant. There is this, however, to be said in its favor, under proper restrictions: The unusual vigor of some unfruitful trees may be changed by pinching back the shoots during summer, and when extreme methods must be resorted to, if the roots are cut back, vigor of growth will cease, and fruitfulness be resumed. This only goes to show that the practice is too dangerous to follow at all times.

2. One of the most important operations is thinning fruit. For market, the profit will be largely increased by this forethought, as the crop remaining on thrifty trees will in most instances measure as much in bulk as if all had been allowed to remain. The great item of profit, however, is the increased value, as regards size and quality. The best evidence we possess as to the usefulness of thinning is to be found in the glass vinery, for he who once neglects it will quickly find his mistake.

3. The greatest incentive to growth of grass is to fertilize the lawn freely. Autumn application of old rotted manure, to be raked off the following spring, after the strength has been conveyed to the soil, will bring best results; next to it in efficiency is ground bones with the addition of ground gypsum, sown broadcast early in the season. The latter is superior in one respect—more lasting; its effect is plainly discernable for several years. Unleached wood-ashes is always in order as a top-dressing; very invigorating to growing grass.

4. But no matter how strong the growth nor rich the soil, if we do not cut the turf frequently it will never present the attractive appearance of a well kept lawn. During a favorable season the lawn-mower must always be used once a week; the length of time between cuttings, however, will have to be regulated by the rains, as during damp weather the grass grows much more rapidly. The surface of the lawn ought to receive an occasional raking to remove dead grass and foreign substances that invariably collect and impede growth.

5. We gain several days by caring for early vegetable plants in the true way. Transplanted stock is greatly superior to that allowed to remain where the seed was sown. Plants started in a hotbed should always have a season of growth in the cold-frame before setting in the open air, as a sudden check resulting from extremes of temperature is a loss in more ways than one. In a small way the plants are best taken out with a trowel during a damp time, so that the soil will adhere to the roots, and an occasional watering with liquid manure gives them an additional impetus in the early stages of growth.

6. To save the crop bagging grapes has come to be almost a necessity. Two-pound bags are proper for most clusters, and should have one or both of the lower corners cut off to allow the rains to pass out. Slip the bunches in, and pin over the upper corners tightly around the stem. The proper time is from when the berries are all set until the size of small peas—but "earlier the better" is sound doctrine.

7. Weeds that increase only by seeds may readily be kept in subjection by cutting off the tops before the seeds mature; one or two years generally suffices to eradicate them. Those that multiply also by underground stems or stolons are the bane of every careful cultivator. But even these cannot exist without foliage—their breathing apparatus—so by constantly cutting off the tops of such plants as soon as they show above ground, the roots are eventually destroyed. Constant tillage for two or three seasons will kill any species of plant life, no matter how tenacious it may be, and in the end will prove more effectual than all the applications of lime, kerosene, sulphuric acid, etc., so frequently recommended.

Poor Soil Improvement.

The methods of using clover for the renovation of exhausted lands are simple. The crop is usually fertilized with plaster only, applied at the rate of about 100 pounds to the acre on the young crop in late spring or early June. It is commonly used partly for fodder, at least one cutting being made early in the second season after seeding; then the second crop may be allowed to grow till quite ripe before it is plowed in. If it is allowed to grow still another year, a larger mass of roots and stubble will be left to decay in the soil. The manure made with the aid of this fodder may be put anywhere on the farm, where it is most needed. The clover may be followed by corn and then by wheat with a dressing of manure; or if the land is in very low condition and needs still more renovation, clover may be immediately sown again, to be treated as above.

In thus using clover for the improvement of soils it must not be forgotten that it can add no phosphoric acid, potash, lime or magnesia to the soil—and that it needs quite as much of these important elements of the food of all plants as the corn crop does, and much more than the wheat crop, although it, for the time, leaves the soil in a better condition for wheat than if it had not been grown there. Consequently no good clover crop can be obtained on a soil that is worn out and barren because these matters are exhausted; they must be supplied in phosphate and potash salts, or ashes. And even if the soil is not as poor as this, a dressing of these commercial manures may often so much improve the clover as to make their the profitable; for the larger this crop is, the more there is of vegetable matters to be ploughed in; and its beneficial effect undoubtedly depends very much on this vegetable matter accumulated in its roots and stubble, or in the whole crop if that is turned under and which is derived mostly from the air, and not from the soil.

Wheat in America and India.

Consul General Leonard at Calcutta says that wheat is, and will continue to be, raised cheaper in India than in America, because, even with our improved machinery, our wheat growers cannot compete with the laborer who works for from seven to ten cents a day, and with that sum feeds himself and family, who live in a house which can be built for less than $5, want scarcely any clothing, no furniture and less and cheaper food than any other human being who lives among civilized people. Yet, in spite of this, the Consul General is doubtful whether this cheap wheat can be got to England as cheaply or can be sold there for any less than the wheat from America. The transportation of grain and especially the handling of it by coolies, where ever it has to be transferred, and the charges of the different middlemen, are likely, for some time, to cost more than the shipment and handling by the railway and elevator systems of America. The construction of railways will have much to do with the reduction of the cost of wheat, and that is constantly going on. During the years 1883 84, 539 miles of new railroads were built. Roads are proposed which, if built would greatly stimulate the production and exportation of wheat. But without these there is sure to be an amount of wheat raised and exported from India, with that from Russia, Egypt and other sources, to keep down the prices of American and all other wheat.

The Borrowed Horse.

I will relate a little circumstance that took place in Mexico a few years before I left there. One of my friends had a horse extremely gentle, and of such an easy, agreeable gait that he took the greatest care of him, and held him at a great price. A well-fed, big, and lusty friar was a friend to our neighbor—one who liked the good things of this world as well as he liked to ride out to the small towns bordering upon the city of Mexico and take a dinner with the bonny lasses and countrymen inhabiting those villages. He used to ask my friend to loan him his horse to take these excursions just around the capital, and, as his requests were granted with so good a grace, he, in a short time, went so far as to ask the loan of this favorite animal to go to Cuernavaca, a distance of eighteen leagues. As this happened pretty often, our friend complained to me one day of the indiscretion of the friar. I asked him if he could procure me a friar's dress for a few days, and leave his horse with me for the same time. He did so. I dressed myself in the friar's dress, and went in where the horse was. I took a good whip in my hand, and made him do penance for no other sin but that of too much gentleness. Going out I took off my friar's dress, and went in again in my own dress, and handled him gently. I repeated the operation a few days, at the end of which I took the horse back to his master, and told him he might lend him to the friar whenever he pleased. A day or two after he came to my store. "Your remedy," said he, "has had a marvellous effect. Our monk has just left my house, perfectly persuaded that my horse is possessed with the devil. For when the borrower came up to take him by the bridle to get on him, he was so frightened, and wheeled round so quick, and flew away from him with so much terror, that one would have said that he took him for the destroying angel." The friar crossed himself many times, hurried away in all haste to the convent to sprinkle himself with holy water, and never asked my friend for his horse again. In this case the horse remembered the dress, not the features of the individual who used the whip on him.

An American Political Job.

Immense inconvenience is at present being caused to all passengers arriving at New York by a disreputable job perpetrated in the interests of the Republican party. Although there are splendid quays at which the largest steamers can lie alongside and disembark passengers and luggage, an ordinance was passed that all vessels arriving should be obliged to disembark their passengers and luggage in small steamers, the contract being given, of course, to a political supporter, although another company offered to supply the steamers on lower terms. The consequence is that instead of landing comfortably from the steamers on the warves, all the passengers are obliged to transfer themselves and their baggage to dirty little tugs, where they are huddled together on the deck, and without shelter in case of wet. For this gratuitous annoyance they are obliged to pay the sum of sixty-five cents, or rather more than half a crown, for each article of baggage. Truly the Americans are the most long-suffering of people, for in no country in the effete old continent would the authorities venture to carry out such an un-called-for interference with the liberty of trade.

A number of wicked little boys were playing base ball in a vacant lot up-town last Sunday morning. "This is scandalous," remarked a gentleman on his way to church. "I wonder there is no policeman about to stop it." "He'll be here purty soon," said a small boy; "I'm watchin' out for him." "Watching out for him?" "Yes, he's over at de beer saloon, playin' seven up wid de boss."

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

At the opening of the meeting Brother Gardner announced that the Hon. Typhoon Williams, of Hamilton, was in the anteroom and would address the meeting. The honorable gentleman was thirteen days footing it from Hamilton to Detroit, and reached here in a very exhausted condition. When brought into the hall by the Reception Committee he was shaky in the left leg, nearsighted in both eyes, and the most casual observer could see that his spinal column was as much out of plumb as the leaning tower of Pisa.

The subject of his few remarks was announced as: "Am Our Cup Full?' The orator took the ground that it wasn't. He was continually overhearing people remark that their burdens were almost unbearable, and that life could produce no further sorrow for them. Other people were constantly declaring that they had no longer any confidence in human nature, and didn't care how soon they were laid away to rest under the drooping yew-yew tree.

No human cup was even half full. People had lost money, friends, position—people were poor and sick—people were being vilified and slandered, but all these trials had their sunny side and were soon over. The feelings of a candidate for Governor who gets left are supposed to be intense, but they can not be compared to the feelings of a man who gets out of bed in the morning to find forty-eight head of cabbage gone with a spotted cow. The loss of fortune seems a terrible blow, but it isn't so bad when you come to look into the matter. It simply means going afoot instead of prancing around on the street cars—eating more codfish and less beef—wearing old clothes out instead of giving them away to glass peddlers.

Poverty seems a misfortune, but yet the poor man needn't have his hair cut or his photograph taken, and no one expects him to give high teas or rent a box in the postoffice.

The orator drank three pints of water, spoke for thirteen minutes and upset Bob Ingersoll, Plato, Diogenes, Henry Ward Beecher, Paradise Lost and the King of the Sandwich Islands. When he made his retreat it was noticed that his dress coat was made to also answer for a shirt, and for this or some other reason he was enthusiastically applauded.

GONE TO OTTAWA.

The President then officially announced that Giveadam Jones had been dispatched to Ottawa to set up and put in running order a branch lodge to be known as "The Colored Canadian Tenderfoots." Brother Jones carries with him a written certificate of identity signed by all the officers of the club, and countersigned by the President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. He will be known by a slight cast in the left eye and a roll in his gait, and any Canadian lending him money must do so at his peril.

NABBED.

Some time since the Hon. Cohort Jackson read an original poem before the club which he entitled: Excelsior." His poem was received with much favor and he was given a seat of honor under one of the bear traps. For some reason or other Waydown Bebee mistrusted the originality of the poem and set to work to unearth the red-handed plagiarist. He now rose up in meeting and asked the Secretary to read Brother Jackson's poem and compare it with the one in the printed volume he laid on the desk. The poem in the book was entitled: "The Old Oak Bucket." "Excelsior" read:

How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood,
Which fond recollection presents to the view;
The orchard, the meadow—the deep tangled wild wood—
And every loved spot which my infancy knew.

When the two poems were compared it was discovered that both were exactly alike and the President asked Brother Jackson to come to the front and explain.

"It am what dey call a curus coincidence, sah."

"Yes, perhaps it am."

"I probably happened to think of de same chilehood de odder man did."

"Exactly, an' I'm gwine to fix things so you won't do it again. Brudder Jackson, plagiarism am only a shade better dan hoss-stealin', an a good deal meaner dan settin' a hoss barn on fiah. I shall fine you fo' hundred dollars and suspend your active membership fur de space of six weeks."

Victor Hugo, who survived to such an old age, was when born such a tiny, frail and grotesquely hideous bit of humanity that the doctors declared he could not possibly live to grow up.

A petty scandal having been set afloat concerning him, the pastor of an African Methodist church in Des Moines, Iowa, entered upon an explanation of his connection with the affair to his congregation on Sunday from the pulpit. He was greatly excited, and in the course of his remarks dropped dead.

The latest discovery of gold diggings is in the Santa Rosa mountains of Chihuahua, Mexico, an almost inaccessible region surrounded by arid deserts and infested by rattlesnakes and hostile Indians. Fabulous reports of wealth, however, have started the usual caravans of adventurous men to the locality from Eagle Pass, New Mexico.

In the Journal des Debats M. de Parville says he was present at the birth of the "microbe," and that "it came into existence in the hall of the academie des Sciences one Monday in February, at 4:30 in the afternoon." This is perhaps the only case on record in which the introduction of a new word has been accurately timed.

Seven weeks before his death, Gordon sent from Khartoum, inclosing a well-executed decoration, this letter in Arabic to his old friend and patron, Ismail: "To His Highness the august Ismail Pacha, ex-Khedive of Egypt! May God protect him!—Among the many honors which your Highness was pleased to shower upon me during your glorious reign, you have bestowed upon me many decorations of which I am proud, and for which I am grateful. Having been appointed Governor of the Soudan, I repaired at once to my post, and arrived safe and sound at Khartoum. Two months later communication with the north was cut off and the city was besieged. During the siege it has been my lot to witness the many cases in which soldiers, civil employes and leading men of the country displayed courage and self-sacrifice in valiantly undergoing difficulties and privations. To award their commendable conduct and fidelity I caused decorations to be made for distribution among them. I have already sent a specimen of this decoration to your Highness, but as I fear it may never have reached you, I send to-day another for your acceptance. Receive it, Highness, in remembrance of my affectionate devotion, with the respectful homage of your grateful and faithful servant, C. G. GORDON."

Private vs. Public Advertising.

The newspaper is, in every sense, the best medium for advertising; and, for a given result, it is by far the cheapest also. It reaches a far greater number of possible customers than any private announcement can; and it is more certain to receive attention. The private circular is thrown aside as a thing of which people have come to regard as a bore, and which is neglected because its recipients have no time to attend to it. The newspaper is used in each day's hour of leisure, and readers find interest in reading its advertisements as well as its news, because of the variety they present and the information they convey respecting a wide diversity of interests. It may be safely estimated that an announcement made through the press is noticed by fifty readers, where, made in a private way, it would reach but one. If, therefore, the same amount were expended in either case, the result would be fifty fold better from the former method than from the latter. There are undoubtedly cases in which the circular is a better medium than the newspaper. But such cases are quite exceptional, and the sooner advertisers learn the folly of their present large expenditures in seeking publicity through private means, the better for their pockets and their success.

The Revised Bible.

Among the odds and ends relating to the new issue the following will be interesting:—The paper upon which it has been printed was manufactured at the Oxford University's paper mills at Wolvercote, near Oxford, where 375 tons of rags have been worked up into 250 tons of paper. This would cover 2¼ square miles. In a strip of six inches wide it would go round the world, or if the pages were laid open one after another it would also be sufficient to encircle the globe's circumference. The sheets piled on reams as they leave the mill would make a column ten times the height of St Paul's, or, folded into books before binding, a column a hundred times the height of that cathedral. The copies which are being prepared by the Oxford University Press alone, would, if placed flat one upon another, make a column more than 14 miles high, or, if placed end on end, would make a column 74 miles high. Some idea of the number of goat and sheep skins which have been required for binding the copies may be gathered from the fact that 1560 goatskins have been used in binding the copies which will be presented among the American Committee of Revision on the 21st of this month. A special Act of Congress has been passed to admit these books into the United States duty free.

A prominent divine who was to officiate at a wedding, finding himself and congregation in the church considerably in advance of the bridal party, asked that someone should strike up a hymn to improve the time. CALM AFTER STORM.

"[illegible]nd you really must go, Isidore?"

"I absolutely must, petite—my father [illegible] it; and I am of sons the most obedient, as thou knowest."

[illegible] e tone of the question and answer [illegible] the story of Monsieur and Madame [illegible] st's married life as eloquently as [illegible] ords could do. Natural as Cressida's appeal to her young husband is, she [illegible] it timidly, and wish a frightened [illegible] in her large lustrous eyes, while he [illegible] ra with a gay carelessness that is [illegible] t insulting in its indifference, and [illegible] on cheerfully sipping his coffee and [illegible] ng his letters, while she bends her [illegible] t head over the breakfast-tray, to [illegible] the painful flush that rises to her [illegible]

[illegible] t one year had passed since the [illegible] le wedding in the suburban church, [illegible] the Osbornes and Miss Smerdon [illegible] for the antipodes, since Cressida [illegible] her life into Isidore St. Just's keeping. [illegible] Such a long, long year it seems to [illegible] ida—she is too loyal, even in her own [illegible] ghts, to add "such a sad and dreary [illegible]" But she thinks that if all the days [illegible] e lengthen out so intolerably as these [illegible] days have done, the Psalmist surely [illegible] when he termed man's span of life [illegible] t one.

[illegible] he year that had placed a broad im[illegible]ble river between her and the old [illegible] l days has hardly used her fairly. [illegible] beauty has not ripened and perfected [illegible] ts rare promise is, as yet at least, far [illegible] being fulfilled. And Isidore has [illegible] than once told her, with jesting [illegible] ness, that the school-girl Cressida was [illegible] rettier than is Madame St. Just in [illegible] ghteenth year.

[illegible] himself has grown noticeably hand[illegible] in the same space of time. The idle [illegible] uxurious life he has led has evidently [illegible] reed with him; he looks as though [illegible] d not a care or trouble in the world, [illegible] tares that world boldly in the face [illegible] the bright, audacious, defiant selfishness [illegible] of one who knows himself its master. [illegible] he love Cressida still? Is the marriage [illegible] happy one? No one puts the question [illegible] to him, and he is not given to introspective reverie. But in her long empty [illegible] and dull companionless evenings—[illegible] after the first few weeks, Monsieur [illegible] just bestowed but a small proportion [illegible] s time upon his wife—Cressida reviews the subject in a long monotony [illegible] ln.

[illegible] at the marriage is in some degree a [illegible] re she admits; there is no possibility [illegible] nying so patent a fact. That they [illegible] no single thought, aspiration, or [illegible] ment in common is her fault, no [illegible]. she never thinks of blaming him. [illegible] nversation between them flags by [illegible] es till it dies away to a mere neces[illegible] interchange of orders and promises [illegible] ey, it is doubtless because she is too [illegible] d to understand or interest him long. [illegible] thought puzzles her a little, for she [illegible] ot been wont to think herself a dunce; [illegible] was certainly cleverer than the other [illegible] s at the Misses Smerdon's school. But [illegible] Isidore is a man, and a man's standards [illegible] is so different, so hopelessly high, [illegible] Cressida concludes with a sigh.

[illegible] ne, he sought her out, wooed her [illegible] onately, seemed to love her well, [illegible] she, in her childish shyness, rather [illegible] k from, and certainly made no such [illegible] efforts to please him as she had seen [illegible] ptiably of late. But what of that? [illegible] empire was built upon sand, as [illegible] should have known from the first. [illegible] was a pretty child, and she amused [illegible]—that was all! She is not even pretty [illegible]

[illegible] d in truth, musing and moping thus, [illegible] ida loses the more brilliant hues [illegible] first dazzled the Frenchman's beauty-[illegible] g eye. The slender figure grows [illegible] fully angular and thin, the sweet [illegible] n eyes are dim and misty with shed [illegible] unshed tears, the soft curved lips [illegible] pinched and pale, the young face is [illegible] wful always—saddest perhaps when [illegible] ces a timid propitiatory smile—and [illegible] eadfully tragic at times.

[illegible] mething of this is passing through [illegible] ida's mind now, as she gulps down [illegible] le lump that rises in her throat, and [illegible] her dry toast into elaborate diamonds [illegible] triangles, which, after all her pains, [illegible] destined never to be eaten; and, [illegible] gh the husband and wife are not [illegible] given to think in common, Isidore [illegible] tating the same subject from a dif[illegible] nt point of view.

"[illegible]ah!" he says to himself, with a [illegible] shrug of unaffected disgust. "How [illegible] she grows, with her triste air of [illegible] yr, her red eyelids, and her thin cheeks! And they say these English keep their beauty! It will be no hardship—no, no; the sacrifice would be the other way—for her—of course." Monsieur raises his fine brows, and smiles ineffably across the table, as though Cressida's welfare were at that moment occupying his benignant mind.

"What is it, Isidore?" she asks, with a sudden mistrust born of that brilliant smile; she has known that dazzling show of milk-white teeth and flashing dark eyes to be the forerunner of a marital storm before now—a storm in which the cruellest taunts have been uttered in silvery tones, in which her heart has been rent and her pride trampled upon.

So the "What is it?" is uttered in a little gasp and quickly followed by a hurried, "Have I done anything wrong?" It is a childish phrase; in nine things out of ten Cressida is a child still, and it absolutely amuses Monsieur St. Just.

"Wrong?" he repeats tranquilly. No; if thou hast packed my valise, and filled the silver flask with brandy, and told Matilda Jane to send the cab for twelve o'clock, thou hast done rightly and well; and, since these were my explicit directions, I am sure thou hast forgotten none of them!"

Cressida nods her golden head, and a faint flush of pleasure rises in the soft hollow of her cheek. Praise from him has grown precious in proportion to its rarity, and he is surely praising her now!

"Yes," she says, a little ring of triumph in her tone, "everything is quite ready, quite as you wished it, Isidore"—creeping a little nearer and looking up into the keen dark face with misty brown eyes—"I am a good wife, am I not?"

Just for a second the exquisite serenity of Monsieur St. Just's face is disturbed, the eyes turn restlessly from those that search and strive to chain them, the smooth brow is shadowed and drawn; there is something of regret and remorse in the look that childish pleadings conjures up; but all passes, quickly as breath passes from the polished surface of a mirror, and he is his gay insouciant self again.

"Thou art an angel," he says cheerily, and the black moustache brushes the smooth golden hair in a careless kiss. "And now, mon ange, it is time to say good-bye."

"But, Isidore, you have never told me ——When will you be back?"

There is something like terror in her look and tone. It is not that she can spare him so ill—that his society is so necessary to her; for a long time she has acknowledged to herself, with a deadly chill at her heart and a guilty consciousness, that she is happier in his absence than his presence. But this journey of which she knows neither the end nor the purpose fills her with a vaguely terrible foreboding. She is so young—so ignorant of the world's ways—so utterly alone, for, on this side of the world at least, she has not a single soul she can call friend.

All this comes over the shrinking girl's soul as she clings with tragic passion to her young husband, and repeats a little wildly—

"Isidore, tell me when I may expect you."

"Until thou seest me," is the mocking answer; then the man goes on more gently. "But, Cressida, there must be no fretting; my business is of the most importance, or I would not go. What then? Paris is not the North Pole or the Antipodes; and thou wilt hear from me sooner than thou expectest."

And then he goes, with a light cold kiss and an odd look at the slender girl-figure bathed in the morning sunshine, and round the prettily furnished room, as though he were mentally photographing both frame and picture—goes with a smile in his dark eyes—goes whistling a few bars from a popular opera—bars that haunt and torture Cressida's memory for many a day to come.

As the cab rattles down the street, Cressida comes slowly up-stairs and drops heavily into the nearest chair, with a dazed unreasonable feeling that she has passed through some crisis of her fate. She sits there with cold locked hands and wide pathetic eyes, so motionless and miserable-looking that the brisk little maid who, all unnoticed, has removed the breakfast-service and performed one or two duties with unnecessary noise and clatter that is powerless to stir the statue-like figure in the window, grows alarmed at last, and informs her mistress, with very round eyes and forcible emphasis, that she is sure there is something wrong with the poor young lady on the first floor.

This sends Mrs. Clarke up-stairs as fast as an obese form and asthmatic breath will permit. The visit is prompted partly by curiosity and partly by prudential motives; for, though the St. Justs have hitherto been model lodgers in the matter of prompt payment, the landlady knows by painful experience that the lodger you trust is the lodger who deceives you; and in Monsieur St. Just's departure itself there is something rather suspicious.

As she stands in the doorway, however, looking with shrewd experience-sharpened eyes at the slender figure in the great arm-chair, her heart suddenly softens and her suspicions die away. The landlady retires into the background and the true woman comes to the front. There is none of the passionate grief that suggests a woman's tragedy here. This is not a wronged woman, a deserted wife, but a dazed terror-stricken child.

"Mrs. St. Just!" Cressida starts and raises her head at the sound.

"Did you want anything, Mrs. Clarke?"

"No, my dear, not exactly"—the good woman pauses, a little embarrassed by the slip that Cressida has not noticed. "I beg your pardon, ma'am; but you do look so young and lonely that it slipped out unawares!"

"You are very kind," Cressida says gratefully, yet a little abstractedly too. Her mind is in so dreamy and chaotic a state that she only vaguely knows what is passing round her.

"Kind!" the landlady repeats, with a short laugh. "Well, excuse me the disrespect; but I wonder who wouldn't be kind when they see a pretty young thing like you fretting her bright eyes out all for nothing at all? I tell you what it is, Mrs. St. Just, you're too lonesome like!"

Tears rise quickly in the girl's eyes; but they are not painful tears now. Cressida is so lonely indeed that the rough and homely kindness fall like music on her ears.

"Yes, it is," she says apologetically. "But, won't you sit down, Mrs. Clarke?"—wheeling Isidore's own cushioned chair forward as she speaks.

"Well, thank you kindly, ma'am, I will; for what with my legs and my breath, them stairs is a regular Mont Blank to me; and I have got a word or two to say before I go. You'll promise not to be offended with me, won't you?"

"I am sure you mean to be kind!" Cressida says, staring with wondering eyes into the plain face, but feeling a sense of safety and protection in the homely presence.

"That I do!" the woman answers warmly. "Then just you tell me what made you look so woe-begone and wretched that Susan sent me up to see what ailed you. Was it anything about your husband?"

A swift flush, a startled look, a little haughty stiffening of the slender white throat—Cressida gives no other; but Mrs. Clarke takes these for all affirmative answers.

"Ah, well, my dear, I don't mean to hurt your feelings; but you are young, and he too, for that matter,, and a little short tempered, as all foreigners are! And I thought perhaps you had had a falling out—that's all!"

Young as she is, Cressida has sense enough to know that the rough touch on her sorely wounded pride is kindly meant. So, though she does not answer without effort, she answers without a trace of offence.

"We have had no quarrel, Mrs. Clarke. Monsieur St. Just has been called away on business, that is all."

"Business!" the landlady grunts in a dissatisfied sort of fashion. She believes implicitly every word the girl tells her; but her distrust of the absent Isidore is rather augmented than decreased. "I did not know he had any business, ma'am," she finishes civilly, rising to take her departure now, for Cressida does not seem inclined for further confidences. "I hope, for your sake, he will be back soon, for it is terribly dull for you."

"It is, rather," Cressida agrees, with a smile that is rather more forlorn than her gravity. "But I shall hear from him to-morrow, and then——"

The sentence ends in a weary little sigh for the door is closed, the good natured woman gone, and the young wife thrown back once more upon the dreary company of her own thoughts.

It is a long dreary day, but it wears away at last; and as she lays her tired head upon the pillow, she thinks, with her last waking thought, that its successor can hardly equal it in length or dulness. Poor little Cressida; even her dreams, though they are restless and feverish enough, bring to her no dim foreshadowings of what the long to-morrow is to be!

"I cannot hear from Isidore to-morrow," she murmurs drowsily; "but the next day—oh surely the next day I shall have a letter!"

But, strange to say, she does hear from Monsieur St. Just earlier than she expects, early indeed on the following day. She is still seated at the breakfast-table, sipping her tea and reading the newspaper by way of lengthening out the solitary meal, which gives her at least the semblance of an occupation, when Susan comes into the room with a telegram.

It is the very first Cressida has ever received, and the sight of the orange coloured envelope fills her with a vague immeasurable dread. Isidore must be dead or dying.

She tears the fatal missive open and masters its contents. These are not by any means what she expects; they bring a quick bright colour to her cheeks, and light half glad, half tearful to her soft brown eyes.

"Come to Paris at once," Isidore telegraphs; "my father wishes to see you."

"There is nothing wrong with the gentleman, I hope?" says Susan, who has waited while Cressida read the telegram.

"Nothing wrong—no," Cressida says, dropping suddenly from the cloudland in which she had been wandering. I am to join Monsieur St. Just in Paris, that is all."

The news is so startling that Susan hastens to impart it to her mistress, who, deeply interested, soon makes her appearance on the scene.

There is no obstacle to an immediate departure, for Cressida's bills are all paid, and she has a few pounds, a little more than suffices to defray the expenses of her journey, in hand; and, with these two willing helpers, her small preparations are soon made. In less than a couple of hours after the receipt of her husband's telegram, she is ready to start.

"Good-bye, my dear young lady," Mrs. Clarke says, regarding the pretty flushed face and feverishly bright eyes of her young lodger with vague uneasiness. "You will let me have a line to say you reached Paris safely and found all well, won't you? You are such a young thing to travel about alone."

Cressida gives the required promise with a nervous laugh and a grateful squeeze of the work-hardened hand, then leaps lightly into the cab, and is off upon the first stage of her fateful journey.

CHAPTER VI.

"The window—quickly! Give her air, Isidore! Do you not see that mademoiselle is fainting!"

"Mademoiselle's" face is indeed ghastly in its sharpened pain and gray pallor, as it rests against the darkly-panelled wall. But the words act like an electric shock; her eyes open in a burning flash of indignation, and she stands erect before the men who are judging and condemning her—very white still, but a frightened child no more; an outraged woman strong in her indignant pride. The men she faces are three in number, Isidore St. Just, his father, and the lawyer, to whose office they had brought her immediately on her arrival in Paris, the man from whose inflexible lips has fallen the sentence, which at first seemed an empty sound, that bore to her dazzled [illegible] nse [illegible] any meaning, that slowly but surely [illegible] its way into heart and brain and setting both aflame.

"You are not, and, by the French law you never have been, the wife of Isidore St. Just."

The three men watched her keenly in the silent pause that follows the bomb-shell speech. The lawyer, a ferret-faced yellow skinned man, with a calm professional interest; Isidore, with affected indifference, and real anxiety, not as to the result of the scene, but as to the fashion in which she may turn upon him; and the elder St. Just, with just a touch of human feeling tampering his inflexible purpose and softening the hard black eyes that are a caricature copy of Isidore's brilliant and melting orbs.

He it is who sees the gray shadow fall across the childlike face, and change its character for ever, who notes the swift stagger back against the wall, the sudden droop of the white lids that cannot shut out an unutterable agony. He calls for water, and presses closely to the pale girls side; but she draws back as though the contact hurt her; and, when she speaks, it is to the notary she addresses herself.

"I do not think you understand, monsieur," she says with simple dignity and a calm distinctness that surprises herself. "Their can be no question of the legality of my marrage, even if—if Monsieur St. Just were base enough to deny it."

"Pardon, Mademoiselle," interjects the elder St. Just, with a bow of exquisite politeness, "my son has no such dishonourable thought. He owns that your character is above reproach; he does not deny that he has gone through the ceremony of marriage with you, he merely protests that the marriage was illegal."

Cressida never turns her head or answers his address, never once turns her eyes to that remoter corner, where, with white face, set lips, and glittering eyes, her traitor-husband stands. Did she once meet his gaze, she knows that the fierce scorn and burning indignation she holds so hardly in check would overwhelm and master her, sweeping away all the coolness and courage of which she stands in such desperate need.

So she stares at Monsieur Bertrand's impassive face, and speaks to him, as though they two were alone in the room.

"I am very young, monsieur," she goes on in the same tone of forced monotonous calm; "but I am neither a child nor an idiot. I was married in church after due publication of the banns, in presence of any number of producible witnesses, with the sanction of my only guardians and friends; I do not know much of legal matters truly, but it seems to me it would be hard to find a flaw in such a marriage as that."

"In England it would be impossible," the lawyer admits placidly; "but you overlook one important feature in the case. Monsieur St. Just is a French citizen, and in an event like his marriage will abide by the regulations of the French law. Perhaps you are not acquainted with the difference in the code of the two countries."

He pauses and waits the answer that comes slowly and with difficulty from the stiff white lips, though the proud anguished eyes never droop or wander from his face.

"I am very ignorant, monsieur; I was a schoolgirl a year ago. I know only that as surely as I live and breathe, as surely as Heaven's law and man's can make a marriage, I am the wife of Isidore St. Just."

There is a slight movement in the shadowed corner where the two St. Justs stand. Cressida does not look around, she will not, and she dare not; but some instinct tells her that her husband has made a swift movement towards the door, that only his father's grasp restrains him.

Monsieur Bertrand shrugs his shoulders and surveys the pale young face through his green glasses with professional contempt, yet a faint far-off gleam of pity too. How stupidly she takes the blow—how absurd these English are! No French girl could get into such a fix, but, being in, she would surely try to extricate herself with grace; and yet she is so young—so pretty; it is hard, no doubt——

"Pray be seated, madame"—pushing forward a chair, and according her the title of honour he had hitherto scrupulously denied. "I have a painful—a very painful duty to perform in the interest of my clients, the Messieurs St. Just, father and son. Believe me, I sympathise deeply with your unfortunate position. Will you feel for mine, and lighten its difficulties by according me a patient hearing?"

Cressida bows her head gravely. She does not accept the chair he offers; but she rests her small tightly-locked hands upon its tall carved back. She will stand to her doom, as the prisoner stands to receive the death-sentence.

(TO BE CONTINUED.

THE NORTH-WEST

Notes and Incidents from the Front.

The New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island volunteers who were called out for active service, have been notified of their not being required.

Majors Buchanan and Boswell, of the 90th Winnipeg battalion, reported by Gen. Middleton, are applicants for the positions of commandant and captain of the school of infantry to be established in Winnipeg. The government, it is said, contemplate Col. Taylor, of Halifax, as commandant.

There was an immense attendance at the funeral, in Toronto, of Private Moor, of the Royal Grenadiers, killed at Batoche. The city corporation, and local corps were in the procession, as well as representatives of the various trades. Thousands lined the route, and at the cemetery there were about 5,000 people. The deceased was 18 years of age last May.

At the session of the Methodist conference in Kingston, a motion was passed expressing thankfulness to God for the cessation of the rebellion, great admiration for the devotion and courage manifested by the young men who went to the front, and the deepest sympathy with those who mourn the loss of beloved ones on the field of battle.

The Carleton Place Herald charges that "some of the C. P. R. cars in which volunteers were taken to Lake Superior were terribly mutilated and defaced on the interior. It is said that cushions were completely cut from their frames. Some seats were completely destroyed Windows were broken, and car walls were wilfully and wantonly defaced." This is a charge the public will be loath to believe unless strongly sustained by evidence.

The Philadelphia News states the situation fairly when it says: "The attempt to get up a sentiment in favor of Riel because he is said to be an American citizen ought to fail. He has offended the laws of Canada on the soil of the Dominion and has been caught red-handed. There is no law nor reason why this should exempt him from trial in Canada so long as there is any chance for him to have a fair trial, such as it is to be presumed he will get."

The banner made by the ladies' of Montreal and presented to the 65th Battalion, was blessed by Bishop Fabre in the Jesuit Church in Montreal. The ceremonies were most impressive. This banner, which is of white silk richly embroidered with gold, bears the motto in French, "Dieu et Patrie," God and Country, and on the reverse side is a sacred heart and the inscription, "Adveniat regnum tuum." Thy Kingdom come. In the sermon by the Rev. Father Hamon, the reverend gentleman impressed his hearers with the fact that the true Catholic soldier never separates religion from country, and, in giving his blood for his native land, he also gives it in support of the Catholic faith, which has withstood the assault of time and of many enemies.

DOMESTIC CURIOSITIES.

A rum-drinker who is able to dress as well, feed his family as well, or live in the style of the man of whom he buys.

One who is much interested in hunting, fishing, in gaming in general; devoting much time to recreations, who will succeed in any useful employment.

A good man or woman who sees in the neighbors only evil, only a disposition to defraud, to cheat and overreason in all transactions, and only persons to be despised and shunned.

A wise individual who is inclined to [illegible] unusual attainments, or one who is not more anxious to learn, from any and all sources, than the average of the ignorant in all communities.

Small tables may be tastefully draped with billiard cloth, decorated with appliques of velvet enriched by crescents and spangles; the valance is trimmed with wide cluny lace of an ecru tint.

A successful farmer who often attends political gatherings, monkey exhibitions, goes on pleasure excursions and the like, during the harvest time, or any time of special haste in his business on the farm.

A schemer, one who chooses to live by his wits, by his tricks, one who disdains labor, or a stock-broker, a money-lender—at exorbitant rates of interest—who ever adds a dollar to the wealth of the nation.

A good, industrious, obedient, trustworthy boy, one who is kind to his mother, temperate in all of his habits, who is not now needed in all communities, and who will not be in great demand in the future, as he enters upon more active life.

A miser—not to be commended, on the whole—who is not a better man, practically, more honest, a more useful member of society, who does not add more to the material wealth of the nation, than the prodigal, the spendthrift.

A rich man, or one in comfortable circumtsances, never unable to meet his bills, who has not been more economical, more careful not to waste, who has not been more accustomed to "gather up the fragments that nothing be lost," than the average of the poor, in or out of the almshouse.

A rumseller who cares anything about the welfare of society, who wishes for good order, who will not disregard all laws, so far as it is safe to do so, or one who will not sell intoxicants to any one who will pay for them—aside from fear of punishment—though misery, poverty, crime, and every possible evil are sure to follow.

J. R. TRIMBLE has a very large assortment of Ladies' Misses' and Gentlemen's Boots & Shoes which he is offering to his customers and the public generally at wonderfully low prices for cash..

FROM MANITOBA.—Mr. A. R. Scott of Holland returned from Manitoba two weeks ago. He left here early in the spring with his two eldest boys and second oldest daughter, rented a farm ten miles from Minedosa, put in 130 acres of crop and now returns for the balance of his family. Mr. Scott is delighted with the country up there. He says the feeling of the settlers in reference to Riel is that he must die or the whole country will take up arms against the Government. The volunteers who have gone up to put down the rebellion are also determined to lay down their armour and cast their uniforms from them with disgust if Riel is not put an end to. Hear, hear.

MR. H. FREEMAN of Walter's Falls wishes the farmers of the surrounding district to bear in mind that they can always depend on having their grist home from his mill the same day they come to mill, and full satisfaction every time.

STALLION DEAD,—Jas. Bryan's horse, "Messenger Clyde," died last Wednesday 17th. This is a severe loss to Mr. Bryan an he had accepted an offer of $1,400 for the horse a few weeks ago, but had not delivered him when he was taken ill with above result.

MISS MORROW from Simpson's dry-good store, Toronto, succeeds Miss Logan in the Toronto House, Markdale. Miss Logan has proved herself efficient and popular in Mr. Brown's mercantile establishment, and has, we understand, accepted a better situation.

Rocklyn will celebrate Dominion Day with horse racing, athletic sports and games of all kinds. The leading event of the day will be the Calithumpian Band, in which the rebels Riel, Big Bear and Pound-Maker will be represented. The day's sport to conclude with a grand musical concert in the Town Hall in the evening.

MR. J. MASSON, Barrister, &c., of Owen Sound, has taken his brother, William, in partnership with him, and the firm will in future be known as Masson & Masson. J. Masson is well and favorably known as a barrister of ability, and looses nothing, but is strengthened by the addition of Mr. Wm. Masson. They will continue to visit Markdale Friday and Saturday each week.

Bazaar and Garden Party.—The ladies of Christ Church, Markdale, intend holding their annual Bazaar and Garden Party in Mr. Walker's orchard on July 1st. The Bazaar will be opened, free to all, at 2 o'clock, when a large amount of fancy work and children's clothing will be offered for sale. The Garden Party will open at 7 o'clock, when refreshments will be served. Admission 25 cents.

VICTOR ROLLER MILL.—Mr. Angus Plewes has completed the raising of his mill-dam, added improved machinery to the mill and is now running full blast. Customers can depend on having their grist home with them without delay. A superior quality of flour to any previously turned out is now guaranteed. Flour, Bran, Shorts, Chop, &c., always on sale. Chopping done every working day. The public are cordially invited to give us a trial.

PLEASANT TRIP.—The Royal Templars excursion last week to Toronto was a very pleasant and enjoyable affair; the weather was delightful and all nature appears at its best this season of the year. There was not a large turnout, doubtless owing to the excursion rates to Toronto having been raised. When people have business, the rates are satisfactory, but it is another thing to go solely for pleasure at such rates. We have been assured however that the fare for excursions will not be reduced this season.

MORE NEW TYPE.—We have just added new type and material to our already large and well equipped office, and, notwithstanding the general satisfaction which we have given our numerous customers in the quality of work turned out and dispatch in filling orders, we are now in a better position than ever to execute printing in all its branches that will compare with the best city work. It is not necessary to go from home to secure Letter Heads padded, or Envelopes printed or any such jobs which some in our midst are wont to do. We will do them as cheap and as well; and besides this, if you have an ounce of enterprise about you, you would spurn the idea of sending to Toronto and elsewhere for what you can have done at home. We are pleased to know there are very few who will patronize a foreign town in preference to home, yet there are a few, and if we would all do likewise, where would our village be with all its conveniences. We would say, stand out of your own light and support home.

MR. EDWARD LOMAS, a prosperous farmer 3½ miles out of Markdale, was approached recently for a subscription to the brass band, then being organized, when he offered them $5 if they would come out and play a tune at his place. On Friday evening last the band drove out and played several popular pieces to the great satisfaction of Mr. Lomas and his neighbors. Mr. L. treated the boys in a very hospitable manner and frankly paid the V.

PROF. JOHNSON, who arrived in town and stopping at the Revere House, is doing a thriving business in Phrenology. The Prof. is also noted as being possessed of curing propensities through faith. It is openly admitted that he has been very successful with quite a number of cases. Rheumatism and indigestion speedily cured. Running sores cured by rubbing over few times with the naked hand. He is apparently busy night and day. He makes no charges. He will be leaving here in a few days.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.—While Mr. Wm. Brown of this village was driving home from the garden party at Mr. Thos. Murray's on Tuesday night, with his wife, Mrs. Trimble and Miss Morrow in the carriage, the horse stopped suddenly on Orr's hill and backed down when the buggy dropped over the embankment, turning the whole load over with passengers fast under the buggy. Miss Morrow was carried to the house of Mr. Orr in an unconscious state, but was not seriously injured more than a sprained rist, the other ladies escaped with a severe shaking up and considerable excitement. Mr. Brown and the horse also escaped injury.

ON Monday evening last a garden party was given by the members of the Bible Army at the Glenelg Agricultural Hall, at present used by the above society as their barracks. Although the evening was very cold, having been inclement all day, a goodly number were present. The brass band was engaged and rendered some pieces very nicely, after which a vote of thanks was tendered the band for their kind assistance during the evening. A very sociable and enjoyable time was spent by all, most of whom entered into the various games which generally attend such occasions. The eatables, which were provided by the ladies, were abundantly served up and were of a very toothsome nature. The proceeds we believe amounted to $17.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—On Friday Morning last W. J. Noble, a young man of this place, got his leg broken in the following manner. He has been hauling lumber from Ford and Stinson's saw mill, 11th line Euphrasia, to Markdale Station and on the above occasion he had finished putting on his load (about 1,000 feet of green birch) and was standing beside the wagon when the horses started before he was quite ready; he attempted to get hold of the lines which were among his feet and tripped him, he then stepped on a green root and slipped falling and the hind wheel passed over his leg breaking it above the ankle and bruising the leg badly. Dr. Carter was sent for and dressed the limb. Mr. Ford kindly constrained him to remain at his place where he is doing as well as can be expected.

GOOD OLD AGE.—Mr. John Whitby of Artemesia has a mare which has entered upon her 31st year, and is sound in wind and limb and without a blemish. We had the pleasure of a carriage ride after her on Saturday last and was surprised at the activity and high life she still possesses, in fact Mr. Whitby was obliged to leave the carriage and lead her past the railway and into the village, she being so skittish. Mr. W. speaks of this animal as one without a fault (accept of course her age). He always owned her, and to his knowledge she never received 30 strokes of the whip. She is getting quite deaf, yet is likely to live many years, but is allowed to retire from active service. He had her photographed on Saturday by Hamilton, the artist. Mr. Whitby would like to know if there is another horse owned by one person that many years in Ontario.

THE MAN WITH THE GATLING.

His Descri tion of the Battle of Batoche.

The following account of the fighting at Batoche is furnished an American paper by Captain Howard. It will be found exceedingly interesting, and containssome incidents of the battle not previously published. But the article is chiefly valuable as a specimen of egotistical writing met with only about once in a century. In every line and sentence there looms up the audacious, self-asserting, cmnipotent, omnipresent Yankee. He says :—

"We left Fish Creek for Batoche, where Riel was intrenched for us Friday night. The general gave me permission to take the gun with the advance scouts. After advancing about five miles I saw some men behind the house and notified the general. The scouts opened fire and the general ordered up a nine-pounder and shelled the house, when the men retreated. After advancing about a mile I saw some men, who afterward turned out to be Indians, eating their breakfast behind a corral, so I opened fire at 900 yards and gave them Gatling pills for dessert, and the way in which they deserted their camp was 'a caution.' I then opened fire on a house where I saw a man enter, and soon a priest came out with a white flag. We then advanced past the house to the top of a bluff, and the two nine-pounders opened fire on Batoche. One of the guns became disabled.

About thirty Sioux Indians made a rush with a whoop to take the nine-pounders, and as I was on the left I saw that I could not fire across them. There was only one thing I could do; that was to take the piece by hand to the front, down hill and give it to them. This I did within twenty yards of the enemy. I set the gun and turned the crank. There was not another war-whoop after that. Then the Indians were closing in on my left to cut off the scouts and I let them have it on that side, and when I looked up not a man was to be seen but the three men with me at the Gatling gun, but I kept in position until I had driven all the Indians out of their pits. One horse was shot and one man killed and another wounded. The firing lasted about twenty minutes. We then dragged the gun up hill and held the position until ordered over to the right to drive the enemy out of some brush. This I did, and I was all over the field all day, from one place to another. The battle was as hot a one as ever I saw, as the enemy were in rifle pits and hard to get at.

"By 7 o'clock in the evening the general fell back about a quarter of a mile to the place of the camp. and I was ordered to cover the retreat. Through some mistake the general had withdrawn my right support, and about one hundred Indians made a dash on my right- I had all I wanted to do to get to camp, as I did not have my horse, and it would have made you laugh to see me dodging the buckshot and bullets.

"We intrenched the came and fought until dusk, when the Indians left. We had four killed and fifteen wounded. On Sunday we skirmished all day and tried to find their weakest point, but they were about evenly distributed all around. On Monday I was ordered out with the scouts to see what we could find. About two miles from camp we received a shot, and at some distance of about seven hundred yards we saw the heads of three men. The general asked me to try them. I did so, and gave them 100 rounds and knocked two out of three. We went on about a quatrer fo a mile and saw a lot of horses picketed near a house. We open on them at 1, 200 yards and killed two and and the rest broke and ran. Some men rode toward us and I let them have it, when over went one man and horse. The general then went on with ten men and left me to draw the fire, and I found it was hot work for about two miles. As soon as the general returned we retreated to camp. By this time the general had changed his mind as to the Gatling gun, and with it the men would then go through fire or anything else.

"Tuesday morning I was ordered to get ready (which means to start as we sleep, with horses all harnessed and with our boots on) to make a reconnisance with some scouts, the same as on Monday, and draw their fire, as it was our plan to enter among the same way as we first tried. We went out to their first line and drew their fire for about two hours, when we fell back to camp with a loss of one man.

"In the meantime, the Midland regiment, under Colonel Williams, and the Grenadiers with the Nineteenth Rifles were trying to enter the pits on the west side. In a few minutes we heard a cheer and every man knew what that meant, and it was answered from the camp and all jumped for their guns. My men were eating dinner, but I ordered them to their post and they had hardly reached their place when we heard a call for the Gatling. Talk about flying batteries! I had four horses on the gun. Out of the camp we went, and the Indians must have thought there was something the matter from the cheers we received as we went through on the dead jump. I had a horse that can't be beat, and hope he will live to get to New Haven with me. I went down into the fight with skirmishers, but the Colonel said it was too hot a place for me. So I withdrew to my old position of Saturday, and saw a house that the Indians were firing from. I opened on it, when of all the cheers you ever heard those from the men below were the most energetic. The men charged and captured the house, and I advanced and kept up a fire on all of their pits, and the men would take them as soon as I silenced them, but the Indians soon gave way and retreated to the river bank. The general asked me to cross the plain in their front and flank them on the right, and seeing a good position I gave the order, "Forward." Of all the hailstones I ever saw that was one of the worst, but not a man or horse was hit, except a scratch on my horse's eye. Taking my position I drove them away from their tepees, and with the charges made by the infantry and scouts and the shots fired by the artillery, the battle of Batoche was won.

"While taking my position on the right I saw a flag floating from one of the pits. So I went to get it and found it was Riel's battle flag, which I now have together with some other relics of the fight. We camped in Batoche for the night, and it was the best night's sleep I ever had. We lost in the fight eight killed and seventy-five wounded, and the Indians had seventy-two killed and 116 wounded that we know for a certainty, and about thirty were marked with my Gatling balls, ranging from three to twenty each man. The morning after the fight I went out with the scouts to see if we could find Riel, but after searching the country all day we received word about 6 o'clock that he had given himself up in camp. He has all Lower Canada on his side.

"I asked the general if he had any further use for me, and he said: 'Yes, I want you to remain until the campaign is over.' I never was better treated in my life. Address all letters to me, care of 'A' battery, Prince Albert, N. W. T. You could have heard the cheer three miles after the rescue of fifteen persons from one house. The Indians had put them there to kill them, but I made it so hot for them that the boys charged and relieved the persons."

The Land of Eternal Winter.

Even the foot of a person walking along as it is lifted from the ground leaves a little puff of vapor to float away from the spot as if the walker had stepped upon a sponge saturated with smoke, which was liberated by the pressure, and this, too, when there are four thicknesses of heavy reindeer skin between the bare foot and the snow underneath.

So scarce was the game through this part of the country, and so absolutely dependent were we upon it for our daily supply of food, that to increase our chances of securing it we separated into parties, one and two days' journey apart from each other, although traveling the same trail, and thus each space between camps was gone over twice or three times, and our chances of seeing reindeer or musk-oxen increased proportionally. Occasionally my sledge would be in the rear, and before we started in the morning it would sometimes be useful to know if the party ahead had moved on, and Toolooah, my sledge driver, would climb a near hill, and if the weather was intensely cold and clear was almost sure to be able to tell me, although the measured sledge journey to the snow-house that he had discerned by its ascending vapors was often eight and ten miles, and probably three-fourths as much in a straight line.

Whenever the sledge was traveling along, its iced runners dragging over the fine, gritty snows would give forth a clear musical ring in the bitter cold air that sounded very much like the drawing of a resined bow over a tuning fork, a well-known experiment in acoustic lectures. Many of my readers who live, or have lived, in countries where the thermometer gets down to zero and 20 degrees below in the winter have heard this sound coming from the iron runners of the swift-gliding sleighs, and especially upon a clear, quiet night with but a single sleigh within hearing. Could you imagine that clear, frosty ring as much louder as a whistle of a steamboat is above the whistle of a man, or certainly multiplied manifold times you could realize how the iced sledge runners fairly sing with their polished surface dragging over the marble-like snows of the intense Arctic cold. By holding the ear near the snow this music of the cold can be heard a couple of miles away, and at this great distance sounds like the soft murmurings of an Æolian harp or distant minglings o guitars.

Sometimes in breathing this extremely cold air my tongue felt as if it was freezing in my mouth, but I could readily rid myself of this uncomfortable feeling by breathing through the nostrils for a minute or two. Naturally you will ask: "Why not breathe through the nostrils all the time?" as you have so often heard advocated. This bitter cold air passing through the nostrils keeps up an irritation so that the consequent catarrh makes it desirable to use the mouth nearly altogether in breathing. Also, the nose is more liable to freeze when breathing through it. These freezings of the nose and cheeks are very common affairs, occurring over a dozen times a day in very low temperatures, and especially if there be any wind blowing in the face. The Esquimaux cure these slight frost-bites by applying the hand warm from the reindeer mitten, directly to the spot. They knew nothing of rubbing frost bites with snow, so extolled in our own cold climates, and I doubt its efficacy myself in those extremely low Arctic temperatures, when the snow is like sand when loose and like granite rock when in mass. Another fallacious idea exploded by my Esquimaux, at least to a great extent, was the use of snow to quench thirst, which every Arctic writer has been so unanimous in condemning as hurtful. My Esquimaux used it at all temperatures to alleviate their thirst, first breathing on the piece of snow before putting it in the mouth. I have often seen Esquimaux boys place a steel snow knife to their tongue and let it freeze fast, and then swing it backward and forward until it fell, and try and make it stick upright in the snow.

An Offensive Breath

is most distressing, not only to the person afflicted if he have any pride, but to those with whom he comes in contact. It is a delicate matter to speak of, but it has parted not only friends but lovers. Bad breath and catarrh are inseparable. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases as thousands can testify.

In all the superior people I have met, I notice directness, truth spoken more freely, as if everything of obstruction, of malformation, has been trained away.

Especially to Women.

"Sweet is revenge especially to women,' said the gifted, but naughty, Lord Byron. Surely he was in a bad humor when he wrote such words. But there are complaints that only women suffer, that are carrying numbers of them down to early graves. There is hope for those who suffer, no matter how sorely, or severely, in Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." Safe in its action it is a blessing, especially to women and to men, too, for when women suffer, the household is askew.

The man who will have the best right and the last word at law is very like the man who will have the last drop in the tankard. He has the chance of getting the lid down on his nose.

The aroma of the tobacco leaf is so completely conserved in the manufacture of "Myrtle Navy," that age has no effect in diminishing it; even after the plug has been kept for years it gives out its full flavor under the combustion in the pipe, mellowed in tone by its age, and making the most exquisite smoke which tobacco can be made to give. Age, too, hardens the structure of the plug, and gives the tobacco, when cut, that almost granular appearance in which all connoisseurs delight.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of Catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh —Montreal Star.

Exploding many things under the name of trifles is a very false proof either of wisdom or magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame.

History repeats itself,

And perhaps in the distant future when the ages have grown old, and move with slow and failing steps down the corridors of time—When the adjuncts and appliances that now make life endurable are forgotten, how gladly will the people hail the re-discovery of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, the great and only sure pop corn cure of this age. Without a rival for efficacy or painless action, certain in every case and yet perfectly harmless to every other part, surely its loss would be felt in future ages as keenly as its value is now appreciated by all in this. Try Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Sure and safe. N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, proprietors.

There is a law in England which makes it a criminal offence for any person to advertise a reward for property lost or stolen where the advertisement states that no questions will be asked. The law is comprehensive, for it punishes by a fine of 50 pounds sterling not only the author of the advertisement, but the publisher also, and the printer who puts it in type.

Soap trees similar to those growing in China and Japan are said to flourish in Florida. They are prolific bearers of a berry about the size of a marble, which may be used as a substitute for soap just as they are taken from the trees. In Florida, however, they are usually boiled down and cast into bars. It is thought they may be made to grow on Northern farms after a little acclimatization.

FOR THE FARMER.

Practical Suggestions.

A farmer, who has been using hay caps six years says he regards the saturating of the caps with any preparation to render it waterproof unnecessary, as he has never seen a storm severe enough to injure hay under the cover of a simple heavy sheeting. Instead of attaching a stone to a cord at the corner of the cap he suggests a strong, sharpened peg to be driven in the ground. The advantages of the peg over the stone are: The cap is lighter to handle, is drawn tighter over the hay, and so sheds rain better, and also holds the hay-cock in position better in case of high wind.

One of the chief lacks in stone fruits is potash in the soil. This is especially true of peaches, which are supposed to do better on sandy soils, where potash is usually deficient. Liberal dressings with wood ashes or muriate of potash are a preventive of, if not a remedy for, the yellows.

To true up a bone or whetstone, lay a pane of glass on a board and scour the surface a little with emery flour and water, using several thicknesses of cloth. Then lay the bone on the glass with emery and water between, and rub with a circular motion. This will soon do the work, and the glass will make a transparent slate for the children.

When horses are young enough to have good teeth and good digestion whole oats are an excellent ration for them at work. But with many horses there will be some waste from the grain passing through the system undigested. These oats if voided on the surface of a ploughed field, will grow and mix with other grain. Probably the greatest advantage from feeding whole oats is that this grain thus fed is less likely to injure from large rations which many give to horses at hard work from mistaken ideas of kindness; just enough is far better in feeding a horse than either little or good deal too much.

When a cow leaks milk, the only remedy is to take the milk three times a day, and relieve the pressure on the udder. The cause of the trouble is that the spincter muscle at the end of the teat is too weak to resist the pressure of a full udder, and the difficulty in the way of preventing it is that the udder and teats are too tender to resist any increase of pressure without causing a worse trouble.

How to Oil Harness.

Mr. J. W. Foot, formerly owner of a tanyard, and who "made leather and worked it into harness, and used to clean harness for customers," gives, through the National Stockman, this good advice about the latter important but often neglected work:

"The tanner dampens his leather before oiling, puts on oil or oil and tallow freely, and then hangs it in a damp room, away from light of sun and wind, so as to let it strike in slowly. So in oiling harness, take all apart, soak well in a tub of warm water, then wash or scrape off all dirt. Let it lie in the shade until partly dry, then with brush or swab apply oil freely, and lay all in a heap in the cellar or other dark place, until the oil strikes in. Sometimes a second coat is needed. Neats-foot oil is best, with sufficient lampblack to color well. When dry, take a piece of coarse sacking, with warm water and a piece of castile soap, and wash thoroughly. This washing prevents blacking the hands and gives a gloss like new leather. Harness properly cared for will last some years longer than if neglected, and looks much better. Being kept soft and pliable it does not injure the horse so much. Many liverymen will rub harness over with oil whenever it gets wet. Never soak a collar, but scrape off all gum and dirt, wash clean and oil it."

Our Way with Fence-Wire.

With our easy method two men and team stretch six miles a day, and it is all tight as a drum. We have a rack, made of two rough sticks, eight inches in diameter, ten feet long. It is fastened down in front, and projects two feet behind the rear axle. The reel of wire in use hangs upon a stout iron bar between the bed-pieces and back of the last cross-piece of rack. Have a good dog on the wagon, right under the rear axle. With several hundred pounds of wire on the rack the dog works best. Hang reel of wire on the shaft so that it will uncoil from under side; fasten end of wire to fencepost and drive alongside fence for forty or fifty rods. Now slip the wire that is paying out over one arm of the reel so that it rests on the iron shaft; with your hands upon the reel-arms wind the wire up around the shaft, using the reel as a windlass. Your dog holds the wagon in place, and you have purchase sufficient to break the wire if you choose. Tighten till it sings well. Your wire should be near enouge to taut before you use the windlasses so that two turns will stretch it. We make only two runs of each 100 pounds of wire. Corner posts must be well braced with long braces. Stretch top wire first.

A curious ceremony has just been performed at Travancore India. The Maharajah was weighed against a mass of pure gold, which was then dispensed in charity. This custom, called "Tulabhara" is one of great antiquity, and is said to be traceable in Travancore to the fourth century. It is not unknown in other parts of India; though, of course, gold is only used in the case of wealthy persons, the humbler sort being content to weigh themselver against spices or grain. On the present occasion the Maharajah weighed a little over nine stone. The Brahmins, it is said, wished to defer the ceremony, in the hope that the Maharajah might more nearly approach the weight of his father, who did not undergo the rite until 47 years old, when he weighed 14½ stone.

Last year 3,457,309,017 cigars were made in the United States, and 994 133,000 cigarettes. These required 971,000,000 pounds of tobacco. Chewing and smoking tobacco and snuff required 217,451,000 pounds.

The loco weed is an indigenous growth of Nevada, and is eaten with a relish by horses. It brings on a kind of horse insanity, which lasts for four or five days, usually, during which the animal effected cuts up all sorts of didos.

United States silver dollars of 1799 having five stars on the side towards which the head faces, are very rare, and are worth from $2.50 to $4; if six stars, $1.50 to $2.50. Much depends upon the condition of the coin and the eagerness of the buyer.

In Normandy bird dealers arrange singing contests between favorite chafinches, which are sometimes compelled to sing alternately as many as 800 times. Occasionally the cruel practice of depriving them of sight is indulged in, as blind birds are often the best singers.

There are no tanners of alligator hides in Georgia, South Carolina or any other Southern State. There have been as high as 250,000 skins tanned in the United States and Europe in a single year, but the consumption of leather has now fallen to almost nothing.

The Italian coral fisheries employ 4,200 fishermen, who annually secure 56,000 kilograms of coral, valued at $840,000. The manufacture of this coral into beads and crosses, in which form it finds its way to every part of the world, adds millions every year to the wealth of the Italian people.

The Bank of Spain, on a capital of 150,000,000 pesetas, had, by a report just issued, a deposit account of over 280,000,000 pesetas, besides notes in circulation to the value of 413,417,500 pesetas, and a total liability account of 919,770,110 pesetas. A Spanish peseta equals 19.3 cents. in American money.

Every railroad ticket in Russia has two sums upon it. If the price of the ticket were thirteen rubles, it would show thirteen and three, and the price of the ticket would be sixteen rubles; the explanation of which is that the three rubles is a special tax by the government upon the railway travelers to pay the expenses of the last Turkish war.

The consumption of chocolate in this country is largely on the increase, one manufacturer stating that last year he made 1 500,000 pounds and used a ton of sugar per day. The best cocoa bean come from Venezuela and Mexico, and the cheapest from San Domingo. The two great chocolate consuming countries are France and the United States.

The Gatling Gun.

The Gatling gun, which has done such good service in the North-West, was one of the first, and is still considered to be one of the most efficient of machine guns. It consists of six, eight or ten rifle barrels with their attendant breech locks, mounted around a pivot, and in the later makes of the gun enclosed in a gun metal case. The cartridges are fed through a circular hopper, down which they slide in concentric grooves. The barrels and their locks revolve in unison with the plates that direct the cartridges in their course, and every cartridge, when it reaches the orifice drops into the open breech of a barrel. As the barrels swing round the breech is closed, the firing pin released, the breech thrown open, the shell extracted, the lock cocked, and when it has completed the revolution it is ready for another cartridge. What applies to one barrel of course applies to all the others, and in a ten-barrel gun every turn of the crank gives five shots. In practice it has been found possible to fire ten drums, containing thirty cartridges each, in 87·10 seconds, or 2,100 cartridges per minute, and a single sighting shot can be fired just as easily. With its positive automatic feed, and owing to the manner in which it is mounted, it can be fired as well when depressed seventy degrees, or elevated seventy-four, as when horizontal. A special oscillating mechanism is provided by which it can be made to deliver a fan-shaped shower of balls, and all this gear can be cast off and the gun be managed by a simple shoulder lever, as Lieutenant Howard did, during the critical moments at Batoche.

Homesick.

I.

The blue sky stretches far and wide,
No cloud presages gloom,
The piebald prairie in its pride
With herbage is abloom.
Ah, me! Ah, me! a rock, a rill,
A sky which mountains bar,
A tumbling stream, a rugged hill,
Were fairer vision far.

II.

The mountains rise, their mist aglow,
The streamlets sing and leap;
The vines blow purple row on row;
Rock-sheltered violets peep.
Ah, lonely roar the upland pines;
The valley smiles in chains;
While up the hills climb weary vines,
—'Tis home upon the plains.

III.

Salt tears of longing and regret
Sink, deep, within the loam
Of foreign soil where feet are set
When hearts are left at home.
A kindlier fate is that which lets
The heaven-winged spirit free,
Than, held in space where distance frets,
An exiled soul to be.

Scotch Marriages.

The propensity of the Scotch to contract marriages seems, in contradiction to that of most other peoples, to diminish in proportion as they live further from the chief centres of population. In 1884, at all events, the marriage rate was in exactly inverse ratio to the density of the inhabitants. In the principal town districts it was as much as 82 for every thousand human beings, and in the large towns as much as 70. In small town districts it was no more then 63, in the mainland rural districts only 51 and in the remote insular rural districts one in 45. The births of children showed a similar variation, decreasing steadily in number in each of the five classes of districts from 3.64 per cent, in the biggest towns to rather less than 2 5per cent, in the outlying island villages. This proportion was however, compensated by the fact that the deaths also followed an exactly similar law, and increased in a regular scale from 1·5 per cent. in the least populous regions to 2 29 in the largest centres. It may be mentioned as a curious thing that, whereas the average of boys born to every 100 girls in all Scotland is nearly 106, and in the chief towns more than 106.5, in insular rural districts it was last year only 100.1. In the choice of a time of years for entering the blessed state, the Scotch appear to be rather capricious, fighting shy of some months in which they might be expected to proceed most often to the hymeneal altar. Superstitious reasons may account for the fact that it was May in which the fewest brides were adorned with the orange blossom, or whatever emblem did service for it in the particular district, while the next month of June was most often affected by the loving couples. The one month produced only 34 matrimonial unions per diem, or about 1050, whereas the other produced 124 per diem, or more than 3700 in all. But the intermediate averages were distributed irregularly between the several months in an inexplicable manner, December and January having twice as many as September and October, and August producing less than the Lent month, or indeed, any other time of year except the unpopular May.

The Extent of the British Empire.

The British Empire covers nearly a sixth of the land surface of the earth. The entire surface of the globe is estimated at 197,000,000 square miles, of which a little more than a quarter, or 51,500,000 square miles, are land, and the total extent of the British Empire is 8,990,211 square miles, which may be tabulated thus:

	Square miles.
Great Britain and Ireland	121,115
Indian possessions	1,558 254
Other Eastern possessions	30 0 0

Total	8,990,211

The population of this enormous empire is estimated at 310,225,000 souls, and wel was it said to be "a power which has dot ted the surface of the whole globe with he possessions and military posts, whos morning drum-beat, following the sun an keeping company with the hours, circle the earth with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs

The Bottom Fell Out.

Mr. Driscoll, who lives south of Owatonna, Minn., had Mr. Merrell dig a well for him, and at the depth of seventy-five feet struck a stratum of petrified wood and clay which was so hard that it had to be blasted, which ignited the petrified wood, and it was with difficulty that the fire was put out with water ftom above. At the depth of eighty-five feet a large stone was struck, and as water was coming in Mr. Merrell concluded to wait and see if water enough could be obtained without blasting through the rock, the thickness of which he could not know. Just as he was about to leave the well in the bucket he noticed that the rock was sagging beneath him. He hurriedly got into the bucket, and not a moment too soon, for the stone fell out of sight, as if into a subterranean lake or river, and the water followed him rapidly to the distance of thirty-five feet, at which depth the water remains. At last reports the bottom had not been sounded.

There is great curiosity, and all are awaiting further developments.

The presence of egg in anything he eats nauseates him, and less than the twentieth part of an egg has made him sick for days. To handle broken eggs blisters his fingers, and to eat a single egg he thinks would kill him.

The Princess Beatrice has been and is one of the most industrious of her sex. She is always mastering a new accomplishment. The Princess speaks five languages fluently, is a good musician in theory as well as practice, and, besides being a good artist with brush and chisel superintends her own photography when negatively inclined.

The engagement of the Princess Beatrice was very nearly leading to another misunderstanding between her mother and her eldest sister. It is well known that the Crown Prince and his wife regard the marriage to Prince Battenberg as a messalliance of the first water. A further misunderstanding between the Queen and Princess Royal would be very painful, since they have but recently fixed up the quarrel of many years' standing that arose on the different views taken by the two ladies of the character of the lamented John Brown.

In Palestine and other countries, although the locust devours the crops, it is not altogether an unmixed plague, inasmuch as it affords food to thousands. The locusts are gathered together in bags, dried over the fire, their heads, wings and legs winnowed away, and their bodies ground into a sort of meal, which can be kept for almost any length of time. When eaten, honey is mixed with the locust meal, thus illustrating the habitual food of St. John the Baptist. Canon Tristram tried this foo and found it very palatable. d

The Use of Opium in San Francisco.

The police estimate that in San Francisco, with its population of about 300,000, there are not less than 3,000 habitual opium smokers From a rather extended study of the class, in and out of Chinatown, I should say that this estimate is not exaggerated. There are certain corners in the city which are the favorite haunts of the opium smokers. Here on any pleasant afternoon one may see the victims of the vice in all its stages. Most of them are young men, decently dressed, but giving unmistakable signs of their vicious life by their pallid faces, ghastly look and emaciated forms. Their skin is like that of convicts long shut out from sun and air; their cheek-bones protrude above deep hollows, while the skin is drawn about the mouth in a way which is disagreeably suggestive of a grinning skeleton. All smoke cigarettes and all drink, for that the big vice crushes out the little one is a paradox which cannot be proved by experience. Most of these young men have been brought to this condition inside of three years. The living skeletons among them, who are so weak and nerveless that they brace themselves for support against a cellar railing or the side of a house, have been smoking for years. In eight or ten years at the outside, they will give up the ghost, dying a death by inches, like the consumptive, ever deluded by false hopes of recovery, and suffering the torments of the damned for the violation of nature's laws.

The Latest News from Jupiter.

When the great red spot suddenly appeared on the surface of the giant planet Jupiter seven years ago the astronomers were non-plussed. The prince of planets had never worn quite so gorgeous a decoration before. With its peculiar color—variously described as purple, pink, blood red, and deep orange—and its curious aureole of a creamy hue, the spot, covering an area about equal to the whole surface of the earth, was plainly visible with small telescopes, while with large glasses it presented a succession of interesting and beautiful phenomena. The spot was in the southern hemisphere of the planet, and the astronomers were not long in discovering that it took a few minutes longer to complete a revolution around the planet than did a white spot which had in the meantime made its appearance near Jupiter's equator. So evidence was obtained that the visible surface of this huge globe does not consist of a solid shell like the earth's, but that it is either vaporous or liquid, and that it moves with a greater angular velocity at the equator than in the middle latitudes. It is just as if upon the earth Mexico rotated faster than the United States. Of course, no such motion would be possible in a solid globe unless it were sliced through in such a way that the different parts or disks could slide past one another, an inadmissible supposition in the case of a planet.

But while the great spot was thus giving a clue to the constitution of Jupiter, surprising changes were noticed in its appearance. Two or three years ago it quite suddenly grew dim. Still it retained its regular rate of rotation and its oval form. The obscuration increased until only a few observers, armed with exceptionally powerful telescopes, were able to see it. Many drawings of the planet made during the past year or two show only a blank space where the fiery spot formerly existed.

But it is there yet, and lately a still more remarkable change has taken place. The spot is now covered by a huge white cloud many millions of square miles in extent, which, lying centrally over the red wonder, hides all of it from sight except a narrow rim completely encircling the edge of the cloud. The concealing veil is shaped exactly like the spot underneath, but looks as if it had been cut too small. If the red spot is a half-molten mass thrust up from the fiery bowels of the planet, the possible nucleus and framework of a future continent as has been suggested then the smoke of its burning may have gradually gathered over it until thick enough to conceal it. If, on the other hand, it is, as some think, merely a cloud in the planet's atmosphere, possessing for some unknown reason a different color from the surrounding vapors, then another cloud, no less remarkable, has been suspended over it—an astonishing display of meteorological forces visible to us in the atmosphere of this distant planet. If, again—and this seems in some respects the most probable hypothesis of all—the red spot is merely a part of the crust of the planet revealed to our eyes by the formation of an opening in its enveloping cloud shell, then the forces that parted the curtain and gave us a glimpse of the unfinished world beneath have ceased to operate, and the drifting vapors are shutting the wonderful spectacle once more from sight.

In any view, these gigantic phenomena, visible in a foreign planet across 400,000,000 miles of open space, must possess absorbing interest for all who love to carry their thoughts occasionally beyond the narrow boundaries of this little earth. The existence of other worlds is no longer a mere speculative question, as it once was. We know that they are as real, as substantial as our own globe. There is as little excuse for ignorance of the facts that astronomers have discovered about Jupiter, Mars, or Venus, as there is for not knowing what modern travellers have learned of the interior of Africa or the ice-bound approaches to the pole. These other planets, however different they may be from ours in respect to habitability or geological development, are worlds all the same, and must henceforth be admitted into the circle of human interest. The light reflected from their surfaces, which are illuminated by the same sunshine that floods our landscapes, carries to the astronomers, with more than telegraphic speed, intelligence of their condition and their changes. In the case of such phenomena as those that Jupiter now presents there can hardly be a doubt that we are witnesses of what no human eye could ever have beheld upon our own planet—the development of a world out of chaos. With our telescopes we can see, as it were, the future globe of Jupiter glowing under the shaping hammer of the Almighty World-smith, and detect the imprint of the blows that are slowly fashioning the grandest planet of our system out of the cooling mass of an extinguished sun.

A sponge measuring eight feet in circumference has been taken off Key West, and it is said to be the largest in the world.

Anciently, in many parts of France, when a sale of land took place, it was the custom to have twelve adult witnesses accompanied by twevle little boys; and when the price of the land was paid, and its surrender took place, the ears of the boys were pulled, and they were beaten severely, so that the pain thus inflicted should make an impression upon their memory, and, if required afterwards, they might bear witness to the sale A practice somewhat similar prevailed in the same country up to a much later period. Whenever a notorious criminal was condemned to death, parents brought their children to the scene of execution, and at the moment that death occurred they whipped the children with rods, so that being excited by their own sufferings, they might take warning by the awful example, and keep in the path of virtue.

HOMEWARD MARCH.

The Troops to Return From the North-West in about 3 weeks.

Another week has gone and Big Bear is still at large: though Col. Otter has found his whereabouts it is unlikely he will be able to run him down, he having some eighty miles of a start. In the mean time the principal portion of the troops will return, leaving the mounted police to look after Big Bear, the prisoners having now all been rescued as follows: Mr. McLean, factor, Hudson Bay Co., at Pitt, Mrs. McLean, Miss McLean, aged 18; Eliza, 16; Wm., 12; Kitty, 14; Angus, 10; Duncan, 8; Euphemia, 4; John, 5; and infant in arms; Geo. Mann, farm instructor, Frog Lake; Mrs. Mann and three children, Malcolm Macdonald, H. B. Clerk, at Frog Lake; John Fitzpatrick, farm instructor at Onion Lake; Stanly Simpson, H. B. Clerk, at Pitt; Robert Hodgson, cook to McLean; John Simpson, H. B. factor at Frog Lake, and Joseph Perrin. Twenty-two in all.

SARGENTS LOAD LIFTER.

This labor saving invention has stood the test of years and is fast becoming universally used. Mr. Thos. Ruddel of Wellington Co., has recently patented further improvements which are now, (with the consent of Sargent the patentee of the former) part and parcel of Sargent's Load Lifter. These new improvements consists of a coupling, which can be attached to lifters now in use at a small cost, so that different portions of a large barn can be filled without shifting the rack lifter, or for double thresh floors. It has also an attachment for letting down the rack, which can be done with ease by the person on the load. These are valuable improvements to Sargent's Patent Load Lifter which are worthy the attention of all who contemplate purchasing.

Unfair Tactics.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

There are persons in this world who are difficult to deal with, whose love of self so far over-rides their better qualities as to render their actions unintelligible to their fellowmen.

A case in point: Last season one of the patrons of Markdale cheese factory took umbrage at a fancied loss he sustained in not being paid for a slight service he performed, which is always a gratuitous one when performed by others; hence he withdrew his patronage this season. A short time since the market report of the Toronto Mail contained an item which showed that cheese had fallen 30 per cent. in price, but added that this was caused by speculators entering into a "ring," or boycotting clique, and that cheese would soon go up in value, as the same thing had happened six years ago, and that the foreign market was as steady as ever. The individual referred to clipped out that portion of the article in question which announced the depression, but omitted the explanation, and exhibited this to every one he met, both in town and country. Now, it is a recognized principle in the ethics of truth, that to withold a portion of a subject with a view to producing a false impression, is a deliberate falsehood on the part of the garbler. There are one of two —or both—reasons for this gentleman's conduct. He either wishes to injure the cheese factory, or else to depreciate the value of cows in the estimation of those who had them to dispose of. The depression of six years ago only lasted a month or six weeks, and already the cheese market is steadily advancing, and there are the best of reasons for believing that it will reach its former maximum figure in less than thirty days.

Yours truly,
PATRON.

Glenelg, June 17, '85.

GREY Division Grange No, 2 will meet at Judson Mill on the 3rd July.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

We noticed a few of our citizens took advantage of the cheap trip to Toronto last week.

Mr. Taylor, merchant of Dromore, paid our town a flying visit last week.

Mr. Minettee of the firm of William Thompson & Co., Toronto, paid a brief visit to our town this week.

Miss Emma Damude is at present absent from here on an extended holiday tour visiting friends in Hamilton, Welland, Thorold and other towns before she returns.

I am sure the residents of our village are all pleased and delighted to hear the charming and inspiring music of our band while we are writing, the grand old air of "The girl I left behind me," which is now being made to ring out by the boys on the horns, almost takes us from our seat.

Business appears quite brisk in this village now. Mr. S. Damude has added another branch to his extensive business, being that of handling wool, as will be seen by his advertisement, he invites all those having wool to dispose of to take it to him as he is prepared to pay the highest cash price. This is a step in the right direction for Mr. Damude as it is quite in line with the other branches of his business,

Dr. Christoe's new premises is now completed and being stocked with a large stock of new goods, drugs, &c.

Rev. Mr. McDowell will preach his farewell sermon here next Sabbath. In the absence of the pastor, the Rev. Mr. Dobbons of Berkeley occupied the pulpit in the Presbyterian church here on Sabbath last.

Dominion Day is to be celebrated in our village in right royal style, various games and amusements through the day. The looked for event of the day is the sham battle to take place between 11 and 12 o'clock. If as good, and no doubt it will be, or better than that of the 25th of May, it will be worth driving miles to witness it; then in the afternoon a lawn party on the magnificent grounds at J. W. Armstrong's residence to bid a farewell to Rev. Mr. McDowell; then later in the evening the tea and speeches in the Presbyterian church in connection with the anniversary services of that church. Come one, come all and enjoy a good holiday in a romantic, quiet and peaceful little country town.

Weather mild and warm.

Several cases were heard at the police court last week.

Steamer Athabasca left Saturday at 4:20 p. m. with 40 first, 145 second-class passengers, including a number of Mounted Police for the North-West and 450 ton of freight.

The excursion to Collingwood on the 1st July by the twin screw steamer Campana is thought will prove a success.

Steamer Alberta arrived Sunday at 12:40 p. m. with 40 first, 17 second-class passengers, 20,000 bushels wheat and 15 ton deck freight.

Some very heavy showers of rain set in Sunday afternoon. Wind North and very cold.

From our own Correspondent.

On Thursday last a base-ball match was played between Maxwell and Singhampton clubs on the latter grounds, but when they had played 5 innings each they ordered our boys off the grounds, the match to be settled here on Saturday next. Feversham boys are full of grit; we hope they may remain so. A challenge was received from Dundalk club but as the day set was not suitable forour boys it was not accepted.

Our highly respected citizen John Miller leaves here this week for Alpeana; the menagerie of mules and jackasses go with him.

Mr. Harry Guy is seriously ill; eyresipelas is the cause of his illness.

MR. ALBERT BROWNRIDGE is building a large farme barn.

Mr. Jos. Allison and wife have for the past week been visiting friends in Alliston.

Rev. Mr. D'Argent has filled the pulpit in the Presbyterian church since Mr. Chisolm's absence. He is an able speaker and has the attendance of large congregations. his wife and family arrived here on Friday last.

As the name "Mary" is so often seen in different papers, as the brilliant correspondent of the Dundalk Herald from this place, the young men have been wondering for a long time who she is. I wonder if she is in love with any one or whether she would like to be; by her writing Phiz. has taken a great notion for her and would like to correspond with her. Please do so, Mary, and oblige.

A couple of weeks ago a quarrel occurred between Mr. D. H. Holman of the Big Boot and John McKechnie of the 4th line of Osprey. It appears the latter had ordered boots from Mr. H. to be done on a certain day on that day he called for them and seemed to fit well but he began to find fault with stock in them and, Mr. H. ordered him out of his shop; this he did not like and used very insulting language but no attention was paid to him by Mr. H. He went away in a short time and they happened to meet in another place in the evening, where there was a large crowd and as Mr. H. was going out the door McKechnie caught him by the throat and struck him several times Mr. H. was forced to defend himself by fighting and succeeded in making his opponent cry out enough, Mr. H. then let him up and walked away. The matter was settled before a J. P. last week and the result was, it cost McKechnie one dollar and costs probably he will act decent in our towns in future.

Yours truly,
PHIZ.

McGREGOR'S SPEEDY CURE.

It is popularly admitted everywhere that McGregor's Speedy Cure is the safest, most reliable and far cheapest remedy for Constipation, Liver Complaint, Indigestion, Impure Blood, Loss of Appetite, and all similar troubles. It is not necessary to take a great quantity before any result is produced. A few doses will convince you of its merits. Trial bottle given free at Hill Bro's. 3

CANADA'S GREAT FAIR.—We have received from H. J. Hill, Esq., Secretary of the Toronto Industrial Fair, a copy of the prize list, in which is offered over $25,000 in premiums for 1885. The Exposition will be held from the 7th to the 19th September. Every conceivable attraction that is possible to present will be provided, and as this Fair has in the past been most successful and prosperous, we may reasonably expect continued success to attend it. Any person wishing to exhibit, can secure a copy of the prize list by dropping a card to the Secretary at Toronto.

e old men, who took an active n the affairs of our town and in the early days are fast g away, and this week we have cord the death of one who, occupant of various public s has been prominently before ople of the county ever since zation. Mr Snider was born arm at Eglinton, a few miles up -Street from Toronto, in the 13, and continued to reside about the year 1848, when moved to the Township of n, being appointed one of ... this then newly territory. In that position he
... with most of the
... being a man of
... showed them
... which won their and esteem. He resided in till Grey received full county zation, when he was appointed st Sheriff of the county, and re to Owen Sound on the erection county buildings in 1854. On Sound becoming incorporated wn, he was a candidate for ilor and was elected one of the representatives of River Ward.
60 he was elected Mayor of the holding the office for two years cession. Three times subsequentwas elected to the same honorable on, being five years in all. The me was in the year 1871, since time he did not seek any ipal office. At the election in (the whole county being then lectoral district,) his Reform s prevailed on him to resign his as Sheriff and become a date. Although his great personpularity amongst the old settlers red him a formidable opponent, s defeated by the late George on. The next year on the cy occurring for the Saugeen ion, he became a candidate for egislative Council but was de-by D. L. Macpherson. At deration, the county was divided two Ridings, and he became a date for the North, defeating the D'Arcy Boulton, and becoming rst representative in the House ommons. He occupied the n during the first Parliament, the general election in 1872 again returned defeating Jno.
m, our present Warden. When ackenzie Government dissolved use in 1874 he came again the constituency, and was l the third time, on this occasion ing S. J. Lane. In 1878, how-when he came before the electors ane was again his opponent, cceeded in defeating him, since,
ime he retired from particiin political and other public
s. His health being in such a rious state that it was not cond safe to engage in any excite-always took an active inter-the affairs of the Methodist ch here, of which he was one of ost prominent members, and to chemes of which he was always ly and liberal contributor. A genial and kindly disposition, and honorable, and ever ready p those who needed it, he was ected and esteemed by all; the er of times he was elected to sentative positions testifying to pularity, and even his most nced opponents never enter-any other feeling than that spect and friendship for him ally. For months past his has been very poor, and for al weeks all hopes of recovery een given up; but he lingered til Tuesday morning, when he peacefully away. His funeral

Artemesia Council.

This council met as a Court of Revision on the assessment of 1885. Present—Messrs. Christoe, Blakley, Elliott, McArthur and McKee. After each member had made the necessary oath as a member of the court, the following appeals were called and disposed of :

Henry Johnston, appeal dismissed ; John Miller, assessment on real property, reduced $200 ; A. Munshaw, assessment on village lot, reduced $250, on account of house having been burned. The following changes were made on the roll : John Hopps, assessed for John Miller's property in Eugenia as tenant ; J. H. Campaigne, assessed for lots 4 and 5, Belt's survey ; T. J. & D. A. Stinson, assessed as farmer's sons ; W. A. Milburn, assessed for lot 5, Collingwood street, Flesherton, instead of T. W. Wilson ; Carey Treadgold, assessed for lots 1 and 2, Durham street ; Wm. Wright, assessed for lot 138, 3rd west, instead of James Sullivan ; Silas Leslie, assessed for lot 25, 1 S. D. R.; Godfrey McTaggart, for lot pt. 9, James street; John Wesley & Albert Stinson were assessed as owners for lots 34, 35, 38, 39 and 40, 3 S. D. R.

Mr. Elliott moved, seconded by Mr. McArthur, that the assessment roll now revised and corrected by this court, be certified by the Clerk, as the roll for all assessment and other purposes subject to any appeal to the Co. Judge.—Carried.

After the Court of Revision the council met for general business. The following petitions were presented and read :—Sarah Cameron re deviation on lot 3, con. 3, S. D. R. ; J. G. Brooks et al re grant to assist in opening Alice street ; Henry Weber et at re valley road ; D. S. Munro et al re Mrs. McComb ; the trustees of S. S. 6 presented an application asking the council to issue debentures on credit of said section for $1100, to be repaid in ten years ; the Gospel Army was allowed the use of Town Hall for their meetings at $2 per month ; the petition of J. G. Brooks et al was laid over to be considered at July session. Checks were issued for payment of the following :—Sarah Cameron $60, for road deviation on lot 3, con. 2, S. D. R. ; R. McGowan, for flour furnished Neil Kennedy, an indigent, $8.75 ; John McLeod, lumber for Priceville bridge ; John Whitby, balance of salary as assessor, $42 ; S. Boyce, $2.50, road job Ward No. 4. Messrs Blakley and McArthur were appointed a committee to examine and report upon a proposed opening of road, 2nd S. D. R. Alfred Ward verbally applied for compensation for clearing 180 sideroad, referred to councillor Blakley.

Council adjourned.

A meeting of the Local Board of Health for Artemesia is called on the 25th inst. at Town Hall, Flesherton.

Royal Arch Meeting in Euphrasia.

That Orangeism is not on the decline in Euphrasia is evident from the constantly increasing membership of the numerous lodges within the district. The fourth line lodge No. 54, has, since it was resuscitated about a year ago, met with success which must be gratifying to its officers and to members of the order generally. A special meeting was held in the hall of this lodge on Tuesday evening last for the purpose of conferring the Royal Arch degree upon the following of its members, viz: Gilbert Gilmore, Samuel Martin, Wm. Perry, Henry Gilchrist, jr., Wm. Cook and Octavus Sparling. The dagree was also conferred upon Bro. W. H. Dodson, of Rocklyn lodge. There was a large attendance of brethern from neighboring lodges. Among them were ; Bro. Thos. Henry, Deputy County Master, Meaford ; Bro. Montgomery, County Lecturer, Clarsburg ; Bro. Thomas Gilray, District Master ; Bros. Bell, Kemaghan, and Noble, of St. Vincent ; Bros. Condy, Lawrence and McConnell, of Kim berley ; Bros. James Loughead, Master, and James Boyd, Deputy Master, of Rocklyn lodge ; and Bros. Ellison and Israel Loughead, of Heathcote. After the lodge business was concluded lunch was served and the brothern dispersed at a seasonable hour.—Meaford Mirror.

A WIDE SPREAD EVIL.

The great source of consumption and of ugly sores is scrofula in the blood. Burdock Blood Bitters purify the entire system and cure scrofula, as well as the more common blood humors.

SHILOH'S VITALIZER is what you need for Consumption, Loss of Appetite, Dizziness, and all symptoms of Dyspepsia. Price 10 and 75 cents per bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co. 2

EASILY CAUGHT.

It is very easily to catch cold, but not so easy to cure it unless you use Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, the best remedy for all throat, bronchial and lung troubles, coughs, colds and consumptive tendencies.

ON Friday evening, 12th inst., the congregation of Rev. J. Edge, Paisley, celebrated his return from Conference by the presentation of an address and a purse containing gold to the value of $113. The address was highly appreciative of Mr. Edge's ministry and worth.

A GOLDEN OPINION.

Mrs. Wm. Allan, of Acton, declares that Hagyard's Yellow Oil is the best household remedy in the world for colds, croup, sore throat, burns, scalds and other painful complaints. Her opinion is well founded.

CAPTURED.—Messrs. Wm. Noble, Duncan Marshall, and several other parties had quite a chase after a bear on Saturday last. The bear was shot by Duncan Marshall, in Mr. Foster's field near Honeywood. Mr. Marshall brought the bear to Shelburne on Saturday evening. It weighed 300 lbs.—Shelburne Free Press.

A SENSATION.

An unparalleled sensation is being created all over Ontario by the wonderful and unequalled manner in which Neuralgia, Tooth ache, Rheumatism, Backache, Headache, is removed by but one application of Fluid Lightning. No offensive, disgusting drugs need be taken for days. It is an instant cure. Try a 25c. bottle from Hill Bro's. 3

COMMENDABLE.—Dundalk is to the fore with large and attractive posters for Dominion Day celebration. They generally take the cake in this line, viz., liberality and taste in announcing their exhibitions by conspicuous posters. The Herald also comes in for a good share of credit, and especially Will Rutledge, the foreman, who did this excellent job.

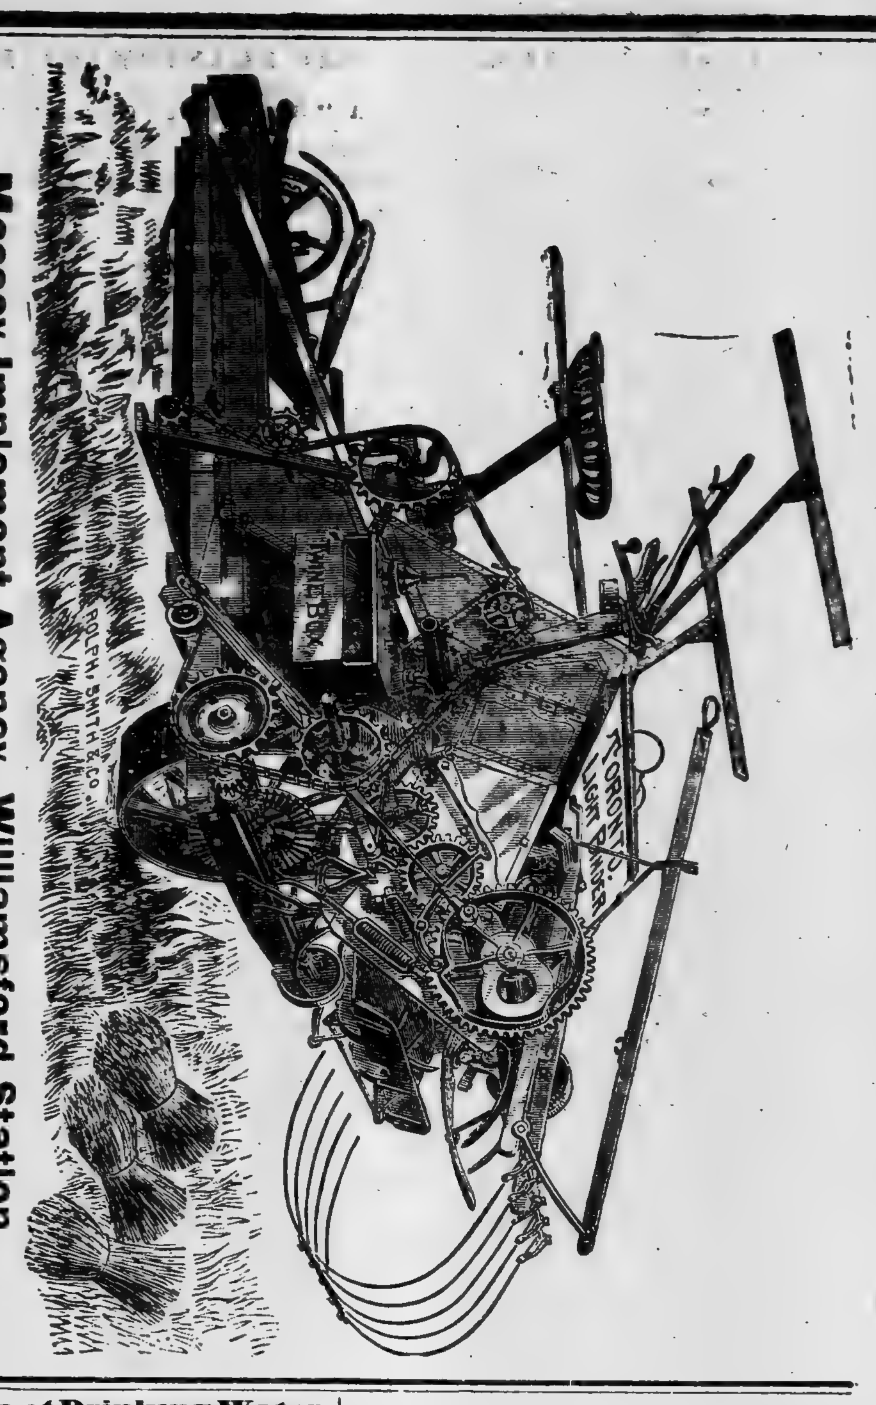
DON'T BE DECEIVED

Beware of any druggist who will try to induce you to take anything in place of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is a marvel of healing for Sores, Cuts, Burns, etc. No family should be without it. It has no equal. Get McGregor & Parke's, and have no other. Only 25c. per box at Hill Bro's. 3

MR. JAS. NOBLE'S young bear (Jumbo) was shipped to New York on Thursday. He was placed in a large box with iron bars in front. He is now about 16 months old, and is a fine looking specimen. His comrade died some time ago, being choked while trying to eat a piece of meat. We understand Mr. Noble sends "Jumbo" as a present to some friend in New York.—Meaford Monitor.

A SAD NEGLECT.

Neglecting a constipated condition of the bowels is sure to bring ill health and great suffering. Burdock Blood Bitters regulate the bowels in a natural manner, purifying the blood and promote a healthy action of the stomach, liver, kidneys and Bowels.



WE have received the twelfth number of the Canadian Pictorial and Illustrated War News. It contains the following illustrations : Rescue of Mrs. Gowanlock and Mrs. Delaney by a party of Scouts ; the Cowboy Brigade, from Photographs and Sketches furnished by J. D. Higinbotham & Co., Fort McLeod ; Portraits of Interest ; Applications of the First Bandage on the Battlefield—No. 2—from original sketches by Mr. F. Humme. Also a fine two-page supplement, showing "Sketches from the Front," drawn on Gabriel Dumont's paper bags, by Mr. F. W. Curzon, Special Artist of The Canadian Pictorial, with Gen. Middleton's command ; and a "View of Battleford as seen from Fort Otter," from a sketch by Lieut. R. Lyndhurst Wardmore, of C Company, Infantry School Corps, Toronto. The paper sells at 15 cents per copy, obtainable from local booksellers and from the office of publication.

COLLINGWOOD AGRICULTURAL BUILDING BURNED.—The fine new building of the Great Northern Agricultural Society, situate in the town park, which was only completed at a cost of from $8,000 to $10,000 last September, and used then for the first time, has been destroyed by fire. At 2:30 last Tuesday morning fire was discovered issuing from the main building, and before half an hour had elapsed, the entire building, as well as the machinery hall was a mass of ruins. It was the intention of the Society to improve on the buildings to the extent of $5,000, and the contract for this work had only been closed last week. The buildings were at the time of the fire all locked, and it is difficult, to conjecture how such an isolated building could catch fire. The general impression is that it originated by the hands of an incendiary. Insured in the Royal Insurance Company for $4,800.

Purification of Drinking Water.

The average healthy adult man takes into his system four and a half pounds of water daily, and with it too often a dangerous quantity of foreign matter and disease-producing germs, In very many homes during the summer months, water that otherwise would nauseate the drinker, is made cold by ice, and then is hastily swallowed, the coldness masking its offensiveness. Uufortunately for the health of the consumer, the addition of ice does not render the impurities in water innocuous, but often adds to it its own cantribution of disease-germe. The only safe-guard to the consumer is in giving his personal attention to the filtration of the water used in his houschold. Water slowly percolated through crushed vegetable charcoal will escape from it not only cleansed of particles held in suspension, but also of organic and other matter. the cheapness of charcoal is such that it is obtainable by all classes, and when soiled, a fresh quantity can be substituted at trifling cost. The most effective filtration is obtained by placing crushed charcoal in an earthen vessel, so arranged as to compel the slow passage of the water through it, as all efforts at rapid filtration have proved inefficient. Only wooded spigots suould be used in drawing off the water. A reservoir for the filtered water with a seperate ice-chamber, will permit the water to be sufficiently chilled and kept all ice impurities out, Such a contrivance requires but very little room, is easily cleaned, the coal renewed, and is efficient in freeing water from impurities.—DR. EDWIN J. HOWE in American Agriculturist for July.

THE BLACKFEET BRAVES.

A Dance and Hunt with Crowfoot Ten Years Ago.

In the winter of 1875-76, Crowfoot, head chief of the Blackfeet, camped with 100 lodges near Fort Hamilton, a trading post on the plains, some thirty-five miles from Fort Macleod. The North-West Mounted Police had not long entered the vast North-West. A year or two before their attenuated cavalcade had wound its thin way westwards from Dufferin, in Manitoba, and had brought up at the foot of the Rockies, and made its final little mark on the spot afterwards known as Fort Macleod. But the best relations had existed between police and Indians since the appearance of the whites.

It was cheerfully, therefore, that half a dozen or more of us at Fort Macleod took the opportunity to go to Fort Hamilton soon after Crowfoot's arrival there. "Fort Hamilton," as a mere dot of a place in the wilderness was pretentiously enough called, belonged to a warm hearted Irishman, a Mr. J. Healy, and it was in response to his invitation that we went. It was an invitation given with a view to sharing in a hunt with Crowfoot and his braves. Leaving Fort Macleod early on a fine Winter morning, we aimed for Healy's hospitable hearth, and by nightfall we were there.

Expectant of our coming, our host had arranged for a treat for us of the most approved Blackfoot kind—a dance in our honor in the Medicine Lodge, and accordingly after doing justice in the fort to a hearty supper, we repaired to the "ballroom" of the evening, there to meet our

NOVEL EXPERIENCE.

The Medicine Lodge was a large wigwam, ugly and dirty like all its kind. Entering we seated ourselves amid a circle of swarthy braves. For a time silence reigned supreme and the calumet, the pipe of peace, was handed round and from it warriors and whitemen in turn solemnly took each a puff till all had tasted of its peaceful influence. Then on a given signal all rose to their feet, warriors, whitemen and squaws. These latter were apart by themselves.

Standing stock still around the fire of the wigwam, there we all remained, the Blackfeet braves and squaws shouting words which sounded like "hi ya, hi ya, hi ya, how, how, how," to the accompaniment of frightful music, or what seemed a lot of old drums, bobbing their heads and bodies up and down in the most fantastic manner, and winding up the whole with one grand general yell, which must have savored of Pandemonium. If you can imagine this, dear readers, you know almost as much of an Indian dance as the writer. There was one pleasing feature, however, which I had almost neglected to mention. If one of the squaws happened to take a particular fancy to a white visitor, and she happened to be near him during one of the grand promenades which followed each dance (the dances have no variety), one of her friends would throw a shawl over their heads, and the happy swain had then the privilege, or rather was expected to give the dusky maiden a kiss. Imagine his happiness also when, on the following day, the dear creature came round to the post to get a present of a shawl or blanket, as proved to be the custom! We never afterwards felt at all inclined for a renewal of the privilege.

As the horses required a rest in view of work cut out for them in the way of buffalo hunt, the following day was spent in shooting prairie chickens and rabbits, and getting arms and saddlery in good order for the coming hunt, or run, as it is more properly called in buffalo country. The next morning our party, accompanied by Crowfoot and some thirty of his braves, left Fort Hamilton at an early hour, having to proceed some ten or twelve miles before reaching the hunting grounds at a place called the "Seven Miles Butte." Accompanying us was a party of squaws, whose duty it would be to skin and cut up the expected game. Riding quietly along, in order to keep horses fresh, at about 9 o'clock and excitement became keen. All dismounted, and after girths had been tightened, weapons loaded, etc., proceeded leisurely towards a large herd. The buffalo did not trouble themselves much till the party was quite near, merely lifting their heads now and then, but on our getting too close they moved away, slowly at first, but gradually increasing their pace till only those who were well mounted could get alongside, the pace showing to my astonishment the marvellous speed of these large and unwieldy animals. In thousands the great herds lumbered away, Crowfoot and his braves following in their picturesque costumes with piercing yells, varied by the whip-like cracks of their rifles, all heard amid the bellowing of wounded buffalo. The weapon of offence used on this occasion was the American Henry, a sixteen shooter, the magazine containing cartridge running parallel with the barrel, and with this weapon nearly all the Indians, Blackfoot and Sioux, were at that time armed. Over 100 animals were killed in the run, which was followed up the next day by another, in which about 60 fell. The Indians retained all the robes, also meat, with the exception of some tongues and choice parts, which fell to the share of Mr. Healy and his guests.

Our party returned to Macleod ruminating over our initiation into the tremendous sport, which is now a thing of the past. But during the march of the Mounted Police across the North-West plains in 1874, the commissioner and assistant commissioner computed that from a certain point on one occasion there were no less than 80,000 buffalo visible. Now one is not to be seen in the same locality.

They build one house every hour in London.

THE PHANTOM SQUIRE.

A "Hair-Lifting" Ghost Story.

There is on old farmhouse, anciently a gentleman's mansion, situated at no great distance from Wendover, in Buckinghamshire, which I have recently learned had had the reputation of being haunted for a considerable period. Many years ago it was tenanted by its owners, a family of the name of Theed, and several later members of this race were not only confident of the fact of its being haunted, but were sometimes inconvenienced by the night noises, sighs, and sounds which were occasionally heard in its northern wing. Here were the kitchen and scullery, over them being two attic bedrooms. But both of these latter rooms were disused—the windows in one being boarded up, and the other being only used as a store-place for seeds and apples.

I went to stay at the house in the year 1854, in order to be near some friends who rented a considerable tract in the country for partridge shooting in the autumn. At the time I knew nothing of the reported ghostly visitant, and very little of the locality, except that a baronet (Sir F. Bernard-Morland) who lived near was a friend of mine—our friendship having been first formed at school—and I had no other friends thereabouts. I am quite certain, however, that he had never mentioned anything about the ghost, or anything likely to arouse curiosity with regard to the house. On returning thither late at night from a hard day's shooting, in the month of November, a friend who had driven me in his gig, and was driving to his own home, put me down—not at the chief gate of the place, which lay in another direction, but at a spot from which, as he directed me, if I walked through a narrow fir plantation and then over a stile into another banked-up walk, hedged in on both sides with filbert-trees, I should reach the kitchen and fruit garden of the house by a near cut, and save myself and him a considerable detour.

It was a fine night. The moon was up; but there were some heavy clouds in the sky towards the eastern horizon. On reaching the stile I vaulted over it, holding my gun in my left hand. No sooner had I reached the nutwalk, the trees of which had been arched together and made to grow so as to form a kind of continuous bower, than I distinctly saw what I thought was an old man, with his back towards me, stooping in his gait, about eight or ten feet before me. He did not seem to walk, but to glide, with a curious smooth motion and to be about a foot off the ground. I called out "Holloa! who's there?" but he took no notice, and glided on. I myself promptly followed. In an instant I seemed to realise the undoubted fact that the form was shadowy, strange, and supernatural. I then stopped for a few moments. The weird form, which emitted a curious kind of light, as I then noticed, stopped too. I went on; it went on. Then it sighed several times, with a deep, long-drawn, unearthly sigh, which terrified me considerably; and at once turning round—its features being vague and indistinct—it gave a piercing shriek, and suddenly vanished close before my eyes. At that moment a sound as of mocking, jeering voices, with laughter, rose on every side. This seemed to come from a large multitude of invisible persons quite near. The laughter was then repeated, as by voices up in the air, but fainter and fainter; and I must say I was exceedingly terrified. I listened for some minutes, expecting to see the form again, or to hear the voices and laughter; but all was at once still. Perfect silence reigned; not a sound was heard. Even the wind seemed to have sunk; and there was no repetition of this remarkable occurrence.

I reached the old house shortly; and after having refreshed myself with a plain but substantial meal, and being resolved to say nothing about what I had seen and heard to the tenants of the house, went to bed.

Afterwards I found, on inquiry, that "old Squire Theed used to be seen o'nights in the nut-walk;" but not by every one, only by some. It was a part of the grounds of the house always avoided by servants. Two females, coming home from Wendover Fair, as I was told, had recently seen the old Squire, "wafting himself along"—as the phrase used had it—and heard the ghostly mockings, though they themselves crossed towards the house by a pathway through Cow-leas Mead. The account of the apparition and of the weird laughter, given by other independent persons, who either alone or together had witnessed the same, tallied almost exactly with that here recorded.

The current tradition, explanatory of all this, was that a young woman and her infant child had been murdered in the house and buried in the walk by the squire, who subsequently made away with himself, being haunted by his victim. This tradition certainly has truth for its foundation, and is generally accepted.

A theory new and novel is that the vast depressions of the ocean beds are to be accounted for by supposing that the moon broke away from the earth more than 50,000,000 years ago. The basins are the scars then made.

A Syracuse woman boiled, scrubbed, and ironed, in the pocket of an apron, a $5 bill of the issue bearing the protrait of President Garfield, and discovered it, upon taking the apron from the drawer, in as clean and perfect condition as a new bill.

William Osborne, in Summit, Pa., is the owner of a calf that is covered with wool, and, although like a calf, it bleats like a lamb. It is five weeks old and is growing nicely. The wool which covers its body is about three-fourths of an inch long and very black.

EPITAPHS.

The Humorous Literature of the Graveyard.

Though to select a subject of greater solemnity than that of death would be impossible, the student of the literature of the churchyard cannot fail to be struck with the important part played therein by humor—often of the broadest description. To do the writers justice, it is in many cases of the unconscious kind. There was no intentional disrespect to the memory of

"John Ross Kicked by a horse."

And it may have been in deep dejection that the friends of the unfortunate youth killed during a pyrotechnic display, wrote upon his tombstone:

"Here I lie,
Killed by a sky-
Rocket in my eye."

While its Caledonian origin must be borne in mind (it hails from Edinburgh there was probably no premeditated levity in the memory of

"John Macpherson—that wonderful person
Six foot two —without his shoe
And slew —at Waterloo.

The humor of the following is merely due to peculiar punctuation:

"Erected to the memory of John Phillips Accidentally shot as a mark of affection by his brother."

It is difficult to say whether in jest or monition the following was inscribed to the memory of an Earle of Kildare:

'Who killed Kidare?—Who dared Kildare to kill?
Death killed Kildare.—Who dare kill whom will Sepulchral reference to the former pursuits of the departed have been very common. Lawyers whose familiarity with "ways that are dark" have called for censure; and doctors whose professional ministrations "have filled the half of this churchyard" have formed the principal subjects. Exception is made in favor of a legal ornament, one Mr. Strange, but at the expense of his brother practitioners—

"Here lies an honest lawyer—Strange!"

The proposed epitaph to the eminent cook, Alexis Soyer:

"Peace to his hashes;"

Is well known. Less known but more admirable is that upon a deceased dyer—

"Here lies a man who dyed a wool a great stor
One day he he died himself—and dyed no more"

The conjugal relation, sad to say, has suffered sharply at the hands of the epitaph writer—and sadder still to record, the weaker vessel has called forth the severest animadversion. Epitaphs of this class have usually been coarse and vulgar in the strain of the following:

'Here lies my poor wife—a sad slattern and shrew;
If I said I regretted her—I should lie too."

It is a gallant Frenchman who, at Pere le Chaise, thus apostrophizes the defunct partner of his joys and cares:

"Ci-gat, ma femme. Oh qu'elle est bien!
Pour son repos, et pour le mien."

Which, however, has its counterpart in an English churchyard:

"Here lies my poor wife Jane—here let her lie'
She finds rest at last—and so do I."

The unmarried fair have received gentler treatment, though a talkative spinster is awarded these lines:

"Under this stone the body lies of Arabella Young,
Who on the twenty-fourth of May, began to hold her tongue."

Independent of its interest as a record of longevity, there is a sporting flavor about the following reference to one Stephen Rumblood, of Brightwell, quite unique:

"He lived to 105, hearty and strong;
100 to 5 you don't live as long."

A request for burial in a particular spot is not uncommon, though seldom expressed with the naivete of the following:

"Under this yew tree, buried he would be,"
Because his father he, planted this yew tree.
—[Guilsfield, 1769.

The three following, dedicated to the memory of the departed matrons, are worth rescuing from oblivion:

"Some have children, some have none;
Here lies the mother of twenty-one
—[Woolstanton,

A severe blow is dealt to the sanitary reputation of the medicinal springs of Cheltenham in the lines below:

"Here I lie, and my three daughters,
All killed through drinking Cheltenham waters.
Had we but stuck to Epsom salts
We shouldn't be lying in these cold vaults.

In fitting conclusion may be quoted the following rebuke administered to the morbid curiosity to satisfy which has been one of the missions of the epitaph. In slightly varied forms it has been met with in divers corners of England, but was last heard of in a churchyard in New Jersey:

"Reader pass on, nor waste your precious time
On bad biography or better rhyme,
For what I am this crumbling clay assures,
And what I was is no concern of yours."

In his Arbor Day proclamation the Governor of Kansas says that the State, which the pioneers found treeless and a desert has now more than 200,000 acres of forest trees, all planted by settlers, and meteorologists assert that there has been a consequent great increase in the rainfall.

A writer in the Medical Times describes the island of Madeira presenting the curious anomaly of a country which is destitute of any wheeled vehicle whatever, a fact due to the almost complete absence of roads. People travel in hammocks, and, with three bearers only, they may journey all day with hardly a halt. The highest temperature of the island in 1885 was 90°, and the lowest 46°; the mean temperature of the months of the whole year varied but twelve degrees. Thus, for the Winter months, it was 61,60,60; Spring, 60,63,64; Summer, 68,71,72, and Autumn, 70,69,64.

THE END OF THE TRACK.

Some of the Beauties of the Cascade Mountains.

Cascade mountain, which has just been passed, is a stupendous elevation of rock, deriving its name from a small stream that oozes high up from its eastern side, and leaps down in pretty cascades from many an abrupt ledge, till reaching the level it loses its identity in the waters of Devil's Head Creek.

Seldom is its peak, which is about 4,500 feet above the valley, 8,900 feet above the sea, free from veils of cloud and mist, some hiding it out of sight, setting the mind wondering where its height ends, and some only dimly obscuring its dark massive loftiness.

Dense woods of arrow-straight spruce-pines, with here and there smooth lance-like poplars, color its earth-surfaced parts with shades of green that darken as distance lengthens until ebon spots on the cold grey and white scene is all that tells of mighty forests there.

In the darkest density is the haunt of two black bears, that nightly visit and feed on the carcasses of three worn-out, old dead horses lying near a timber camp within 200 yards of the railroad.

But their cunning and wariness is more than a match for snares or attempts to discover and slay them, and though one, a huge beast, has been seen unexpectedly several times, his majesty is always missing when purposely wanted.

On Sunday last, the 21st, some men building a permanent tank at the 3rd siding west of Calgary shot a fine young eagle, which measured 7 feet 10 inches from tip to tip of its outstretched wings. It was a grand bird, and would have been of much value as an ornithological specimen if properly saved and preserved.

Here, now, is a broader valley of the Bow river, very marshy in places, well wooded and thickly bushed in others. It is productive of prolific grass, a hundred tons of good hay having been cut here this autumn. And when the future urges settlement of this region, with clearance of the useless vegetation, and fences enclose cultivated fields and pastures that warmth and light have reclaimed to fertility and utility, pastoral scenes incidental to mountain regions, with cozy little farmhouses—very diminutive contrasted with the gigantic proportions of the surrounding country—gardens of miniature size with cottage flowers of sweet simplicity and clearly defined hue will beautify this present wilderness. Down the steep hills from many a winding path will come at even-tide the lowing cattle home, and during the day, far up the heights, the pleasant tinkle, tinkle, of bells will tell where they wandering graze. Where the mountain sheep crops the short, sweet herbage of ledges that hold a surface of soil from washing away through the repeated rains and snows of ages, small flocks of hardy, tiny sheep will thrive and grow fine wool and luscious mutton. A race of people, only ambitious of simple comforts and a peaceful existence undisturbed by the ferment of political noise, unmoved by religious fanaticism, unimpelled to amass great wealth for the glorification of individual ability, prosperity and luxury, full of wisdom as to the destined fulfilment of mortality, and full of hope as to the certainty of a glorious hereafter, may arise and be the clearest shining jewel in the crown of Canada.

Russian Women and Children.

The crying evil in Russia, be it remembered, is, and will be, heaven knows how long, its scanty population; and the main causes which prevent its growth are the fearful mortality among children of tender age (forty per cent die before the age of five) and forced barrenness of the women. The women, especially of the peasant class, usually marry late in life—not "till they have hardened their bones for their husband's work"—as they are crushed by unconscious hard toil, both in their girlhood and wifehood. Here as in Germany a good helpmate is expected by her lord to be "as strong as a mule," and her mulish strength is not spared even while she should be entitled to the tenderest care. With respect to the children, those of the lower order, especially in the country, suffer from exposure to a cruel climate, partly owing to the boor's conceit that it is well the weakling should perish and only the hardy survive, but in a great measure from that dire necessity which bids poverty sink or swim. But even among the well-to-do people the children's constitutions are tampered with and vitiated from the cradle by injudicious coddling and cotting. For the nursery, as we all know, is an exclusively English institution, and the children throughout the continent, Germany, perhaps, excepted, are sacrificed to their parents' blind fondness, being made to share the meals, to keep the late hours and join in the talk of the grown-up people, as much detriment arising from the unsuitable diet as from the unnatural precocity of their mental development. Hence nowhere does one see so many pale, thin and puny as well as knowing children of the upper classes as throughout the Czar's great dominions; nowhere do so many succumb to the treatment. But apart from the training of children in private families even in the foundling hospitals of St Petersburg and Moscow (this latter harboring as many as thirteen thousand inmates and the former providing for twenty-nine thousand) we learn from Murray's handbook, which lavishes the greatest praises on the vastness and munificence of these public charities that "the mortality among the children is very great," and yet that "too many of these illegitimate infants are saved as the lawful offspring of the nurses, left at that critical age to be brought up by hands in the villages." So little is the Russ fit to govern human beings, even in the earliest stage of its existence.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC

What Sandford Fleming Says of the Railway.

Mr. Sandford Fleming, in the course of an interview with a Winnipeg Sun reporter anent his trip over the Candian Pacific from Montreal to Ottawa, talked as follows:

"I have no objection to speak on the line, especially as it was the first I ever passed over the eastern section, I mean from Pembroke to Mattawa, of course I was never over the balance. We left Ottawa at noon on the 14th inst., and reached Mattawa on the evening of the same day. We awoke the next morning two or three hours after passing Sudbury Junction.

"What did you think of the road?

"I was much surprised to find the track so good between Sudbury and Pic, a distance of perhaps 400 or 500 miles, seeing that it was to a large extent constructed during the winter, and that portion of it perfectly new road."

"What are the grades?"

"The maximum grades I believe are one foot to a hundred, and in this respect the road is very similar to railways in Eastern Canada, such as the Grand Trunk, Ontario and Quebec, Northern and Western; and indeed some of these have heavier grades than mentioned to the hundred."

"Dose much work still remain to be done?"

"A good deal, but it is chiefly earthwork, but with a sufficient number of construction trains working, it will not take long to put this portion of the road in first-class running order. The country between Sudbury and Pic, where the line first strikes the lake shore, is somewhat forbidding in places, and not well suited for agricultural purposes, but in some sections there is good timber for railway construction, and an innumerable number of ties can be got out of that long stretch, sufficient to supply traffic for many years to come. The roadbed is on good material—plenty of gravel. There are a very few bad cuts, and these can easily be dealt with. When this portion of the line is completed in every respect, fast trains may be run over it with as much safety and comfort to passengers as on any line in America. There are only four or five such cuts in the whole stretch between Pic and Mattawa."

"West of Pic," continued Mr. Fleming, "the line skirts Lake Superior for a considerable distance, say 70 miles, the work is very heavy. There is much rock-cutting, a few tunnels and a number of large trestles. The permanent trestles appear to be firm and well constructed, quite equal to any works of the class of any American railway as far as I could judge."

"What about the temporary trestles and while you are on the subject may I ask the question so as to meet the charges made by the House of Commons opposition last winter respecting the road?"

"There are temporary trestles which if used with care, will, I think, answer the purpose until more solid work is substituted. There will also be more or less delay in using trestles, but not more so on the line than on many western American lines. As to the charges that the road was built on snowdrifts and roots, I might just say that we passed over it at the very worst season of the year, when the frost was coming out of the ground in some places, and others. Notwithstanding this the train passed over the whole extent—some six hundred miles—without the slightest mishap. Of course at certain points we had to exercise great care, but we were surprised to find that we got over them without any difficulty. There is a good deal of work still to be done, but in a few months, if a sufficient force of men is employed, the line can be put in a very fair condition."

"What about the scenery along the route?"

"When the portion which skirts Lake Superior is completed it will be very attractive to tourists. The scenery is magnificent, and is sure to be greatly admired by all who travel over it. It has a wild and romantic character."

"What speed could be attained over section?"

"Trains will probably be run over it at a limited rate of speed. The curves are pretty sharp in some places, but not more so than frequently occurs on lines passing through a country of that character.

When the entire line is completed I know of no reason why the whole distance between Montreal and Winnipeg could not be traversed in 48 or 50 hours. There would be an average of about thirty miles an hour. Passenger trains could leave Montreal as at present, in the morning and run along the banks of the Ottawa during the day, giving the passengers opportunity to enjoy the scenery. The night would be spent in travelling between Lake Nipissing and Pic. The next day would be spent journeying along the shore of Lake Superior where the scenery I spoke of could be enjoyed. The next night could be spent travelling between Port Arthur and Rat Portage, and Winnipeg would be reached early in the afternoon."

"Do you think winter traffic would be practicable?"

"There would be no difficulty between Pic and Mattawa, but there would probably be difficulty along the lake shore, the snow would drift in and block the track. Of course, if snow-sheds were built, the apprehended difficulties would be obviated."

There is but one place in the United States where gun cotton is made. Six months ago the navy was obliged to depend upon England for all the gun cotton used, but a manufactory has been erected at the torpedo station, Newport, which now produces all that is required for sea-going men-of-war and torpedoes.

AVENGED;

OR, CALM AFTER STORM.

For a second Monsieur Bertrand looks away from the steadfast anguish of the dusky brown eyes, and towards his clients, as though to find some sign that they remain fixed in their purpose; but there is none. Isidore's face is white almost as his wife's; but there is no softening in the handsome sullen eyes, no relaxing in the set lines of the cruel lips, while Monsieur St. Just, pere, nods his gray bullet-shaped head significantly; and, with a short dry cough, the lawyer proceeds with his task.

"Monsieur St. Just tells me, madame, that you are wholly unacquainted with the article in the French code relating to the marriage of minors. Is that so?"

"Certainly, Monsieur."

"That is unfortunate—very unfortunate," he says, in the same dry unimpassioned tone, but looking straight over the graceful head; "because it is precisely that article that deprives you of all legal status and invalidates your marriage. Will you hear me out patiently," he adds more quickly, as Cressida is about to interrupt him with a passionate exclamation.

"I do not for a moment deny that you are in England a wife; but in France a minor can contract a marriage without the formal consent of his parents, and in the case that consent is distinctly refused."

"Is distinctly refused," Monsieur St. Just echoes in a complacent husky barytone. "Isidore is a minor, a child, when he went through this farce which mademoiselle would treat as a serious fact!"

The lawyer shrugs his shoulders, impatient of an interruption which he mentally dramatises as in infamous taste. Cressida still looks only at him, and says in low hard tones—

"Monsieur St. Just was twenty-three and I sixteen, or so our ages were entered in the church register—"

"Precisely, madame; he does not attain his majority until he has reached his twenty-fifth birthday; consequently"—he pauses, as though even he, case-hardened and callous as he is, hesitated to speak the words that branded the innocent young life with an ineffaceable disgrace and shame.

But Monsieur St. Just has no such scruples; he is what he himself describes as a thoroughly practical man, who likes to see a fair case fairly stated, who has no morbid sensitiveness either for himself or other people, and prides himself upon the fact. He has delegated the present case to his lawyer, not because he himself would shrink from or in anyway specially dislike it, but because the other has a professional knack of stating facts clearly and concisely. This knack however has, Monsieur St. Just's opinion, lamentably failed him now; so, with little hesitation, but much of irritation and contempt, he takes the explanatory duty into his own capable hands.

"Listen to me, madame!" he says, in a very decisive fashion. "We only tell you the facts, we do not criticise the extreme imprudence of my son or your guardians' culpable negligence. Isidore, being a minor, you have in France no shadow of a claim upon him; he is free to marry to-morrow if he pleases. It sounds harsh, perhaps; but Monsieur Bertrand, and all the lawyers in France, for that matter, will tell you it is the law of the land."

As Cressida listens to the words that drive her into a dark outer world of which she knows nothing, that take from her name and fame and home, she raises her eyes and seems to see Isidore's face as she has never seen it yet. In that lightning-like glance the last grain of her childish love for the handsome Frenchman who had dazzled her dies out of her heart, and something like loathing terror takes its place. She clasps her hands before her face, and staggers back against the wall, growing so deadly white that they think she is about to faint; but she controls herself quickly, and turns to Monsieur Bertrand, who is arranging papers in their pigeon-holes with studied carelessness.

"This is quite true?"

"Quite," he assents gravely. "I have no interest in deceiving you, madame; I feel deeply for your false position."

She shudders a little, but does not drop the large eyes that are tearless and unnaturally bright, as she says very quietly.

"Thank you; then my business here is done."

She is moving mechanically to the door, when the elder St. Just intercepts her. Her calmness deceives him, acute as he is. He thinks she is taking things beautifully, with true British phlegm, and his face beams with benevolence and friendly feeling.

"Not quite, mademoiselle—madame, I should say—for by every moral right the more honourable title is yours—but what will you? When the laws of nations differ, we each, of course, abide by our own. Bah! We have settled with the past—it was a grand error—let it go!"—and he puffed out his lips as though blowing some airy morsel away. "Now, in the most grateful and liberal spirit, I wish to consider your future."

The words seem to break the strong spell that has hitherto fettered and held her speechless. She clasps her hands with a vehement movement, and breaks into a bitter ringing laugh that is pitiful to hear.

"My future!" she echoes, with such fierce biting scorn that the man moves uneasily away, and wishes he had let Monsieur Bertrand conclude the business in his own fashion. "Is there any one in this world whom that future concerns so little as it does you and your son, monsieur?"

"Talk heroics if you please," he says sullenly. "I am a practical man, madame, and it was of your practical needs I thought. I am willing to settle a sum of money upon you; I do not deny that you have been badly used; there is a debt between us!"

"There is, and Heaven will pay it!" the girl cries, with a sudden intensity of conviction that thrills and frightens him. "Let me pass, monsieur, and spare me this last of my many wrongs; you have not dragged me down so far that I can touch your money!"

He allows her to pass without another word; speech seems to forsake him, and round his heart there curdles a chill sick fear. Victory is his, a triumph absolute and complete; the routed enemy has abandoned the field without a hint of return; and yet, as he wipes the great drops of perspiration from his brow with a huge bandana handkerchief, and stares stupidly at the green-baize door through which his adversary has vanished, he admits that such another victory would be tantamount to a defeat.

"Mon Dieu, Isidore! Why did you not tell me that your belle Anglaise was such a fury? Your life, la-bas, has been no couch of roses; thou art well out of that galere."

Isidore smiles, a cold faint smile, but gives no verbal answer; his conscience is infinitesimal, and his nerves are steel-strung; but, while his father speaks of Cressida's temper he thinks of the one year they have spent together, of her unvarying patience, her unchanging gentleness, her childish love and trust; and, remembring this, he does not find it easy to answer.

"What will she do now? She has no money," the father goes on musingly. And Isidore answers with abrupt irritation—

"None! We must seek her out to-morrow. I can bear no more to-day."

And with these words he turns on his heel and quits the office, leaving his father to follow or not at his pleasure.

In the meantime Cressida, with an odd stunned feeling, walks through the strange and busy streets, much as she might walk them in her sleep. She has suffered the cruellest wrong that woman can suffer. A wife and no wife—friendless, homeless, and all but penniless, she stands alone in a strange land. Yet she is conscious of no acute mental agony. Just now she only knows that something terrible has come to pass, and changed the whole complexion of her life. She is tired, for she has known no rest after the sea passage and double railway-journey; she is faint, for no crumb has passed her lips since she left the English shore; but she is not conscious that sleep and food might save her reason, and keep her from that gulf into which she is slipping fast. Something within her urges her to move on and on, as though in some fashion she could outpace the cruel destiny that pursues her.

So hour after hour she walks on through the Paris streets, the hot asphalte blistering her feet, the sun pouring upon her aching head. Once or twice she pauses at the fountains on the Boulevards, and drinks thirstily of the sparkling water, while the passers-by stare curiously at the beautiful bewildered "lost"-looking face. But no one speaks to her and she passes unheeding on her way.

Poor as she is, she might eat if she chose, for there are a few shillings in her pocket; but the hot fumes of the various confectioners' shops create only a deadly nausea within her, and she passes them quickly by with averted head.

At last, as the sun sinks lower and lower, and the evening shadows fall, she creeps wearily to one of the remoter bridges that span the narrow river, and rests her dazzled eyes by gazing at the cool dark stream.

"How placid it looks," she thinks, a little enviously—"how good it would be to lie quietly at rest there!"

She has no definite purpose in coming here. She no more thinks of suicide than does the little English terrier that licks the hot drooping hand, and stares with round wistful brown eyes into the fevered face, until he is called off by the two ladies who own him, one of whom looks back with a gleam of interest in her bright black eyes.

"Fido has good taste, grandmamma; I never saw a prettier face than that girl's, nor a more wretched one."

But the grandmother's sympathies are less on the surface, and she is more awake to the necessity of not wasting time. So she does not turn her head, only sighs a little wearily, and says with a wistful smile—

"Poor girl! It is no grief that you can lighten, I am afraid. When you are of my age, Florence, you will learn that you must not look at all the misery around you, or your mind will be filled with pain-pictures only"—a piece of life-philosophy which pretty Florence Carmichael finds it hard indeed to accept, and of which Lady Gordon herself is destined to repent in the days to come.

"There is Frank?" the girl cries eagerly, as her bright eyes flash over the bridge and meet those of the young oarsman below. "Oh, grandmamma, do make haste, or we shall miss him!"

So, the prospect of pleasure banishing all sympathy with pain, the bright young girl passes on, and Cressida is once more alone with her fate.

It comes with fierce strides now; it stands pale and stern and menacing, above her, while, all unconscious of its presence, she rests in a nook of the old bridge, leans one hot temple on the cool stone parapet, and closes her tired eyes in the stillness that is half stupefaction and half sleep.

"Cressida!"

She lifts her heavy lids, and looks into Isidore St. Just's pale handsome face—unnaturally pale in the white moonlight; but it does not frighten her now. For the moment she literally forgets the past, thinks she is waking from some hideous dream, and greets him with outstretched hands and a glad welcoming cry.

"Isidore, Isidore! I have dreamed so terribly—I thought——"

There she pauses, struck to the heart with a chill sense of reality, and gazes round her with wide anguished eyes. There burn the city lights and rise the palaces of modern Paris. There the dark river creeps beneath her feet. There stands her husband, with eyes like steel and cruel white lips. The merciful delusion passes forever—it is all real, all true!

"Cressida"—she shrinks nearer and nearer to the parapet, farther and farther from the man who has sworn to cherish and protect her—a dumb horror in her eyes and on her parted lips. "Cressida, I have followed you all day, and tracked you down—at last. You shall listen to me, shall hear reason, shall accept my father's offer!"

He has been so accustomed to subdue the docile childlike girl that he pauses mechanically for her submission now. But there is no answer—only that dreadful dumb stare, that eloquent shrinking from his look and touch.

"Come with me, Cressida," he repeats, more gently. "All this is hard on you—terribly hard; but it is my father's will. I quarrelled with him, Cressida, two years ago; I was in debt—in trouble. I fled to England and earned my bread by teaching in a school; but the bread was dry and bitter, your England sad and dull. So, when it pleased my father to break our marriage and find me another bride, a poitrinaire heiress, Cressida, who will replenish my coffers but never touch my heart, what could I do but submit?"

He finishes with an uneasy laugh; but still she does not speak. All words, weak or strong, are alike powerless to paint her pain or the infamy of his conduct.

"Cressida!"—he lays one hand upon her shoulder, and the stony calm is broken. She turns upon him with a tragic scorn and passion—

"Do not speak to—do not touch me!" she rather gasps than says; but he holds her still, and says with some show of authority—

"This is nonsense—high-flown, ridiculous, and dangerous! Do not struggle, Cressida; until some arrangement is made for your future you shall not wander out alone. Bah! What a child you are! Have you thought what will become of you—even where you sleep to-night?"

He puts the question half-earnestly, half in angry mockery, for the demon within him is roused by her opposition. And she? Only the angels who weep for human frailty and human pain, as they set down the sad and blotted records of our lives, know whether she gave it a wilful and premeditated answer.

Isidore St. Just only knows that a smile like sudden sunlight bursting through a cloud breaks over the pale tortured face—that, repeating the one word "Where?" with a wild triumphant thrill in her voice, she breaks from him with sudden strength—and then——

There is a shrill sharp cry, a heavy splashing sound, the waters part and close, a long rippling line of light runs down the gray bosom of the river, and Isidore St. Just stands alone on the bridge, with the big drops of a mortal terror on his brow and the agony of the first murderer in his cold and selfish heart.

An hour afterwards he stands with leaden-hued face and chattering teeth in his father's study, and tells the tragic ending of the tale.

"I never dreamed of this; I thought she would join her friends in Australia," he says, almost piteously, and Monsieur St. Just shakes his gray head.

"It is terrible, of course, but almost for the best. She would not have submitted quietly. She would have joined no friends save those in Heaven, with whom she is happy now. Did no one see you together?"

"No one," Isidore answers gloomily. "We were alone on the bridge, and I came away at once."

"Good!" Monsieur St. Just's face clears wonderfully. "Courage, my son! Providence favours us, and all will be for the best!"

CHAPTER VII.

A pretty morning-room on the western side of a quaint old gray-stone house, a broad verandah overgrown with climbing roses, two chairs placed vis-a-vis in the scented shadow, two ladies occupying them, and appearing exceedingly happy in each other's company.

Lady Gordon, a handsome, stately old lady, whose fine-featured, delicately-tinted face is beautiful still, despite her seventy years, sits upright in her lounging-chair, with a bit of fine embroidery in her ringed white fingers, while her companion watches her with pretty arched brows of admiration and wonder.

"Why, grandmamma, you are the most wonderful old lady in the world!" she says, composing herself into an attitude of boyish ease. "You are not a day older than you were two years ago, when I left you in Paris."

"Sit straight in your chair Florence, and do not talk nonsense!" the grandmother answers, looking with affectionately disapproving eyes at the slender little figure that poises itself so audaciously on the arm of the chair, the small shining head with short jetty curls bent eagerly forward, the little ringed hands clasped on the crossed knee, the small slippered foot, with its gleaming buckle and cardinal stocking fully displayed. Miss Carmichael looks all black and gold and vivid carnation bloom, an audaciously dazzling creature, whom Lady Gordon's severest taste condemns while in her heart she dearly loves her.

"Well, but really, grandmamma," the girl persists, "you do seemed changed somehow! Frank noticed it as well as I. You look as though you had found something."

"I have found a great new happiness," Lady Gordon said gently and her slender fingers tremble a little over their delicate work.

"You mean Cressida! She is very beautiful, is she not, grandmamma? Her face is perfect, in line and color; but she looks so very, very sad. Is she anything like aunt Rosamond?"

"Very," replies Lady Gordon, with sudden emphasis; "so like that when I saw her first I thought——" She pauses, a faint tinge of colour rising in the fair old cheek that is almost as smooth as her grandchild's, then goes on a little absently—"But there is one difference—Rosamond's eyes were blue, hers, as you know, are an exquisite brown, like your mother's!"

"And Frank's are like her mother's, I suppose," the girl finishes, with a little tinkling laugh that is like a peal of silver bells. "Papa is always lamenting that I did not inherit the Gordon eyes instead of his own little black ones."

The brilliant orbs she maligns sparkle anew with the words; and Lady Gordon ignores the mock-modesty, and answers with perfect tranquillity—"You would have little cause to complain, Florence, if you took after your father in every respect. Sir Robert Carmichael was one of the handsomest young men I ever saw——"

"And will be the handsomest old one, as you will admit when you see him—the handsomest and dearest and best—that is to say, he was," the young lady adds, catching herself up with considerable vivacity—"now he is a tyrant! I do not think it is good for the father of a family to be made governor of a lot of wretched abject niggers. It gives him such autocratic ideas."

Lady Gordon smiles as she notes the petulant pout of the red lips, the angry sparkle of the bright dark eyes. It is rather the face of a spoiled child thwarted for the first time than that of a reckless and rebellious young woman. But, all the same, that shrewd watcher is glad to remember how many miles of sea and land now stretch between Sir Robert Carmichael's daughter and the lover of whom Sir Robert Carmichael so strongly disapproves.

She has not seen very much of Florence, for two years she has not seen her at all; and she is but vaguely acquainted with the story that is evidently in the girl's mind. All she knows is that Sir Robert Carmichael, her son-in-law and the governor of an important South African province, has written to her in hot haste, telling her that Florence was fretting after a most undesirable lover, that he was sending her to England in her brother's charge, and trusted her grandmother would, for a time at least, receive her.

She has just been six weeks at Gordon Cross, as Lady Gordon's pretty dowerhouse is called, and in that space of time she has contrived to win her old place in the stately old lady's heart. Her old place but no more, at she laughingly complains; for, though the dowager is gentler and more expansive in manner than when, as a school-girl of sixteen, Florence parted from her in Paris, the pent-up tenderness of years is not lavished upon her.

"I declare it is not fair!" she cries, catching at a creamy rose that dangles just within her reach, and tearing its fragrant satiny leaves remorselessly to bits. "You care twice as much for cousin Cressida as you do for me, and you have not known her half as long."

Lady Gordon neither denies the imputation nor answers her grandchild's smile; she looks away from her across the sunlit lawn, as she answers gravely—

"There were no arrears of love due to you, Florence. I never quarrelled with your mother."

"And you did with aunt Rose?" Miss Carmichael says quickly. "Oh, grandmamma, do tell me the story; it is like a romance!"

Lady Gordon hesitates a second; then she says with a little tremulous smile—

"Very well, child; if you can sit still so long you shall hear the story, though I do not think you will find it particularly interesting, and there is much that pains me to tell. It is the history of a foolish love and a runaway marriage, Florence."

The British Coinage System.

During last year the coins struck by the British mint were of no less than thirty-four different kinds. In addition to the different pieces used in the United Kingdom, the authorities were called upon to provide silver cents for Hong Kong, silver and bronze cents for Canada, bronze plasters for Cyprus, nickel pence and farthings for Jamaica, bronze farthings for Malta, bronze cents for Mauritius, and silver and bronze coins for other colonies. Among the curious coins struck were silver pennies and half-pennies for the special use of the queen. They comprise her "Maundy money," and are given to the poor of the parish to which she belongs on Easter Monday of each year. The coinage of "Maundy money" is of very ancient origin. Last year it comprised £50 sterling worth of two-pennies, £89 of four-pennies, and £58 of pennies.

For the imperial coinage alone forty-one million pieces were struck. The value of the sovereigns and half-sovereigns included in this reached £2 236,513 sterling, of the silver £664,433, and of the bronze £69,346. The value of the silver coined into half-crown and shillings is almost exactly alike. The amount of profit made by the government is considerable. It amounted last year to £87,700 sterling. During the previous year a much larger business was transacted by the mint, and the profits amounted to £135,713 sterling. Since 1872 the profits of the national mint have amounted to £299,550 sterling.

The directors of the mint make no suggestions about giving up the ancient system of coinage and substituting one that would be much more convenient to the people. The Canadians saw how easy it was to compute the money used in the United States, and adopted the same system of currency many years ago. But little knowledge is required to compute money when the coins increase in value in a tenfold ratio. The decimal system of coinage results in a great saving of time, and prevents many mistakes. The money used in the United States and Canada is the most easy to compute of any in the world, while that of England is the most difficult. It seems strange that so enlightened a nation as the English should cling to a barbarous system of coinage, and should have a different sort of currency in every colony.

Writers in the London Lancet call attention to the great value of hot-water applications to the head in fainting or syncope. They say also that a prompt use of it, applied to the forehead with cloths, will very often avert such attacks.

A German engineer is reported to have made an important discovery in aeronautics, by which he is enabled to condense or expand the gas in a balloon. The agent he employs is compressed carbonic acid, with the help of which, he says, he is able to ascend or descend at pleasure.

The importance of wholesome potable water for cities is shown in Vienna. Since the introduction into that city of water drawn from the Styrian Alps a constant and very considerable decrease has been observed in stomach and intestinal troubles and cases of typhus fever have become rare.

A cheaper light than Edison's has been invented by Prof. T. S. C. Lowe, of Norristown, Pa. It is not electric, a lighted jet of cheap fuel gas coming in contact with a spiral of metal, the composition of which has not been made public. It is said a light of twenty-candle power will cost the consumer one-quarter of a cent an hour.

Cut steel nails appear destined to supersede the ordinary common iron cut nail as completely as the modern pointed screw nail has the old-fashioned blunt screw nail. The cost of the steel cut is not much more than that of the iron cut nails and in quality and finish they are fully equal to the best hand-made nails. It is surprising that they are not more generally known to wood-workers.

In British men-of-war experiments have been made with a view to diminish the rolling, by the fitting of lateral water tanks to the hull. With the motion of the ship the water flows in the direction in which the ship rolls, but the vessel partly recovers itself before the water has gone from one side to the other. Results show that with the tanks half full the rolling is diminished about 27 per cent.

A New York paper has arrayed a number of scientific facts showing that plants flourish much better under the electric and other lights than under the alternating influence of light and darkness. Diurnal repose is not necessary for the life of plants. A series of experiments is proposed whereby our Department of Agriculture may determine the conditions under which the electric light might be advantageously and economically employed in forcing the growth of garden and hothouse plants.

A sympathetic ink for writing on postal cards is simply diluted sulphuric acid—one part by measure of acid to seven of water. When the ink is applied the card will at first show roughened traces of the writing, but after drying these disappear and the writing is as invisible as though done with water. Of course, only a gold pen or a quill should be used with this acid ink. If it is desired to avoid the suspicion of sympathetic ink having been employed, the card may be written upon across the first writing with tincture of iodine, which will entirely fade out when heat is applied to develop the sympathetic ink.

The gift of the Emperor of Russia to the Empress on Easter morning was an egg of gold. Upon opening it the yolk of an egg is disclosed, made of gold of a different color from the shell. In this yolk is a little hen, containing a diminutive imperial crown of diamonds, and set in the crown is a round ruby of unsurpassed beauty.

There is considerable barbed fence in Maricopa County, Arizona, and the vast flocks of wild ducks which frequent the valley often fly low, and, striking the barbed fence, become impaled thereon. It is said that tons of ducks are gathered daily by the boys from the fences and sent to market.

Markdale Roller Mills.

The subscriber begs leave to announce to the farmers of the surrounding country that he is turning out flour equal to any other roller mill.

No more waiting while the grist is being ground.

The following is the scale of exchange:—

Wheat Weighing	62 lbs,	40 lbs.	Flour.
"	61 "	39 "	"
"	60 "	38 "	"
"	59 "	37 "	"
"	58 "	36 "	"
"	57 "	35 "	"

with offal in proportion to amount of flour.

I find the average weight of new wheat to be 60 lbs. to the bushel, and the most of it, if properly cleaned, would weigh 61 or 62 to the bushel.

THE annual bazaar and garden party in connection with Christ Church, Markdale, on the evening of Dominion Day, was a grand success. The atmosphere was quite chilly, but those present appeared to enter into the sports with all the more ambition on account of the cold. Time and space compels brevity in our report. Proceeds about $100.

ACCIDENT AT KIMBERLEY.—On Friday evening last Mr. John Plewes and wife went out for a drive with a spirited horse and bran new buggy, but unfortunately before they had gone far, one line broke, causing the horse to turn short and upset the rig, throwing both out. Mrs. P. was badly hurt but Mr. Plewes escaped serious injury. The buggy was badly dilapidated. Mrs. P. is recovering.

AN ABLE JOURNAL.—Toronto Truth is the most logical and thoroughly independent weekly journal published in Canada. It has an efficient staff of contributors, making this department exceedingly instructive and interesting, contains a large amount of current literature, also a valuable health department, in fact it is brim full of useful and interesting as well as amusing reading matter.

ROYAL TEMPLARS.—On Friday evening last at a regular meeting, the following officers were elected in Markdale lodge Royal T. of T., No. 142:—Select Councillor, R. W. Ennis; Vice-Councillor, W. T. Jackman; Past Councillor, C. W. Rutledge; Chaplain, Rev. T. Grandy; Sec., J. R. Anderson; Fin. Sec., A. Hill; Treasurer, T. Hill; Herald, J. R. Mathews; Guard, W. J. Boyd; Sentinel, J. McKenla.

"IMMIGRANT CHILDREN."—Mr. John T. Middlemore, the founder of the Orphan Children's Emigration Charity, London, Ont., left Liverpool on the 18th inst, in the S. S. Lake Winnipeg with a party of 30 girls and 40 boys between the ages of 5 and 14 years, who are brought out to this country for adoption or hire, chiefly among farmers. They are expected to arrive at the Guthrie Home, near the city, on or about the 1st prox. This will be Mr. Middlemore's 13th annual visit to these shores with juvenile emigrants from Birmingham, England, since 1872. Already many applications accompanied with good references have been made for the children expected to arrive, but more are required. Further particulars may be obtained by addressing MR. H. GIBBENS, Manager of the Guthrie Home, London, Ont.

Fluid Lightning does not take a day or an hour to remove Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, Lumbago or Rheumatism, but will do it instantly, and without carrying your head in a poultice for a day or using greasy liniment. Try a 25c. bottle from Hill Bro's. 4

VICTOR ROLLER MILL.—Mr. Angus Plewes has completed the raising of his mill-dam, added improved machinery to the mill and is now running full blast. Customers can depend on having their grist home with them without delay. A superior quality of flour to any previously turned out is now guaranteed. Flour, Bran, Shorts, Chop, &c., always on sale. Chopping done every working day. The public are cordially invited to give us a trial.

The virtue of Carbolic Asid for healing, cleansing and purifying is well known; but from the many modes of applying it, the public is uncertain how best to use it. To meet that want, McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate is prepared, and may be used with confidence. Do not be misled. Take only McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. Sold at Hill Bro's. 4

NEARLY A GONNER.—One of W. J. Noble's horses got out of the pasture on Monday morning last and attempted to cross the cattle guard at 90 side road, a mile West of Markdale, and fell across the rail, being found in this position when the morning express came thundering along, but fortunately for the horse as well as the train, the latter was brought to a standstill before reaching the animal, which was removed off the track and a smash up thus averted. The horse is recovering.

Mrs. Robert Hooper, of Kinloss, county of Bruce, in a letter, says: "I have been troubled with Dyspepsia and Liver Complaints for a number of years, and am glad to say to the public as well as friends that McGregor's Speedy Cure brought me around, and I am now all right, thanks to McGregor's Speedy Cure. Hundreds of like testimonials are frequently received, and are daily proving that this is truly a wonderful remedy, curing Sluggish Liver, Bilious Headache and Costiveness, where all else fails. Sold at Hill Bro's. Trial bottles given free. 4

Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Wm. Mason has been twice burned out the past year, he is now to the front with a stock of wheeld rigs which is worthy the attention of those requiring such. He guarantees his work and thus secures his customers from being gulled. See his advt. in this paper and then go and examine for yourselves. Mr. J. McKenna is a thorough practical blacksmith and does the iron work, which is a sufficient guarantee that it is genuine.

A SECRET

The secret of beauty lies in pure blood and good health, Burdock Blood Bitters is the grand key that unlocks all the secretions. It cures all Serofulous Diseases, acts on the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, Skin and Bowels, and brings the bloom of health to the palid cheek.

LEG BROKEN.—We regret very much to learn that Mr. Arch. Neilson near Proton Station, had his leg broken on Tuesday evening. He left for home about 7 p. m., with horse and buggy, and while driving down Steven's hill near this village, the horse commenced to act ugly and broke a shaft, then started to run away throwing Mr. Neilson out with above result. Mr. John Moffat overtook him where the accident happen- and took him to Flesherton where he had the limb dressed by Dr, Christoe.

AFTER SEVENTY-THREE YEARS' SUFFERING.

Rev, Wm, Stout, of Wiarton, was cured of serofulous abscess that seventeen doctors could not cure. Burdock Blood Bitters was the only successful remedy. It cures all impurities of the system.

FIRE.—Jas. Nash, Artemesia, lost dwelling and outhouses by fire on Monday night last; about 11 o'clock p.m. while all were asleep Mr. Nash was awakened by the cracking of the fire but not in time to save the house, and only a part of the clothing was saved, the furniture being all lost. The wind was blowing towards the barn which stood about 10 rods distant and fired it, no help being within reach the outbuildings were consumed with contents. The fire is supposed to have originated from the chimney. Loss about $800, insured for $200.

THIS IS RELIABLE.

R. N. Wheeler, Merchant of Everton, was cured of a severe attack of inflammation of the lungs by Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam. This great throat and lung healer cures weak lungs, coughs, horseness, bronchitis, and all pectoral complaints.

Building up a Hay-Stack.

The great point to be secured in stacking hay is, to keep the center the highest. If this is done, water can not penetrate into the stack, but will find its way to the outside under the most unfavorable circumstances. If on the other hand, the center is hollow the water must drain into the center, and so ruin the stack. An excellent way to build a stack is to set a tall sapling firmly in the ground, with a foundation of rails around it; then begin at the center, and place the hay about the pole, gradually spreading, until the edge of the base is reached. Continued building up the stack, the highest in the centre around the pole, the builder standing in the center so as to tread the hay firmly there. As the stack settles, the outstde sinks more than the center, and helps to make the stack better. The top of the stack is finished by fastening a covering of hay to the pole, with hay bands wound firmly around it, A stack so made will not leake, and even clover hay may be safely stacked in this manner, because the water must make its way to the outside by the force of gravity, and escape there by dropping to the ground clear of the stack.--American Agriculturist for July.

AN EX ALDERMAN TRIED IT.

Ex-Alderman Taylor, of Toronto tried Hagyard's Yellow Oil for Rheumatism. It cured him after all other remedies had failed.

Editor & Proprietor.

SINGULAR FACTS.

Hubert Hector, of Liberty, is quite queerly constituted in one respect. He sheds all of his finger nails and two of his toe nails yearly. The old nails are gradually crowded off the fingers by the new and tender nails growing behind and under them.

On the 8th of February Mr. Alford Long, a farmer in Warrior district, was aroused at midnight by pain. He found that during his sleep he had chewed his tongue horribly. Next morning it had swollen to such an extent that he could not speak. After the swelling went down a cancer was discovered on the tongue. This grew to such an extent that the poor man could only be fed with great difficulty and at last died.

A Skye terrier, owned by a Baltimore gentleman proved one day recently that it could feel ashamed of a dishonest act. The master had always treated the terrier well—in fact, it had never been punished. On the day in question the gentleman was at table. The little skye saw a cutlet near the edge of the board and yielded to the temptation to steal the meat. The cutlet was slyly seized and taken under the sofa. The gentleman pretended not to see the act of theft. But the conscience of the little terrier soon got the better of its hunger. It brought the cutlet back, laid it at the feet of its master, hung its head in shame and slunk away.

In the museum at Dublin there is, or was, the skeleton of one Clark, a native of the city of Cork, whom they call the Ossified Man, one of the greatest curiosities of nature. It is the carcase of a man entirely ossified in his lifetime, living in that condition for several years. Those that knew him before this surprising alteration, affirm he had been a young man of great strength and agility. He felt the first symptoms of this surprising change some time after he had lain all night in the fields, after a debauch; till, by slow degrees, every part grew into a bony substance, excepting his skin, eyes, and intestines; his joints settled in such a manner that no ligament had its proper operation; he could not lie down or rise up without assistance. He had at last no bend in his body; yet when he was placed upright like a statue of stone he could stand, but could not move in the least. His teeth were joined and formed into one entire bone, therefore a hole was broken through them to convey liquid substance for his nourishment. The tongue lost its use and his sight left him some time before he expired.

New Uses for Electricity.

The possibilities of electricity have been known to men of science for many years, but its actualities are being realized only in our own times. It is now being introduced into mines for a great variety of uses, especially as an illuminant; but also as a motive power and a means of communication. It has replaced the old tallow candle, and there is no longer any need of the safety lamp, for the light can be carried in hand and is so brilliant that labor can be continued for the whole twenty-four hours. Its use in lighting cities has had one curious result. It has diminished crime, for deeds of murder and robbery are usually accomplished under cover of darkness. Statistics prove that crime of all kinds have diminished in the portions of cities that have been well lighted. Another fact of great interest is that plant life thrives best under a continuous electrical light. It is superior to sunlight, because the latter is necessarily intermittent. Plants, it should be remembered, require moisture, heat, and light to mature. It has long been noticed that the foliage subject to the midnight sun of Norway was exceptionally brilliant and vital, due to the fact of there being no night for half the year to obscure the rays of the great luminary. It is now suspected that in hot-houses and conservatories the use of electricity after the sun goes down will produce remarkable results in way of plant development, notwithstanding the wonders already brought to light by this subtle power of nature. Scientists say that we now know only the A B C's of electricity. When all its factors are combined for the use of man there will be created for him a new and wonderful environment.

The Changed Condition of Things.

There has suddenly sprung up a demand for Europeans who understand the language of Oriental nations. The Russian government gives high pay to men who have a knowledge of the Chinese, Persian, Afghanistan, and Sanscrit tongues They are needed as interpreters, and if they are men of affairs also, they are well paid, and are given high official positions. The whole of Central Asia is to be opened up to the commerce of the world. Thibet, which has so carefully guarded its borders from foreign intruders, is negotiating through one of its Grand Lamas with an English agent named Coleman Macauly, with a view of opening trade relations with India. Mr. Colquhoun, who has travelled through the country, says that a railroad would now be welcomed in the Shan states between Burmah and China, and would pay large profits. From every quarter of Asia come reports of awakened enterprise, of the formation of new trade relations, and of projects looking to the building of railroads and telegraphs through that populous but hithertofore backward continent. The most astonishing phenomena on this planet to-day, is the spectacle of renewed life in these Asiatic populations, a great part of which is directly traceable to the influence of Russian conquest south of the Caspian sea. War is an evil in itself, but it is often the means of spreading civilization and renewing the life of backward and decaying communities.

Marriage Statistics.

The statistics of marriage in different countries furnish some interesting facts. Young men from fifteen to twenty years marry young women averaging two or three years older than themselves; but if they delay marriage until they are twenty to twenty-five years old, their spouses average a year younger than themselves. As men grow older this difference increases, till in extreme old age, on the bridegroom's part, it is apt to be of the nature called summer and winter. The husbands of young women aged twenty and under average a little above twenty-five years, and the nequality of age diminishes thenceforward, till for women who have reached thirty the respective ages are equal. After thirty-five women, like men, marry those younger than themselves, the disproportion increasing with age, till at thirty-five it averages nine years. It is also found that the greatest number of marriages for men take place between the ages of twenty and twenty-five in England, between twenty-five and thirty in France, and between twenty-five and thirty-five in Italy and Belgium. In Hungary the number of individuals who marry is 72 in a thousand; in Denmark, 59; in France, 57, the city of Paris showing 53; in the Netherlands, 52; in Belgium, 43; Norway, 36. Second marriages occur among widowers three or four times as often as widows. In England there 60 marriages of widowers against 21 of widows; in Belgium there are 48 to 16; in France, 40 to 12.

The statistics are curious, and while they may differ slightly from time to time the change is not material. They point out in a very suggestive way the inclination in regard to marriages which govern the human family.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy, and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star

"The church in the world," says a recent writer, "is like a ship on the ocean. The ship is safe enough on the ocean, so long as the ocean is not in the ship. The church is safe enough in the world so long as the world is not in the church."

Ladies who Shave!

It will occassion you surprise to learn that many ladies make a practice of using the razor. Nevertheless, it is a literal fact, as many brothers and husbands can testify. Why should it be considered unwomanly to use a razor, especially to shave down troublesome corns. The only reason against the practice is because a new and a brighter era has dawned upon the sufferers from corns, for Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, by its prompt, certain and painless action, has done away with the necessity of resorting to the dangerous practice of using the razor. Try Putnam's and be satisfied that it is the best and surest corn cure. Beware of imitations.

A pretty fancy for a key rack is to cover a wooden rolling pin with plush, or any color preferred, adorn it with a spray of chenille and tinsel embroidery, and put into the roller a row of screw hooks. The roller is then hung on the wall, with ribbons attached to the handles.

The tobacco of Martinico was once the favorite with the smoking world, and when old Father Henipen descended the Mississippi about 1680 the Indians were much surprised to see an European with such an excellent sample of their native plant. But the smokers of the "Myrtle Navy" would give but a poor account of the once celebrated Martinico. Their favorite brand is as much superior to it as it was to the raw and uncured leaf which the Indians of that day smoked.

We seldom find persons whom we acknowledge to be possessed of good sense except those who agree with us in opinion. When such occasions do occur, our self-love always induces a decision in favor of their judgment.

With Satisfaction.

Polson's NERVILINE, the new and certain pain cure, is used with satisfaction in every instance. There is abundant reason for this, for it performs all that is claimed for it. Nerviline is a never-failing cure for cramps, pains in the side or back, lumbago, sore throat, chilblains, toothache. Nerviline is, in fact, a sure remedy for all pains, both internal and external. Try a 10 cent sample bottle. Large bottles only 25 cents, by all druggists and country dealers.

Men of quality never appear more amiable than when their dress is plain; their birth, rank, title, and its appendages are at best invidious; and as they do not need the assistance of dress, so, by their disclaiming the advantages of it, they make their superiority set more easy.

Important.

VALUABLE SECRET AND RECIPE
For a treatment for catarrh, hoarseness, bronchitis, sore throat, etc. Being both local and constitutional, this treatment always effects quick and permanent cures of even the worst cases. Catarrh causes half of the cases of consumption, and thus carries off yearly thousands of victims: it is folly to neglect it in the face of this fact. If you are a sufferer send for this treatment and be cured—surely—safely, and quickly. The medicines are cheap, and can be prepared by any person, or at any drug store. I am unable to sell it as a patent medicine, as it keeps only two months. The three recipes, with full and complete instructions for self treatment, sent for $1. Cure guaranteed or money refunded. FOR THE FARMER.

Sundry Suggestions.

The farmer must practice one of three methods to keep vegetable mold in his fields—use a great deal of straw and other vegetable refuse in his stock yards, haul many loads of swamp muck, or plow in clover once in three or four years. The last way is the cheapest. There are those who employ all three of these methods. Their farms are not for sale.

Good implement are indeed indispensable to success, and he who has provided them will not only have greater pleasure in his labors, but the profit which attends the judicious application of both time and labor.

It used to be the custom to take out to the weary harvester about 10 o'clock a covered tin pailful of cold water in which had been mixed molasses, a little vinegar, and a spoonful or two of ginger. I never heard of its doing any harm, but the thirsty men counted it very refreshing and satisfying. It certainly is far better than the heating fluid sometimes passed around in harvest fields.

The amount of pork to be expected from the corn fed next fall will depend upon the summer management of the pigs. Plenty of green food now will show its effects on the capacity of the pig when he is penned up for his corn diet.

Don't forget the turnip crop next month when the new seed will be ready. The English consider farming useless without turnips, and if our farmers will raise more roots they will find it to their advantage in winter, when nothing but dry food can be had.

Put a red mark—which means mutton—on the wrinkled sheep.

If a sow eats her pigs give her pork and turn her out on the ground.

Prof. Shelton has had some experience with pigs that were a cross of Berkshire and Essex, and he says they are the most restless and squeal the most of any pigs he ever had. While very partial to the thoroughbreds of either breed, he finds that crossing them produces stock with all the bad and few of the good qualities of their progenitors.

There is no better investment for farmers than in draft horses. They are always in demand at remunerative prices. They are as much a staple in the market as wheat, pork, or coffee, and can as quickly be turned into cash.

The Buckwheat Crop.

Buckwheat can be made a profitable crop, if proper care is given to it. This grain is worth at least seventy-five cents a bushel for feeding, if it is properly fed. It is best ground with corn, as fine as possible, and may be fed with cut hay or straw moistened with water. The seed may be sown early in July. We have found thick seeding the best. At least one bushel per acre should be used. It pays to prepare the ground as well for this crop as for any other, but it is especially useful for the purpose of breaking up an old meadow, and preparing it for reseeding. The sod will be well rotted, and the soil mellowed and made ready for a fall grain crop, if this is desired, to be followed by the grass seed the next summer. No other crop except peas, so well mellows the ground as buckweeat, and this is precisely the effect required in reseeding land. Besides this useful purpose, buckwheat is valuable for its grain. It will easily produce thirty or forty bushels per acre if well managed, and a bushel of it is worth two bushels of oats of the light sort usually grown, which is largely husk. The crop, too, is put in at times and harvested at times convenient for the farmer.

Feeding Chickens for Market.

Much profit is missed by feeding young chickens too long. The early broods should now be ready for feeding. It is better to have them already fed, for then the cockerels will be ready for sale, and the pullets will be so far forward as to be ready to begin laying early in the fall. But if the chickens have not been fully fed, the cockerels should be separated now and the old cocks turned in with them. At any rate the cocks should be separated from the hens at once, as they are a worry and a nuisance to the hens, and more eggs will be laid without them than with them. Probably no more hens will set but as the eggs will be good for two weeks after the separation, this may be made at once. The best of the young cockerels should be selected for use next year, and the rest should be forced for market and disposed of at once. They will bring more now than at any time later. An excellent feed for them is corn-meal, mixed with boiling hot sweet-skimmed milk. This gives the flesh a fine flavor and a white and clear appearance which adds to the market value. The feeding should not be continued over two weeks, and if the fowls have had all they will eat, they will be as fat as they can be made. Longer feeding will not add to their weight, as it is apt to produce disease.

Watering Horses.

Horses working in the field, require watering more than three times a day. When a horse plunges its head deep into the trough to drink, it is injuriously thirsty, and has been suffering. While the owner visits the water jug kept in the shade, about once every hour, he scarcely ever thinks of his team, laboring in the dust, and suffering from thirst. It is a good plan to carry a supply of water to the field for the horses on a light drag which is as easily taken, as to drive the horses or lead them to the field in harness alone, and it would be a grateful change to carry a bunch of fodder along, to give them a mouthful when they rest at times. Regularity in watering horses is a point which ought to be carefully observed, because they will worry, when thirsty, until relieved. Soft water for drinking purposes is very much preferable to hard water.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

Readers of this article are familiar with the fact that no less than five dastardly attempts have been made within the last five years to blow Paradise Hall into the middle of next week, and now the list is to be added to and the crowning attempt particularized.

Nearly all the members had gathered in the hall, and in five minutes more the triangle would have sounded for the meeting to open. Brother Gardner and Sir Isaac Walpole were earnestly discussing the subject of transmigration, and Giveadam Jones and Elder Toots were, ending a game of checkers. Pickles Smith Elder Penstock, Whalebone Howker and other members were matching pennies, and a general atmosphere of peace and contentment pervaded the room. An outsider would have said there was no sin there, and even the closest observer would have failed to detect the least evidence of an overshadowing sorrow.

Such was the situation when the huge building was suddenly shaken as if by an earthquake. Plaster showered down, window glass rattled and shivered, the bear traps swung wildly to and fro, and from brackets and shelves and niches busts of Cicero and relics from the pyramids came tumbling to the floor in wild confusion. For an instant every member of the club seemed paralyzed, but as soon as this feeling wore away there was a general yell of dismay and rush for the door. No attention was paid to rule IV. which reads: "In case this hall is to be vacated with extreme suddenness, owing to fire, flood or other calamity, the President shall have ten feet the start." One wild, dismayed, terror-stricken crowd rushed for the door, but not a man got out. Judge Cadaver and Stepback Johnsing, who had the lead, wedged, stuck fast, and the space was choked

It was perhaps a good thing, as it gave the members an opportunity to recover thier wits. In about two minutes heads, legs and arms began to untie and untangle, and the jam dissolved. All danger was past. While Paradise Hall had been damaged to the extent of $600, and while the club had suffered an appalling loss in sacred and valued relics, no lives had been sacrificed. The nearest approach to it was in the case of Judge Cadaver Some one stood on his neck for about three minutes and deliberately abstracted four razors from his left bootleg.

The fiendish attempt was, of course, at once investigated, but the results did not pan out very much. The only suspicious things discovered were a woman's cotton stocking with a hole in the heel, a pair of blue goggles, a recipe for making ginger ale without any ginger in it and a can, which had either contained peaches or dynamite. The villian, whoever he was, had escaped. As near as could be ascertained he entered the grocery below (best goods and lowest prices at this store), tied the can to the handle of a cheap broom, and holding the broom to the ceiling exactly under the spot usually occupied by Elder Cohorts Smith, had pulled the trigger and let 'er flicker. The idea was to destroy the entire club at one fell blow, but Providence happily frustrated the fiendish design. Most of the force of the explosion dodged off after a row of cans of preserved pumpkin on a high shelf, and this fact alone saved the hall above.

The best detective talent in the club was at once detailed to work the case. Giveadam Jones succeeded in connecting with a rejected candidate's sister-in-law, but it was soon thereafter ascertained that he never had a relative of that brand. Sir Codrington Duplex discovered that the goggles were exactly like a pair worn by a colored man who was drowned in Lake Erie three years ago, but could get no further. It was quite evident that he was on the right track to connect the drowned man with the explosion, but he required time to see his way clear. Samuel Shin laid great stress on the recipe. It had evidently been written out for some confectioner or druggist. His idea was to arrest all men in the city connected with the drug or confectionery business and hold each one in a separate cell until a full confession was made.

Waydown Beebe vigorously asserted that the real clue was in the can, and it was passed around for each member to smell of. It had once been labeled, but the label had been removed in the most careful manner. It might have contained peaches, but how easy for an employe of a canning establishment to slip a pound of dynamite in among the fruit, and for an outside confederate to purchase that very can! He would move that all the employees of all the canning factories in the United States be arrested without delay.

The Rev. Penstock, whose paper collar had been entirely ruined, and whose feelings were greatly harrowed up, believed in taking an underhand advantage. He would advertise in all the respectable newspapers as follows:

"Fifty Thousands Dollars.—The party who made the dastardly attempt to blow up Paradise Hall the other night will hear of something to his advantage by addressing the Secretary of the club. Please communicate at once or the legacy may pass into other hands."

He argued that the villain would instantly jump to the conclusion that he had a soft thing on hand, and would straightway fall into the snare.

More than a score of members advanced theories and secured clews, and some little confusion was created by Elder Toots rising up and asserting that the real criminal probably belonged to the club, and commanding him to at once stand up and make a full confession. No body took advantage of his invitation, and the President said:

"Gem'len, I hev faith dat de unhung villyian will ultimately be punished. It may not be for five—ten—fifty—or even a thousand years, but he'll git it in de eand. Meanwhile we can't be too thankful ober dis escape. While we has bin considerably damaged in a finanshul pint of view, an' while we mus' regard it as one of de miracles dat none of us war' killed outright, we am still on deck an' still left to pursue de routine of our labors in behalf of de gineral public. Giveadam Jones an' Waydown Beebe am 'pinted a committee to assess finanshul damages; Rev. Penstock an' Judge Cadaver will consult wid de perleec, an' Trustee Pullback an Sundown Smith will take possesshun of de can an' seek to diskiber its contents. Let us now adjourn.

IN THE HANDS OF THE REDS!

Mrs. Delaney's Thrilling Experience in the Camp of Big Bear.

Mrs. Delaney, one of Big Bear's prisoners, gives the following graphic account of her two months' captivity with the Indians:—

"My name is Theresa Delaney. I was married to my husband, John Delaney, on the 27th of July, 1882, at Aylmer, in the Province of Quebec, where my mother is now livng, and others of my relations. My husband resided, before coming to this country, at Gloucester, in the County of Carleton, Ont., where his father and mother are now living. My husband and I left home on the 1st of August, 1882, and went at once to Frog Lake, N. W. T., where my husband held the position of Indian Instructor. When he first came up here he had five bands of Indians to look after, until a year ago, when the Chippewans were taken from his surpervision and given John Fitzpatrick. A little later Mr. Fitzpatrick was transferred to another jurisdiction, and the Chippewans again came under my husband's care. He then had to look after the Chippewans, Oneepowhayaws, Missioo Koocewsis, and Puskeackeewins, and last year he had to ration Big Bear's tribe. He was so engaged when the outbreak took place. All these Indians were very peaceably inclined, and most friendly to us all. My husband was much respected and really beloved by all under his care, they SEEMED TO BE MOST ATTACHED TO HIM.

We were therefore greatly astonished at their action towards us, but after all it was only Big Bear's following that showed their enmity to us. They, too, pretended to be most friendly, and have often told us that but for my husband they would have starved. The first we knew of the uprising was on the 2nd of April at 5 o'clock in the morning. Two of Big Bear's tribe came into our house and told us our horses were stolen by the Halfbreeds, and at the same time it was they themselves who had stolen the horses and hidden them. Soon after the arrival of these two Indians, some thirty more—all armed, and most of them mounted—came to the house and forced their way in. They took all the arms and ammunition they could telling us they were short and wanted all. They required us to go with them, because they said they wished to save us from the Breeds. We were taken first to the Agent's (Mr. Quinn), and the Indians and ammunition, and had a long talk about all keeping together to keep back the Breeds when they came to take the provisions. I am satisfied now they were not sincere in this, and it was all to deceive us, for there were no Breeds to come. From Quinn's we were taken to the priests' house. The priests were named Father's Fafard and Marchand, who were both subsequently killed. We were not at all ill-treated so far, but there was every outward appearance of friendly feeling towards us. When we reached the priests' house mass was going on, the attendants being some Halfbreeds who had previously been taken prisoners by the Indians and detained with the priests, in the latters' residence. The Indians would not let the priests finish mass, and ordered them, with the Breeds and ourselves, back again to our own house. We were all left for about an hour, the Indians surrounding the house. The priests did not anticipate any danger, supposing that the Indians intended having a feast of the cattle that had been given them by Mr. Quinn, the agent. By this time it was about 9:30 in the morning. During our last detention at our house Big Bear came in and told my husband that he was frightened some of his young braves

DEMANDED HIS ARMS

INTENDED SHOOTING THE WHITES,

but that he, my husband, would be safe any way. At this time the only place they had plundered was Mr Dill's store, which they had gutted, but while waiting, the Indians told Mr. Cameron, also a prisoner in our house, that they wanted him to accompany them to open the Hudson Bay store, and Mr. Cameron did so, thus in my opinion saving his life. After opening the store the Indians sent him to their camp about a mile and a half away. After securing everything in the latter store, they came to our house, and ordered us all up to the Indian camp. We departed, my husband and I, as well as all others, only taking with us what we had on our backs, not supposing we would be long away. At this time nothing of consequence had been taken from our house. It was not very cold. Before we had gone far from our house the Indians

BEGAN TO SHOOT DOWN THE WHITES

Mr. Quinn was shot first, though I did not see him shot. All who were killed were behind my husband and me, but I heard several shots fired, and until otherwise informed supposed the firing was into the air. At this time, however, Mr. Dill was killed, also Mr. Williscroft, Mr. Gouin, Mr. Gilchrist, and Mr. Gowanlock, the latter of whom I saw fall. Mrs. Gowanlock was beside her husband when he fell, and as he dropped she leaned down over him, putting her face to his, and as two shots had been fired at her husband some supposed that she had fallen from the second shot. When I saw Mrs. Gowanlock fall I saw also some hideous object, an Indian got up in frightful costume take aim at my husband. Before I could speak my husband staggered away, but came back and said to me,

'I AM SHOT.'

He fell then, and I called the priest and told the latter what had happened. While he was praying with my husband the same hideous Indian fired again, and I thought his shot was meant for me, and I laid my head down upon my husband and waited it seemed an age, but it was for my poor husband, and he never spoke afterwards. Almost immediately another Indian run up and ordered me away. I wanted to stay, but he dragged me off, pulling me along by the arms through the brush and briar and through the creek where the water reached to my waist. I was put into an Indian tent and left there until nightfall, without anything offered me to eat, though I could not have eaten anyway. I was not allowed outside of the tent, and so had no opportunity of returning to my dead husband, and have never seen him since. At night time two Halfbreeds, John Pritchard and Adolphus Nolan, came and by giving horses to the Indians, the only two horses they had. These Breeds were prisoners also, so that I was virtually still a prisoner with Big Bear; but John Pritchard and all the Breeds were most kind, and I wish to state that I believe both Mrs. Gowanlock and I owe our escape from terrible treatment and at last massacre to John Pritchard and other friendly Breeds, prisoners like ourselves. From this time forward we were prisoners for two months all but a day. Every other day we were moved with the entire camp from one place to another. Big Bear's treatment of us would have been cruel in the extreme, but Pritchard saved us from the agony of forced marches through sloughs, brush, and rough land. At this time accompanying us were Mrs. Gowanlock, and among the Indians were Mr. and Mrs. Maclean and their family of five children, Mr. and Mrs. Mann and their family of three children, Mr. and Mrs. Quinney, John Fitzpatrick, and a Frenchman named Pierrie. I cannot say how any of these were treated, as I only saw them casually when on the march, but think they were not more ill-treated than I was myself, except that they had all except Mr. McLean and Mrs. Mann and the very small children. Occasionally an Indian more humane than the rest, would offer a ride to those who were required to walk; and sometimes John Pritchard would increase his already overladen load by taking some wearied one up. Pritchard and all the Breeds walked always, though by making us walk they could have ridden. His two little boys, aged 13 and 15, walked, though their feet became very sore at times, but they never complained, because they knew their walking enabled us to ride. They were noble little fellows. I was terribly stricken down. I seemed demented and could hardly tell one day what had happened the day before. I went on and on as in a fearful dream, but seemed conscious all the while of and my longing for it seemed alone to keep me up. I was afraid to ask after my husband, but the Breeds told me later on that they had buried the only four bodies they had been permitted to, my husband's, the two priests, and Mr. Gowanlock's under the church, but as the church was burnt the bodies were exposed, and then I asked to have them buried and the Breeds did as I requested. I should have told you that as I was being dragged away from my husband's body I saw the two priests drop, Father Forfard fell first and then Father Marchad. The former was administering to my husband when he fell, and the latter dropped immediately afterwards, as if shot by the same Indian from the second barrel of a gun. During our journey we had plenty to eat, cooking it ourselves. Our direction was backwards and forwards to avoid the police catching us. We were taken from Frog Lake towards Pitt, then back again north for about sixty miles. On a Thursday—a week before we escaped—we had a battle, that is,

TO WALK CONTINUALLY,

THE BATTLE WITH GENERAL STRANGE.

The women were all left in the woods, but the Indians were entrenched in a ravine, where they had dug rifle pits, as I was informed. This was the first intimation I had of our troops coming. We could plainly hear the firing. We could easily recognize the cannon. The fight began at 7 in the morning, and lasted until 10. We could not see any of it but could hear it. At ten, the police, finding they were not strong enough, retreated, and the Indians then fell back into the bush, where we were, and from thence back farther into the bush, all of us having to accompany them. The Breeds at this time were trying to escape, but could not do so, as they were watched too closely. From Thursday Big Bear's men retreated in different bands, and the prisoners got more or less separated, some going with one band some with another. Mrs Gowanlock and I were fortunate in yet being left with Pritchard, although we were all still with Big Bear. Mr. and Mrs. Maclean and Mr. and Mrs. Mann and their families were still with Big Bear. We kept on moving from Thursday until Monday, each day from early morning till late at night, but I had never to walk, nor had Mrs. Gowanlock. On Sunday night the Indians saw scouts, who they supposed belonged to the police, and they became greatly excited, and in the excitement and heavy fog of Monday we GOT AWAY.

Our party that escaped consisted of Mrs Gowanlock, myself, and five Halfbreed families, including John Pritchard and Andre Nowe, the latter of whom had taken the place of Adolphus Nolan, who, on the pretence of acting scout for the Indians, managed to escape to Prince Albert in the hope of getting help and assistance. We escaped in carts, and the first day did not go more than two or three miles. We went backwards and forwards through the bush, so as to avoid our trail being discovered, and the next day continued our escape, the men cutting roads through the bush so as to get along with all our outfit. We travelled on until Wednesday night, tending towards Battleford, and on that night we were overtaken by police scouts, who had got onto our trail and followed it. They thought our position was not a secure one, and they made us strike camp and go on to farther away, about two miles or thereabouts. Here we camped for the night, the scouts remaining with us all the time. On Thursday morning we moved on, reaching Pitt on Friday about ten in the morning, where we were met by Col. Straubenzie and Col. Williams. All came forward to meet us, and at once we were taken on board the North-West, where we remained all Saturday and until Sunday morning, when we were transferred to the Baroness and reached Battleford Sunday night, where we have been ever since comfortably quartered at the barracks with Mrs. Laurie. I hope to leave within a few days for my home, my intense longing for which has alone kept me up amid all my

TRIALS, HARDSHIPS, AND GREAT LOSSES.

I desire to express my thanks to Almighty God that he sent with us throughout, such a kind and considerate protector as John Pritchard, and the other Breeds who were with him. There is no telling what abuse we might have been subjected to but for their presence. Frequent attempts were made to reach us by the Indians, but the Halfbreeds watched night after night armed and ready to keep off any attempt to ill-treat us. Four different nights Indians approached our tents, but the determination of our protectors saved us Terrible as it all was, however, I am grateful that I came through unmolested, and am permitted to return to my home once again unharmed in body and mind."

Locking Up the Tower.

Few persons are aware of the strictness with which the Tower of London is guarded from foes without and from treachery within. The ceremony of shutting it up every night continues to be as solemn and as rigidly precautionary as if the French invasion were actually afoot.

Immediately after "tattoo" all strangers are expelled; and, the gates once closed, nothing short of such imperative necessity as fire or sudden, illness can procure their being re-opened till the appointed hour the next morning.

The ceremony of locking up is very ancient, curious, and stately. A few minutes before the clock strikes the hour of eleven—on Thursdays and Fridays twelve—the head warden (yeoman porter), clothed in a long red cloak, bearing in his hand a huge bunch of keys, and attended by a brother warden carrying a gigantic lantern, appears in front of the main guard house, and calls out in a loud voice:—

"Escort keys!"

At these words the sergeant of the guard, with five or six men, turns out, and follows him to the "Spur," an outer gate; each sentry challenging, as they pass the post—

"Who goes there?"

"Keys."

The gates being carefully locked and barred—the warden wearing as solemn an aspect and making as much noise as possible—the procession returns, the sentries exacting the same explanation, and receiving the same answer as before.

Arrived once more in front of the main guard-house, the sentry there gives a loud stamp with his foot, and the following conversation takes place between him and the approaching party:—

"Who goes there?"

"Keys."

"Whose keys"

"Queen Victoria's keys."

"Advance Queen Victoria's keys, and all's well."

The yeoman porter then exclaims—

"God bless Queen Victoria."

The main guard devoutly respond—

"Amen."

The officer on duty gives the word—

"Present arms!"

The firelocks rattle; the officer kisses the hilt of his sword; escort fall in among their companions; and the yeoman porter marches majestically across the parade alone, to deposit the keys in the lieutenant's lodgings.

The ceremony over, not only is all egress and ingress totally precluded, but even within the walls no one can stir without being furnished with the countersign; and anyone who, unhappily forgetful, ventures from his quarters unprovided with his talisman, is sure to be made the prey of the first sentinel whose post he crosses.

All of which is pleasantly absurd, and reminds us of the stately manner in which the crown was carried about when the White Tower was on fire.

MARKDALE JULY 2, 1885.

IRISH LAKE PIC-NIC.

The ninth annual pic-nic, under the auspices of the R. C. Churches of Priceville and Glenelg was held on Thursday last and was largely attended, about 900 having entered the gate. The above lake is situated five miles south of Markdale, and covers about 80 acres of land, 55 of which is on the property of Rev. Father Cassin. The lake has neither inlet or outlet. Trout has been put into the lake, but without favorable results. Father Cassin's residence (a fine brick) is situated at the West end of the lake in a beautiful location, and everything about the premises is very tasty and kept "in apple-pye order." This annual pic-nic is looked forward to with great interest, and though there is no great attraction, it is always attended by large crowds of people. A large dancing platform is erected and is greatly enjoyed by young and old. Parks Bros. string band was in attendance furnishing music which could not be surpassed perhaps in the province. Their string band richly deserves the popular name it has for music of a high order. The dinner was up to its usual high standard and was partaken of by some 700. The usual games were contested with the following result:

Foot Race, 100 yards—1st, D. McCormick; 2nd, R. Sproule.

Throwing Heavy Stone—1st, James Campbell; 2nd, M. Beaton.

Running Jump—1st, R. Sproule; 2nd, D. McDonald.

Standing Jump—1st, Jas. Tryan; 2nd, Mr. Clark.

The most exciting circumstance of the day was however the voting for a Gentleman's Travelling Dressing Case. W. J. McFarland and J. R. Trimble, both merchants of Markdale, were the chosen candidates. The case was handsome morocco bound, and contained hair brush and combs, tooth brushes, soap, soap tray and scent bottle, razor, pen-knife, nail pick and file, boot buttoner and mirror, all fine material. The canvass was spirited and excitement ran high, resulting in a victory for Mr. Trimble by some 500 votes.

Everything passed off orderly. The weather was somewhat threatening, but continued dry.

THE BRIGHT SIDE.

Look on the bright side. It is the right side. The times may be hard, but it will make them no easier to wear a gloomy and sad countenance. It is the sunshine and not the cloud that gives beauty to the flower. There is always before or around us that which should cheer and fill the heart with warmth and gladness. The sky is blue ten times where it is black once. You have troubles, it may be. So have others. None are free from them; and, perhaps it is as well that none should be. They give sinew and tone to life, fortitude and courage to man. That would be a dull sea, and the sailor would never acquire skill, where there is nothing to disturb its surface. It is the duty of everyone to extract all the happiness and enjoyment he can within and without him; and above all, he should look on the bright side. What, though things look a little dark? The lane will turn, and the night will end in broad day. In the long rein the great balance rights itself. What appears ill becomes well—that which appears wrong, right. Men are not always to hang down their heads or lips, or those who do, only show that they are departing from the paths of true common sense and right. There is more virtue in one sunbeam than in a whole nation of gloom. Therefore we repeat, look on the bright side. Cultivate all that is warm and genial—not the cold and repulsive, the dark and morose.

WALTER'S FALLS.

We had a pleasant drive, together with our esteemed townsman, W. A. Brown, Jeweller, on Monday last to Walter's Falls. The atmosphere was cool and bracing. The farmers along the way on the various divisions were doing statute labor, greatly improving the road; yet, for the time being, rendering them unpleasent to drive over. Walter's Falls is indeed a picturesque village and many of the buildings therein are neat, well painted and the surroundings made pleasant by shade trees, giving the place a pleasing and homelike aspect. Rev. Mr. Pepper kindly drove us out on the town line between Holland and Euphrasia, when about a quarter of a mile North we struck the corner of four townships viz, Holland, Euphrasia, Sydenham, and St. Vincent, then about another quarter mile north a beautiful landscape is in view; the ravine below the falls widens and the stream empties into Big Head river some four miles north. The view is from a very elevated position and the scenery one of the most superb we have yet witnessed. This road (the town line) strikes the Georgian Bay near Woodford, which is half way between Owen Sound and Meaford. On our return to the village we took in the sights of the more immediate vicinity and afterwards dined at Walter's Falls Hotel, which is now kept by our old friend Mr. T. Tuck. Mrs. T. still maintains her reputation for keeing a "good table," and between the apetizing effects of driving, and elevating influence of the landscape scenery, friend B. and myself enjoyed the good things provided by nine host correspondingly. We returned to Markdale well satisfied with our afternoon oguting.

DOMINION DAY AT ROCKLYN.

Dominion Day was celebrated at Rocklyn in right royal style. A large crowd was in attendance to witness the horse races and games and sports, while the concert at night was well patronized and gave general satisfaction. We will give full particulars with prizes awarded next week.

DOMINION DAY AT FLESHERTON.

A large gathering attended the Flesherton sports on Wednesday, The "bill of the play" was well carried out. The garden party at the residence of J. W. Armstrong, Esq., was largely attended, also the concert in the Presbyterian Church. Full particulars next week.

The thirteenth number of the Canadian Pictorial and Illustrated War News is just to hand. It contains the following illustrations: On Line of March, (illustrating the noble Red Men's idea of a fair division of labour); Sketches from Battleford and Vicinity, furnished by Mr. W. D. Smith; the Hospitals at Saskatoon, from a Sketch by Edmond E. King, M. D., Asst. Surgeon, Field Hospital Corps, Battleford; Portraits of interest; Camp of the Prince of Wales' Regiment at the Exhibition Grounds, from a Sketch by Mr. F. N. Boxer; the Bridge that the Queen's Own Rifles built over the Battle River, from a Sketch by Corporal Davis, Governor-General's Foot Guards. Also a fine two-page supplement, being a Map showing position of Troops at the Battle of Batoche, by two members of the Surveyors' Intelligent Corps; and Edward Hanlan's Narrow Escape from Drowning, in Toronto Bay, June 18th, 1885, from sketches by our Special Artist, based on personal information. The paper sell at 15 cents per copy, obtainable from local booksellers and from the office of publication.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsib'e for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

"Hibernia."

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

In two recent issues of the Flesherton Advance the editor of that paper drew the attention of his readers to my name, coupled with the above distinguishing title. It is not my line writing for the press, neither do an intelligent public care for reading, much less paying for a paper that has weekly recourse to publishing little fudge or what is purely personal matters between neighbors in the Advance. While seeking to make capital, is, by his strong personalities and ill bred intrusions, assuredly making many enemies, which is telling and will tell yet stronger against the subscription list of that paper. It is his custom to deal in rubbish that his contemporaries around here will not stoop to, and many of his subscribers say they are disgusted with the paper. This is probably the dullest season for news, and his apetite still voracious with no more editors to chew up, or to wrangle with no more horses to be driven with forks, no wood thieves around Flesherton to be published; in fact being completely stranded, he makes his way to Priceville to pick up some scraps. Why I should have been selected as a subject for his revenge, is only known to himself. I have long withstood his tempting me to take his paper, which may indeed be the cause of all his spleen against me, but I consider myself none the looser by adhering to my resolution not to become a subscriber, if it is because I have a little of the good old Irish brogue on my tongue, I admit it all, but I wonder at a man making light of the country that he ate his first potato in. I say contempt on the man that would report his native land; and as the Advance remarks, I did learn my trade there, where they make good mechanics, and I might add editors too, who are not incapable, who have never cast in their teeth, by other papers, that they are not able to write their own editorials. If indeed the Advance has nothing more to charge me with, I cheerfully assent; it is only the spirit of malice and ungentlemanly feeling that actuates him.

Among the Churches.

The first anniversary Services of the Presbyterian Church here was held in that church on Sabbath last. The Rev'd. Mr. McAlpine of Chatsworth occupied the pulpit morning and evening and delivered two very practical and interesting sermons.

The Rev. Mr. McDowell delivered his farewell sermon to a very large audience in the Methodist Church on Sabbath evening last.

The Baptist friends of this vicinity have secured the services of a pastor the summer months and held their first service in the Town Hall on Sabbath morning last.

The Mightly Meetings of the Gospel Army attract large crowds to the Methodist church every evening. A deep interest is taken in the meeting by christians of the different demonations.

The brick work is being rapidly pushed forward on Mr. Hurds new brick block.

Mr. Jas. Bleakleys new dwelling on Church St., is now fast approaching completion.

Our boys of the base ball club visited Singhampton on Tuesday last and played with the club of that village, but got rather badly beaten, they look brightly forward to the return match when they exeept to make it even with them.

Berkeley.

From a correspondent.

Our village is thriving, and a number of buildings are being erected. The hum of the saw-mill and ring of the blacksmith's hammer is our chief music.

What might have been a sad affair happened near here last week. A neighbor was running off lime for plastering, and after running the full of the vat he turned about to put on his vest and lost his balance, falling into the vat of fresh lime liquid on his back, but was rescued by one who was near. He has the putty coat yet to get.

Thos. Lackey lost a fine mare recently. She got her leg broken by a kick from her mate. The living one is now raising her deceased mate's colt together with her own.

Mr. James Wright sends to Markdale cheese factory from 115 to 130 lbs. of milk per day from four cows. Who can beat this?

W. J. Lackey's mill is doing good work. He is selling good hemlock lumber for $5.50 per thousand feet.

(From our correspondent.)

BARN RAISING.—Mr. John Holley raised his frame barn last week, which was attended with the usual noise seasoned with profanity, and as usual one side came out ahead.

LECTURE.—Dev. D. C. McDowell lectured in the Wesley Church, his subject was "What a Canadian saw in Europe." Those who were absent missed a treat.

Our Annual S S. Pic-nic will be held on the 7th July.

FAREWELL.—Rev. Mr. McDowell preached his farewell sermon here last Sunday.

Walters Falls.

From our own Correspondent.

Leafy June, fresh, fragrant, balmy, most delightful month of all the year. O, that thou could'st stay with us six months instead of one, but as well might we wish for the continuance of youth, which, alas, departs all too soon and leaves us on the bleak shore, bereft of the capacity for enjoyment that alone makes life valuable.

"Some in life's winter may toil to discover
Means of procuring a weary delay;
I'd be a butterfly, living a rover,
Dying when fair things are fading away."

Progress is still the motto here. Mr. John Walters has put up an addition to his barn of greater dimensions than the original building.

The fine new blacksmith shop belonging to Dr. McLellan is finished and in full blast, and is run by D. & W. Ross, brothers-in-law to the Doctor, so that there are now three smiddies in Walter's Falls, proving conclusively that our village is well patronized by the farming community.

It is now two weeks since Mr. Jas. Mower led to the hymeneal altar Miss Flora Freeman, eldest daughter of Mr. Freeman, miller, and immediately after, the happy couple left for Newmarket; and last week Mr. James Wickham and Miss D. Patton, all of this place, were also joined in the holy bonds of wedlock.

The news of Gladstone's defeat did not cause much agitation here. An individual named Stitt was the only one that seemed to be celebrating the triumph of the Tories, but who at last became so excited that he had to be ducked in the mill pond and then placed in the lockup, these means being thought necessary to try to cool the ardour of his enthusiasm.

Money market stringent here. Demand far in excess of supply.

HEADACHE.

Headache is one of those distressing complaints that depends upon nervous irritation, bad circulation, or a disordered state of the stomach, liver, bowels, etc. The editor of Canada Presbyterian was cured after years of suffering with headache, and now testifies to the virtue of Burdock Blood Bitters.

Owen Sound.

(From an occasional correspondent.)

Weather very changeable. Saturday was very warm and Sunday was very cold, so much that overcoats were called into requisition.

Steamer Athabasca left on time with large number passengers and large cargo of freight.

Steamer Alberta arrived on time with 50 first, 30 second-class passengers, 20,000 bush. wheat, 6 cars flour, 1 car sack wheat, 3 cars linseed oil, 9 tons mdse.

The excursion which will leave here for Collingwood on the 1st July by steamer Campana, will be a success.

A yardman in C. P. R. yards here lost one of his fingers while coupling cars Saturday night last.

The Catholic church pic-nic will be held here on the 1st July. Weather permitting a grand day's sport is expected.

Manitoba Crops.

ALL REPORTED IN EXCELLENT CONDITION.

WINNIPEG, June 21.—The Manitoba Department of Agriculture has issued the first bulletin of the season, based upon the return of 500 correspondents. The weather during the seeding was exceedingly favorable, the season being two weeks earlier than the average. Summer following was largely increased. The total land ploughed was 519,735 acree as compared with 444,915 in 1884. Fall wheat is not grown, the spring wheat acreage being 357,013 as compared with 307,020 in 1884. Oats acreage 151,368 compared with 172,545 in 1884. Both crops are reported in the most favorable condition from all portions of the Province. Ample rain fell during the seeding to give the grain a good start and kept up a continous growth. Every indication is for an early harvest. The total product of wheat is expected to reach 7,179,531 bushels, leaving a surplus of 5,675,000 bushels for export. Other crops are all reported in a satisfactory condition. Hay promises an abundant yield. Live stock came through the winter in fair condition and free of disease. In every branch of farming the prospects are better than any previous year in the history of the Province. The construction of branch railways during the summer will give additional impetus to farming operations, and much additional land is being broken in consequence.

The Value of a Wife.

"You see," he was explaining, in answer to the inquiry of what the prospects in Jersey were, "our folks are about discouraged."

"What's the trouble?"

"Cholera."

"Why, the cholera hasn't reached us yet."

"I know, but everybody's talking. We can't raise cucumbers on account of the scare, and we dasn't go into onions on account of the bad weather. We shall shell out a few 'taters, a little corn, and more or less huckleberries, but I tell you, stranger, if my wife didn't earn a dollar a day at dressmaking I'd be ready to give up the battle."

She Made Him Take Back His Bad Dime.

"Say, dear," said an Evansville wife to her husband, "that dime you gave me this morning for milk was no good."

"Didn't give you no bad dime," growled Jones.

"Yes you did, and I want you to take it back."

"I won't."

"Well you just will now; you see if you don't."

At noon Mrs. Jones was all smiles, and waited on her husband so nicely that he felt like telling her that he had given her the dime and was sorry, and would give her another, but concluded he would wait till evening. As she handed him a nice piece of pie, she remarked, "William, you'll have to eat this in a hurry; it's nearly time to go to the office." William bolted it down, but all of a sudden gagged, and then swallowed something as if it hurt him.

"Mary Jane," said he, "I jist swallowed something that didn't feel right. What do you suppose could have got into that pie?"

"How did it feel, William?"

"Oh, sorter hard and round."

"Well, I guess it was that dime. You said I couldn't make you take it back, but I guess you've got it now. You may keep it."

ROBBING TRAVELLERS.

How a Band of Excursionists Were Cleaned Out of Their Valuables.

"One of the excursionists, a feller from Maine, who wore glasses, got up on top with me after a while, and wanted to know if there were ever any robberies on this road.

" 'Lord bless you, no,' says I kinder innocent. Them robbers is all ten mile north or twenty mile south of here on the other roads. They don't never dare come on the Madera road, because we won't have it. About fifty years ago they tried it here, and the boss put 200 white men and Injuns on the trail, and chased them for more'n three months picking off a man every once in a while, until all were laid out. Then the old man cut off their ears and nailed them on the dashboards, and there they stayed for years and years. There was one on this here coach when I took it, but I got tired of answering questions about it, it had been so long since we had a robbery, and so I threw it away. There's no danger here.'

"I was having a good deal of fun with the party, and had about made up my mind that the agents had not got wind of us when the Maine man says, after a long pause:

" 'What would you do if robbers was to come at you?'

" 'Do? I'd just give these here hosses this here gad, and I'd put the reins in my teeth and I'd let him have it out of this here gun. Don't you worry about robbers," says I.

"I hadn't any more'n got the words out of my mouth when a big scarecrow jumped out in the road with a rifle and yells: 'All hands up!' I dropped the lines and raised my hands, and my Maine friend did likewise. His teeth was a-rattling, and I see that I didn't have to make no apologies to him.

"The feller in front kept his place, with me a-looking at him, and another one came alongside, opened the door, and told the passengers to get out, which they did in good order. Then he stood them up in a row, and yelling to his partner, he said:

" 'Have you got 'em all covered?'

" 'Every one,' said the other.

" 'Now, then, ladies and gentlemen,' said the operator, 'no one will be hurt unless some one tries to hurt us. I will have to ask you to keep your hands up except when I come to you, and then you are to reach down in your pockets and pass out your money and watches. The first one who drops a hand until I tell him to dies.'

"It was about as pretty a string of victims as I ever see in my life. They all wore linen dusters and most of the ladies had blue veils. The agent began with his back to his partner, and went along the line in pretty good shape. They all shelled out without making any trouble until the robber came to a Massachusetts man who only handed out a handful of nickels, dimes and quarters. The agent put these in his pocket, took the feller by the ear with one hand, rammed his revolver into the other ear with the other. 'I'm a greenbacker,' says he, 'and I want 'em.' He got 'em, too. The old feller had them in a spectacle case in his inside vest pocket. After that the agent took the earrings and breast pins from the ladies. One of them was an elderly party with a sharp beak and shiny false teeth, and as he unclasped the earrings he said something of a complimentary nature to her, to which she responded with her lips set tight like a clam:

" 'You're a brute."

" 'I know it ma'am, he said. 'I'll have to trouble you for that linen duster you're wearing, and for those sleeve buttons and finger rings. It's long since I was called a brute, and I want something to remember you by.'

"He got pretty much every thing she had. By this time my friend and I was getting awful tired holding up our hands, and we began to be anxious for our turn to come. The Maine man had an idea that he might escape, but he soon found out that he was wanted. The agent, at the head of the line, shouted to us:

" 'Come down, you chaps up there, and be lively now.'

"We got right down and it didn't take more'n a minute to go through us. I didn't have nothing of course, and I wouldn't have had any trouble at all about the matter if one of the robbers hadn't called me by name just as the passengers were filing into the stage again. How he got my name is more'n I can tell, but after they had ordered us on and I had driven a few miles down the road the fellers inside stopped me and said they wanted to hold an indignation meeting.

" 'Not an indignate," says I severely. 'You're going to the Yosemite, and can't hold no meetings until you get there.'

"I didn't know but I would have to hold the crowd up myself. The ladies were the worst. They accused me of leading them into the trap and said they knew the agents was friends of mine, because they called me by name. After I had driven on a ways and talked with them a little, they got cooled off, and we got to Yosemite all right."

The robbery was the boldest and most successful that has been perpetrated in this vicinity in a long time, and it is thought to be the work of professionals. It is expected to have an injurious effect upon travel during the season just now opening.

"My neighbor tied a knot in my horse's tail, and I want ter hab de law on him," said Si Jackson, an Onion Creek darkey, to Lawyer Gouge. "Hand over five dollars," said the lawyer. Si did so cheerfully. Having got the money the lawyer said calmly, putting it in his pocket: "My advice to you, my colored friend, is now to go and untie that knot in your horse's tail."

INSECT-EATING MEN.

Whole Nations who Greedily Devour and Live upon Creeping Insects.

The insect eaters here referred to are not occasional persons of depraved tastes, but whole nations, who consume insects on so large a scale as to raise them to a regular rate. Locusts are an article of food in parts of Africa, Arabia and Persia of such importance that the price of provisions is influenced by the quantity of the dried insects in hand. The Tuafegs of Africa, esteem them highly, and a single individual will eat as many as three hundred of them—raw, roasted or stewed—at a meal. Cakes of crushed locusts are a delicacy. Boiled locusts are appreciated in Burmah. Termites and ants are the next most important food insect. The egg-laden bodies of the females of altha cephalotes, are industriously collected by Indians in South America, and the taste of their roasted and salted bodies has been appreciated even by the European. The African negroes can hardly eat enough of termites, which are eaten fried at the Cape, and in other regions are made into cakes. Roasted termites taste something like marrow or sweet cream. The 17 year locusts have been eaten in North America and are said to have been used in soap-making. Cakes are made in Mexico with the eggs of two kinds of water bugs. A cake made in Fezzan of insect eggs is described as having the taste of caviare. The Romans were fond of a larvæ which they called cossus. A favorite diah is prepared in Jamaica from the larvæ of a beetle that lives in the trunks of palm-trees. Another wood insect is preserved in sugar by the Chinese and Malays, and a liquor is made with the addition of some water from a beetle in Mexico. Caterpillars are eaten in Australia and at the Cape, at the risk of woeful pains in the stomach, and even spiders, abhorred by every other race are eaten by the Hottentots of New Caledcnia, with the same liability. Worms are accepted as food by very few people. A kind of grub is collected and eaten in Brazil, a nereid worm in Samoa, and a reed-worm by the Amos of Japan. The Australians around Port Adelaide are said to have lived exclusively on worms and moluska, while they abhored beef. Some persons in Naples eat a tape-worm, parasite of the crab, fried in oil, and call it by the name of macaroni piatti. Sea-urchins form a quite important item of the cookery of some lands, and are popular in some of the Mediterranean districts of Europe. Vestiges of them are found among the remains of feasts of Pompeii, and 100,000 dozen of them are still sold in the markets of Marseilles every year. They, with holothurias, form important items in the food consumption of China and Japan where the people rarely see our butcher's meat. The holuthuria fishery is carried on extensively in Japan from April to August. The "catch" is consumed fresh on the spot, or is prepared and packed for the Chinese market. Even the Medusa, which no other animal, so far as is known, will eat, is sought for by the Chinese, and used as a dried and salted meat.

Cannibal Snake

Snakes are commonly in such ill-repute that they scarcely need anything added to their bad reputation. But it may not be generally known that snakes are cannibal. Some years ago in a London Zoological Garden, two large pythons were kept in a cage together. One morning it was discovered that the largest python, nine feet long, had swallowed his living companion of eight feet, both being apparently in the same state of health. For about a yard below the head this snake was distended to treble his usual size, having doubled up his victim in the gullet. The naturalist, Buckland, thus discribes a snake's cannibal feat, of which he was a witness:

I went one day to the Zoological Gardens when I knew there would be few visitors about, and the animals left to themselves would relapse more into their natural state.

I stopped before one of the cages in the snake-house, which contained many harmless snakes, of the common English kind, and about an equal number of the French common snakes.

One of the English snakes, I found, was murdering a French snake, or at least trying so to do; for in the centre of the cage there he lay, with his body enormously distended, and half another snake down his throat.

I watched them. Every now and then the English snake gave a gulp, and down went a bit more of his living dinner. The dinner did not seem to relish the dark hole he had got into, for at the same time he generally gave a wriggle and a twist, as though anxious to escape—a foolish movement, for it only helped his downward passage.

This went on for some minutes, the Frenchman gradually disappearing inside the Englishman till at last more than half was swallowed, and the swallower became enormously dilated.

I then called the keeper, who took the Englishman by the tail and gave him two or three good shakings, hitting him, at the same time, gently against the wall, as if to loosen the contents of his abdomen.

The French snake, finding deliverance was at hand, began to coil about, till at last out he fell upon the floor, again restored to daylight. He seemed rather stupid, but otherwise none the worse of his trip down what the children call "the dark lane" of his English brother-snake.

The cannibal, disappointed in his wicked deeds, when put in a cage, glided about with head erect, hissing, and putting out his tongue, apparently in a great rage at having been interfered with. The French snake slunk under some carpet that was in the cage.

The projected bridge over the Tiber is to be commenced immediately. It will span the river at the point known as the Orso, where the ancient inn of that name is still standing. It was at this house that Montaigne loged when he first came to Rome.

Garibaldi's widow announces through the medium of the Italia that she will shortly publish two manuscripts of her husband, entitled "Mille" and "Manlio." Garibaldi's memoirs, which are in the hands of his son, Menotti, will be published later on.

The German Government has discharged all women who were employed in its postal, telegraph, and railway service as clerks and in other capacities. As during the last twenty years they nearly monopolised such service in some towns, much suffering has ensued among the discharged. The motive alleged is that women are unfit for such public service.

Dr. Laborde reports some recent observations upon the heads of decapitated persons. He found the reflex action of the pupil to exist for twenty-eight minutes after the neck was fully severed, and even after this time had elasped a slight excitation of the membranous lining of the skull produced contractions of the eyelids and some of the muscles of the jaw.

Rats and mice were long the scourge of the Hawaiian farmers, but they have been successfully dealt with by the introduction of the mongoose. Thirty-six pairs of this animal were imported from Jamaica two years ago into the district of Hilo, with the result of instantly clearing 4,000 acres of cane of this nuisance. One planter estimates his saving from this cause last year at $50,000.

The Queen's Asiatic army numbers three distinct classes of troops, viz, European, Indian, and those belonging to the native Princes, the latter having frequently rendered efficient aid. Lord Ripon, when Governor-General, reported in favor of unity in the organization and command of the three classes, the policy of trusting to the honor and loyalty of the native soldiers and Princes having been found much the safest.

Mr Young, the coiffeur of the Princess of Wales, begins dressing hair at 7 o'clock on the morning of a drawing room day So great is the anxiety to receive his services that he is engaged not days, but weeks, beforehand. Woe be to the lady who comes first on his list. She must be in a state of worry the whole of the morning, lest a careless movement should disarrange the coiffure before the hour approaches for displaying it to the world.

Although a state of war exists between France and Madagascar the Malagasy Government have in no repect relaxed their efforts in the cause of education. Two Malagasy youths of considerable promise, who have been educated in London during the last four years, will return to their own country in a few days in order to occupy a position as teachers in the public schools. Since the war there has been no interruption of educational work in Madagascar.

The Philadelphia Medical and Surgical Reporter gives a report from San Francisco of the death of Dr. Charles Pierce from the morphine habit. He and his wife had been living for months in a lodging house, spending most of their money for the drug to which both were slaves. They were discovered half dead, after being four days without food. They once held high social positions in Baltimore, where the wife acquired the habit while nursing her husband. She will recover.

Those dreadful literary iconoclasts are at it again. They have now turned their guns on Milton, and a reverend gentleman named Edmunson is endeavoring to rob the author of "Paradise Lost" of all the honor which belongs to originality of conception. He has published a work to prove that Milton was largely indebted in the compositen of his great poem to various poems of a Dutch rhymster of the same period, one Joost Van den Vondel, and that Samson Agonisteo was inspired by a drama by Vondel on the same subject.

Business has not for many years been so dull in Austria as it is now. At the late annual market of Brunn the prices of cotton cloth and leather showed a great fall on the averages of previous years. The war alarms stopping purchases from Russia and the Danubian principalities may have had something to do with this. But the general stagnation in Austrian commerce cannot be explained wholly by this cause, for it existed throughout the past year, as is shown in the diminished receipts of all the railway lines and of the Danube Steamboat Company.

The famous Panama hats are all made in Guayaquil, Ecuador, and get their name because Panama merchants formerly controlled the trade. They are made of the pita fibre, a sort of palm, and are braided under water by native women of strands often twelve and fifteen feet long, and fine ones are very expensive. It often takes two or three weeks to braid a single hat, which sells for five or six dollars, and lasts forever. A traveller speaks of one made of a single straw or fibre, as fine as thread and soft as silk. The woman who made it was engaged four months in the work, and it was valued at $250.

During the month of May all the altars of the Virgin in the Roman Catholic churches of Paris were gay with flowers. The floor spaces in front of those in the more fashionable shrines were literally covered with floral wreaths and bouquets in many cases with cards attached to them on which the fair devotee who deposited it had written some special request for the Virgin's intercession. At a church much frequented by rich worshippers conspicuous among other wreaths was one of orange blossoms with a card with the following inscription: "O, blessed mother of God, pray for me this month and grant it may be mine to wear such a wreath as this, standing beside the husband of my choice, before the year is ended."

The Madrid correspondent of the Petit Marseillais relates a striking instance of the intensity of family quarrels in Spain. About a year ago a gypsy named Moralis was assassinated at Zerza, in the province of Caceres, by one of his comrades named Silra. The latter was in due course tried and sentenced to death, but his execution did not satisfy the vengeance of the victim's family. There had been ill feeling between the families for three years, but there had been no open quarrel until the murder of Moralis. Soon after the execution of the murderer, which took place last month, the two families met on their return from a fair near the town of Caceres. They had their mules and cattle with them. There were about fifty on each side, including women and children. A regular pitched battle ensued, revolvers, knives, and sticks being freely used by the men, while the women employed their nails with considerable effect, and the children threw stones indiscriminately. The result of the struggle was that the heads of the two families were both killed, two of the women, and several of the children. There were ten or twelve wounded, and the bodies of the dead were horribly mutilated. If the mounted police had not interrupted the fight there would have been many more lives lost. Several of the mules were killed, and the baggage of the two families was strewn about in such disorder that the road for nearly half a mile looked as if a large army had beaten a retreat along it.

Mosquitoes and Cholera.

I do not know that there is any connection between mosquitoes and cholera, but just now a good many persons are trying to establish one. The popular mind is still full of apprehensions as to a visitation of cholera this summer, and lately there has been an uncommon outbreak of mosquitoes in some parts. The latter pests have appeared in swarms in several neighborhoods, and proved a positive and most provoking nuisance, and the people who delight in putting this and that together say it is a sure sign that cholera will be here by and by. My own notion is that the inference is the rankest nonsense, but I never found that it was much use reasoning with the kind of people just mentioned. As for the possibilities of cholera coming over here, of course they exist, but they do not cause much uneasiness either among physicians or in the health department. The general opinion is that even if cholera actually shows itself it won't get a chance to make any headway. Nevertheless, a single case would probably cause a good deal of a scare.

Where the Scorpion Gets His Poison.

When he strikes you with the end of his tail, like a wasp, he exudes a venomous liquid, and a man might better hold a red-hot iron in his hand than to get a tenth part of a drop of this liquid into his blood. It is not necessarily fatal, particularly in the Bahamas; but it condenses the heat of forty furnaces. In some parts of South America scorpion bites are frequently fatal, but I have not heard of any one having been killed by them in Nassau. This is easily accounted for. The scorpion likes to feed on decayed wood. In South America, where dye-woods and other poisonous woods abound, the scorpion feeds upon them, and thus work into themselves a good supply of outside poison, which, taken together with his naturally poisonous liquid, does its work for whoever is unfortunate enough to be stung. But, in Nassau, such poisonous woods are few, and the scorpions have to fatten themselves respectably on pine, cedar and mahogany.

An Italian Murder.

A terrible crime was committed a few days ago at the city of Monte Rotondo only eighteen kilometres distant by rail from Rome. A family of butchers having a grudge against a young man, Menicoccio Poli, planned his death. He was paying attentions to one of the girls of the family, and so, with the help of the girl, the parents and other relatives—seven in all—coaxed him into a cellar, where they attacked him with axes. They left him half dying, and hooked by his chin on one of the hooks where they were accustomed to hang their slaughtered cattle. The next day, finding him yet alive, they tied his hands and feet, and then cut his throat. After they had cut his body into small pieces, as they would the body of an animal, and carried him into the woods with a donkey and baskets. The head having been accidentally found in the woods by a shepherd boy, the police soon tracked the murderers. They have all confessed the crime. The citizens of Monte Rotondo would have lynched them all had not the police sent a strong body of soldiers to protect them. They were taken to Rome, and are now in the Carceri Nuove. The murderers belong to the Neapolitan provinces, where they made money by helping and hiding brigands They moved to Monte Rotondo in order to escape punishment.

Lady Gordon is still looking away ross the waving grass and drooping ses, self-absorbed and dreamy still, or e must have noted the startled look and id blush with which her granddaughter ard these words; fearing her confusion ght be noticed, the latter says quick-

"My mother and aunt Rosamond were ins, were they not?'

"No, certainly not, child; are you eaming?" Lady Gordon asks, a little ndalised by the ignorance of the family tory thus displayed. "Your mother s five years older than Rosamond; nstace came between them."

"Oh, so he did!" Florence says care- ly "Aunt Rosamond was quite ung when mother was married, then?"

"She was eighteen, and prettier than y girl I ever saw. I can see her still she looked on her sister's wedding- y, with her golden hair, her violet eyes, d——"

"She was your favorite, then, as Cres- da is now," Miss Carmichael interrupts dously.

"She was every one's favorite, my dear; e was so gentle and loving and good; t"—Lady Gordon's lip quivers—"my or and her virtues served her but lit- ; for when she disobeyed me I cast off, and never saw her again alive."

"What was her sin?" Florence asks th forced carelessness; for conscience drawing a pretty parallel between her n story and that of her unknown aunt.

"She 'fell in love,' as she calledit, with music teacher—a young man named igh—a gentleman by birth, as it turned , but of course no match for her. He d the impudence to ask me for her nd—I have never forgiven him, Flor- e?" the old lady cries, her eyes ightening and flashing over the angry renthesis; "and, when I scornfully missed him, he persuaded my unfor- nate misguided child to choose between and—she chose——"

"And then?"

"Then I never saw her again, I harden- my heart against her. I sent back her ters unopened, until she grew tired of ding them. Even the one I did read, ich told me she was widowed, and left the wide world with a baby girl, did soften my inexorable purpose. Had pleaded abject poverty, asked money m me, I should have given it; but she not. As she spoke of boarding in a ool, of providing for her baby, I con- ded that she had funds at her disposal, d so I let that last chance of escaping lfelong remorse escape me too."

"But did neither my mother nor uncle stace plead for their outcast sister?" rence asks, with an indignation born ecret sympathy with the rebellious amond.

"Your mother was far away and in y delicate health, and Eustace was nder and even more bitterly indignant n I. For sixteen years we never men- ned Rosamond's name, and when we at last break that proud silence she a name only—remorse and forgive- s were alike in vain. Oh, I was ter- y punished," the proud old woman s with sudden passion; "for I lost h my children at once! Eustace was nded in the lungs in a skirmish with he hill tribe in India—a mortal wound; he came home to die. We brought here, hoping to the last that his nat- air might cure him; but it was not be, and he knew it, and took the slow th as he met the swift bullet—with gallant grace of a soldier. But to- rds the last he grew very weak, and, he delirium that came to him at night, ld call pitifully for Rosamond—"baby e," as he had been wont to call her en a child. At last he called me to , and whispered so faintly that I could dly hear the words—

"'Mother, forgive Rosamond and little esida, your namesake, you know, and me see her before I die.'

"With a breaking heart I obeyed him, his moments were numbered, and by ng to town I might lose his last look l word; but even that were better than sing his last prayer. So I went— m from the death-bed of one child to k upon the grave of another; for samond had been dead for fourteen rs!"

She pauses, turning her head abruptly ay; and Florence says softly—"Poor ndmamma, it was dreadful for you; t at least uncle Eustace could have n Cressida."

A sudden shiver runs through Lady rdon's frame, and her pale lips moves ntly as she continues—

"When I got back to Gordon Cross my pain and punishment were both complete; your uncle Eustace was dead!"

Then even Florence Carmichael, who is not a particularly sensitive young lady, questions her no more; she would like much to pursue her inquiries, for there is an aggravating discrepancy between facts as here told and facts as she knows them, that she longs to see accounted for.

"Cressida was certainly not with her when she fetched me from the convent at Paris two years ago," muses Miss Florence; "and uncle Eustace was as certainly dead. There's a year wrong somewhere, and I cannot ask her any more questions; she looks such a wretched old ghost whenever she dives into that much troubled past of hers. I know, I'll ask Frank—Cressida and he are always knocking their heads together—I dare say she has told him her whole history!"

Just as Miss Carmichael reaches this stage in her meditations, Lady Gordon raises her head and says with restored calmness—

"Where is Cressida, I wonder? I have not seen her for some time."

"Off with Frank, of course," the girl answers, with a blithe little laugh. "They have gone for a stroll, and, if they don't get lost like babes in the wood, will be back in time for tea. Cressida invited me to accompany them, but Frank looked not at all pleased at the idea; so, as the sun was hot, and I never did care for the picking of daisies, I obligingly stayed behind. Do you know, grandmother——"

"Do I know what, child?'

"That hearts have been lost and won since we came to Gordon Cross; that Miss Cressida Leigh may become Mrs. Francis Carmichael whenever she chooses to speak the important word? Grandmama, what is it?"

She may well ask the question, for Lady Gordon, the tranquil, self-possessed old lady, whose movements as a rule are regulated by a kind of courtly clockwork, so leisurely, elegant, and easy are they, has risen now with startling abruptness, and pushed her pretty work-table so violently aside that it has fallen to the ground, and all its silver and satin fittings are rolling down the verandah steps and out over the lawn faster than the kneeling Florence can pursue them.

"What was it startled you the girl asks, looking up curiously from her task. "Not my foolish joke, surely!'

"It was foolish, very foolish!" Lady Gordon repeats severely, though there comes something of relief into her look. "Do not let me hear you indulge in such ill-bred jesting again!"

Florence stares for a moment, as though she could hardly believe her ears. Then she colours, tosses her saucy head, and walks away highly offended by the rebuke.

"Cross, unreasonable old thing!" she grumbles, as she mounts the broad stairs and makes her way to her own pretty room. "I don't wonder poor aunt Rosamond ran away; any girl of spirit would, when she found the string drawn so tightly; I do not count Cressida; she's too meek and mournful for me, though Frank seems to find that sort of thing attractive. What a rage she was in at thought of their flirting even! Well—we shall see to what we shall see; I suppose she thinks she is to arrange every one's wedding, and love is to go for nothing at all. Ah!"

There is a significant commentary on Miss Carmichael's words and the vanity of earthly wishes, as exemplified by those with which she credits her grandmother, in the haste with which she unlocks a pretty little inlaid cabinet and draws from it a photograph and letter.

The picture she looks at with a sort of rapture, kisses vehemently, and replaces in the box; the letter she reads with heightened colour and brilliantly sparkling eyes.

"My most beautiful Florence," it runs, —"They think to separate us but their efforts are and always will be vain, while you are true to your generous promise and and to the man who so madly loves you. I have followed you to England, my queen, have mocked at all the watery waste they place between us, and am here again at your feet. Do you mock for my sake at the tyranny of the brother so insolent to the man who needs must worship you while he lives, and evade the grandmother who has forgotten love and youth, and steal to the park-gate to meet and bless once more with a kind word and look—your lover——"

Foolish, reckless Florence presses her red lips on the closing words, then sets them in the firmness of a stern resolve.

"I will meet him," she says, with sparkling eyes and wildly-throbbing heart —"my king, my handsome, noble lover! Let them despise him and condemn me if they will—I cannot help that—I must be true to him and myself. They will learn perhaps, as grandmother did, how hard and cruel they have been, when it is too late."

Poor Lady Gordon; if, in telling the painful story of Rosamond Leigh's marriage, she has hoped to warn her grandchild from the rock of disobedience on which her daughter had been so hopelessly wrecked, she will be sadly deceived, for Florence reads the allegory it contains in quite a different fashion! The warning is to hard-hearted and obdurate parents, she thinks, not to rash and headstrong lovers.

So, fortified rather than shaken in her resolution, she steals out to meet the man who has dazzled her young eyes, and made her fancy that she loves him, the man of whom she knows nothing but that his face is very handsome and his voice dangerously soft and sweet.

CHAPTER VIII.

"Frank, dear, dear Frank, do not look at me so! Will you not believe that I never dreamed of this?'

There is no immediate answer to Cressida's pitifully earnest appeal. The girl stands, tall and shadowy in her sweeping white dress, just as she has risen from the piano, against which her companion still leans.

He is a tall, dark-haired, frank-faced young man, by no means handsome, but very pleasant to look upon in a general way, though now his bronzed face looks a little hard and grim.

She is very pale, the soft white dress that hangs in statuesque folds around the slender figure is not more colourless than the lovely grieved face; but Cressida has more than fulfilled the promise of her girlhood, and even in her present distress and dismay she is undeniably beautiful.

The two years that have elapsed since that terrible night in Paris, when she passed literally through the jaws of death into a new and a happier life than she had ever known, have ripened and perfected that which was fair enough before; and Miss Leigh—or Miss Leigh-Gordon, as her grandmother prefers that she should be called—is the acknowledged beauty of the country-side.

But, beautiful and courted as she is, she goes very little into society. The dark story of her past life shadows her present and her future too terribly for that, and those who admire her beauty most declare there is a frosty reserve, a chill sadness, that sets all thought of love or marriage absolutely aside, as though she were some exquisite statue—a Galatea whom no Pygmalion could warm into human love.

And she is well content that it should be so; young and fair as she is, a life of passionless peace is the best she can look forward to. To her own heart and conscience she is still a wife, though her traitor husband has grown loathsome to her, and she knows that the law declines to recognise her claim. And she shrinks form even the semblance of flirtation, or the light gossip that might link her name with any man's, as from a deadly sin; so it chances that, while all men admire her, not one has come so near as to speak his own love, or beg for hers. And, if Cressida's heart is empty and cold, her conscience is at ease—or has been until to-day.

But to-day—to-day the earth has seemed to open at her feet, and, as by a lightning flash, she sees the abyss upon the verge of which she is standing. Frank Carmichael loves her—has asked her to marry him. Oh, that she had told him all!

The horror and shame of the moment are almost more than she can bear. A knife-like pain transfixes her heart. And yet—is it only pain, only remorse and humiliation, that dizzy thrill, or is there a wild, wicked ecstasy, a rapture that no fear and shame can kill, that wakes the cold heart to aching life? The doubt, the self-distrust is worse than all the rest to proud, pure Cressida, who is only the prouder and purer because she bears so heavy a burden of undeserved disgrace.

"Oh, no, Frank!" she cries, rising abruptly from her seat at the piano, and facing him, with such horror in her startled eyes and pale face that he comes to a sudden pause in his fervent pleading. "You must not, Frank; it is wrong—wicked—indeed it cannot be!"

For a moment he looks at her with a dismay that, if he were less tragically in earnest, would be almost comic to look upon. Surely never since the world began had declaration of love been received in such a fashion. She might not love, she might not even like him, though Francis Carmichael, by no means a vain man, can hardly bring himself to credit this; but what can there be that is either "wrong" or "wicked" in his words?

But, as he looks at that pale exquisite face and reads the pain and distress so plainly written there, the truth comes slowly but surely home. In some indefinable way he knows that a terrible truth underlies her wild words, that he has embarked all the hopes of his manhood in a venture that is destined so inevitable shipwreck.

"Is it true Cressida?" he exclaims, catching the two cold trembling hands within his own, and searching her pale face with eager hungry eyes. "Tell me at once! Your are not jesting; it is all true?"

The girl's heart aches to hear how keen pain has sharpened the full manly voice that was wont to ring out with so cheery a sound. She droops her golden head and answers with a humility that would surprise those who call Miss Leigh-Gordon "so cold and proud"—

"It is all true. Oh, Frank, forgive me!"

"There is a barrier between us?'

"There is a barrier between us," she repeats mechanically, gazing up at him with dim misty eyes. "Yes, a barrier that can never be removed."

His face changes then so suddenly that she springs forward and lays one hand upon his wrist, with the pleading passionate cry—

"Frank—dear, dear Frank, forgive me! I never knew, I never guessed."

He lifts his head, and, though the pain lingers, and a gray pallor has crept over the healthy bronze of his skin, all the angry scorn that so hurt her has vanished from the kind and frank blue eyes.

"Forgive you?" he echoes gently. "Nay, rather forgive my own egregious vanity, cousin Cressida. I forgot I was a cousin, and so entitled to privileges that turned my foolish head. When I saw that you, so cold and distant to all others, were kind and frank to me, I thought—no matter what I thought—the fault was all my own. Do not look so white and frightened, Cressida dear. We shall be friends still, friends always, I hope; and some day?"—with a tolerably successful attempt at a smile—"some day I hope to extend that friendship to the lucky fellow who has won your love."

Her lips quiver for a moment, then the tears rush blindly to her eyes, and the good brave face she has learned to know so well is blotted from her gaze. How good he is, how generous, how true and loyal a gentleman! How safe and happy her life might have been if only they had met before!

The thought breaks from her in a little heart-wrung cry.

"Oh, stay," she says imploringly, "do not go like that! At least I owe it to you to tell the whole truth, and however much it costs, however much you may blame and scorn me, you shall hear it all."

He comes back; but there is a look of trouble and reluctance on his frank face, as though he doubted the wisdom of yielding to her wish.

"I am here, Cressida," he answers gently; "but there is no need of explanation, dear. I fully understand our kindness to me was kindness only and no way trenching on the rights of the man you love."

"The man I love!" she repeats, her great brown eyes flashing with fierce bewildering scorn. "There is no such man. Believe me, Frank, there is no man on earth one half so dear to me as you!"

The clouds pass swiftly from his face, which is illumined with a sudden sunshine.

"My darling, then there is no barrier that can withstand my love!" he cries exultantly, and would draw the slender form within his strong arms; but she shrinks from his touch, and something in her steadfast look once more chills and disconcerts him.

The joy of his face finds no reflection in hers, which is very white, almost stern in its set gravity. It is not the face of a girl hearing and answering a declaration of love, but of a woman passing through a mighty struggle, in which all her powers of nerve and will are tested to the uttermost, of a proud woman passing through the valley of humiliation and shame. Francis Carmichael watches that silent struggle with hot and angry eyes. Then, manlike, he feels that he can bear anything but suspense, and can bear that no longer—so breaks the painful silence with the impatient cry—

"Cressida, are you mocking—are you playing with me? For Heaven's sake, speak, or let me go!"

"Wait!"—she lays one hand on the tall chair-back to steady herself for the final effort, and presses the other just above her heart to still its painful throbbing. Then she goes on quietly—

"Frank, do you remember being in Paris with Lady Gordon and Florence, two years ago this summer?"

"Of course! I came to fetch Florence from her convent, and take her over to the Governor. But what has that to do with us, with this present question?"

"Wait!" she cries again, almost imploringly. "Do you remember the night before you and Florence left? You were on the river and—

"And was lucky enough to pick up some unhappy girl who had thrown herself into it! I don't know how you heard the story; but it is true enough. She had a narrow escape, whoever she was poor soul!"

He speaks absently, half forgetting the irrelevance of the question and the smarting pain of the moment in the buried memories her words awake.

"Did you ever learn who she was—ever know anything of the life you saved?"

"Never. We went off the next morning, you know; I had no time to make inquiries; they took the poor thing to some home for English girls, and Lady Gordon promised to visit the place, and, if it was a deserving case, to try to help her. I suppose it was not, as she never mentioned the matter again; but—— Good Heavens, Cressida"—his look and manner changing with electric suddenness—"why do you ask these questions? What was that girl to you?"

"Much!"—her face is absolutely colourless, her eyes are black with pain. "It was my life you saved, Frank; I was that forlorn and wretched girl."

For a moment there is nothing but blankest incredulity in Frank Carmichael's face. By not the wildest freak of the imagination can he reconcile the two figures presented to his thoughts—Lady Gordon's beautiful, stately grandchild, his own proud and pure cousin, and the desperate hunted creature who had dared all the mystic terrors of eternity in her despair of life, and, but for him, would have ended all her earthly woes in the dark waters of the Seine.

No, it is impossible—clearly, hopelessly impossible; and yet, even as he negatives the idea decisively, there comes to him a swift remembrance of the cold wet face that lay upon his breast, and the long dripping hair of palest gold that fell across his arms two years ago. And, with a pain so sharp that it almost stops his breath, the truth comes home to him at last. The face he looked upon in the Paris moonlight with no more than a passing human pity for the young life so terribly marred, the face he looks upon now with a mortal agony in his kind frank eyes, are one and the same. What, then, is the terrible secret in Cressida Leigh-Gordon's life?

Napoleon, Mich., has a postmistress of the kind that requires very early rising on the part of an opponent to outgeneral her. Knowing she had to go, she singled out her presumably successful competitor and married him.

Two Frontier Campaigns.

During the last three weeks the troops of the Dominion in the Northwest and our forces in the Southwest have been engaged in tasks which closely resemble each other in several respects. The Canadians have been busily pursuing the Indians of BIG BEAR'S band, who escaped eastward and northward from the neighborhood of Fort Pitt, while the United States regulars have been as assiduously tracking the savages of GERONIMO'S band in their circuitous flight, first north and then south and west from the neighborhood of Fort Apache. In both cases the fugitives had been guilty of horrible atrocities, the Cree murders at Frog Lake being hardly less wanton in barbarity than those committed by the Chiricahuas among the Blue Mountains and near Silver City. In both campaigns the pursuers have outnumbered the pursued. GERONIMO'S band comprised only about 140 persons, of whom 34 were warriors. BIG BEAR'S may have reached 500 in all, but probably he has never had 200 guns in action. Gen. MIDDLETON, on the other hand, has at least 1,200 men under his orders, though a smaller number may have been on the actual trail; while Gen. CROOK, with his scouting parties and his garrisons stationed in the Mexican passes, commands as many. Both these officers have called to their aid bodies of friendly Indians, enlisted to hunt down the hostiles of their race.

Unfortunately, the parallel must be pursued still further, in the discouraging lack of success which has thus far attended both the Arizona campaign and that on the Saskatchewan. MIDDLETON, after vigorous pursuit of the Indians, was baffled by a broad swamp, interposed between him and his enemy, and by almost impenetrable forests. He returned to Fort Pitt with his trains and Gatling guns, although only for the purpose of starting out again after BIG BEAR on a more promising road. In Arizona the escape of GERONIMO to Sonora is admitted, although there, as in the Northwest, hostilities may be revived by the voluntary return of the fugitive Indians for the purpose of plunder. While MIDDLETON has new plans for cutting off the retreat of BIG BEAR or intercepting him on his return, fresh forces have been summoned from Texas to aid in destroying GERONIMO, and his fortune in Mexico is still uncertain.

On the whole, the Canadians have more to brag of than our forces, for they began their campaign by putting down the half breed rebellion and completely vanquishing POUNDMAKER. They have also been fortunate in securing the safety of many of BIG BEAR'S captives. On the other hand, this chief still holds some hostages, whereas no citizens of Arizona were carried off by GERONIMO.

Looking at the causes of the two Indian outbreaks, we do not trace them to any gross ill usage of the red men on either side. GERONIMO, in fact, had perhaps been treated with too great lenity. At all events, he had no just cause for returning to the warpath. BIG BEAR, we believe, wrote to Lieut.-Gov. DEWDNEY that he had taken up arms because his tribe and kindred were doomed to be killed by the whites, and meanwhile were swindled by Government agents. But while investigation may show the latter charge to be true, BIG BEAR had no reason for his atrocious murders. Doubtless among the fiercer Indians of the Northwest, as of the Southwest, a joy in war for the sheer sake of plunder and slaughter will account most satisfactorily for bloody outbreaks like the present.—[N. Y. Sun.

Opening Up of Asia.

For the immediate present there is no probability of war between Russia and Great Britain. Were hostilites to break out the advantage of position would have been entirely on the side of the Muscovites. When the inevitable war occurs it will be many miles nearer the frontier of India. The preparations for war will go on, even though there may be no fighting this year. The Russian railway line that commences on the Caspian Sea, will by next autumn be completed to the borders of the Afghainstan. The telegraph already connects Penjdeh with St. Petersburg, and Central Asia swarms with Russian soldiers. As a consequence, a new life has been infused into the apparently torpid populations of the elevated plateau which was the cradle of the great Aryan race. The Tuscomans and other inhabitants of the Khanates have become reconciled to their Russian conquerors because of the prosperity that has come to them by the increased trade of all Central Asia. The Russian armies call for the grain and cattle of the country, prices have risen, and there is a marvelous activity in all the channels of trade.

Teach Children to Swim.

The necessity of having children taught to swim can not be too strongly impressed upon the minds of mothers. There is sure to be a time when the knowledge will be of important service. A child may begin at six years of age. The motions are very easily taught. A swimming school is, of course, the most convenient place in which to learn. If, however, the child is taught in still water with a rope fastened about the waist and secured to a post or some object on terra firma, there is no danger even in deep water. A life-preserver gives a feeling of security to the timid beginner. There are few German children who can not swim. Prussian soldiers have to learn swimming as part of their military training.

At a very moderate estimate, $11,372,000 a year is saved by leading American newspapers through their failure to accept bets offered about their circulation.

OUR village trustees have about completed their street and sidewalk improvements and have done a lot of substantial work. Mill Street has been greatly improved and the sidewalks generally repaired and considerable made new. The walk towards the school is yet, however, shaky and dangerous, and should be kept in extra repair, owing to the number of little children travelling it daily.

AS MAY be seen in another column, Mr. J. H. Hull has sold his interest in the stave factory. It has turned out a heavy loss owing to the bottom falling out of the stave market the year following the establishment of this factory, and never yet returning. Mr. Hull is a very hardworking, industrious and desirable citizen, and we lean with regret that his loss in the stave business will amount to $1,400.

A meeting of the directors of Glenelg Agricultural Society was held at the Revere Hotel last Thursday, when important business was transacted. Those who wish to become members should do so before the 26th July, as after that date $2 will be the fee. Wm. Haskett is the Secretary, who will attend to all business of this nature. Those in the village and district should do what they can in making the show a success.

CONCERT.—The Markdale Brass Band will give their first concert in Markdale, on the evening of the 13th (Monday next.) The committee are sparing no pains to render the entertainment worthy the patronage of the public, and as they are exceeding the most sanguine expectations of our citezens in their practice, we may expect a treat on Monday evening in Mr. Rae's Hall. Admission, adults 25 cents, children 15c., curtain drawn at 8 o'clock.

A SECRET

The secret of beauty lies in pure blood and good health, Burdock Blood Bitters is the grand key that unlocks all the secretions. It cures all Scrofulous Diseases, acts on the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, Skin and Bowels, and brings the bloom of health to the palid cheek.

Mormonism is becoming more and more effectually hemmed in, and the day of its extermination, or the extermination of its most debasing feature—polygamy—seems not far distant. Not only have men been fined and imprisoned in Utah for practising polygamy, but three of its missionary elders have been imprisoned in Tennessee for preaching polygamy. Of course there is the usual talk about the rights of free speech, but the people are becoming too much roused regarding the growing evil to allow it to continue much longer.

THIS IS RELIABLE.

R. N. Wheeler, Merchant of Everton, was cured of a severe attack of inflammation of the lungs by Hagyard's Pectorial Balsam. This great throat and lung healer cures weak lungs, coughs, horseness, bronchitis, and all pectoral complaints.

MISFORTUNES SELDOM COMES SINGLE.—In reference to our report last week of the accident which befel W. J. Noble's horse on the railway, we regret to learn our information was not correct. The horse was pasturing in McDuffie's field and made its way over a very poor fence to the railway track, and it appears attempted to cross the red bridge which spans the Saugeen, and there gat fast across the rail; had it not been for the exertions of the neighbors who discovered the horse and signalled the coming express to stop, the train would have been a wreck; as it was the train was saved, and the horse was got off the track but will not recover. This is a sad loss to our young industrious citizen who had the misfortune a week previous to get his leg broken. his team was his main dependence and we hope to see the Railway Co. make the damages, (which was brought about by their insufficient fence) good without litigation.

WE have received the fourteenth number of the Canadian Pictorial and Illustrated War News. It contains the following illustretions:—Camp of Half-breeds Refugees at Fort Pitt, from a sketch by Mr. F. W. Curzon, speciat Artist of the Canadian Pictorial, with Gen. M. W. DUNHAM
HAS IMPORTED FROM FRANCE
Percheron Horses valued at $2,000,000, which includes
75 PER CENT OF ALL HORSES
Whose purity of blood is established by their pedigrees recorded in the STUD BOOKS OF FRANCE.
EVER IMPORTED TO AMERICA.
STOCK ON HAND:
150 Imported Brood Mares,
250 Imported Stallions,
Old enough for service,
100 COLTS,
Two years old and younger.

Recognizing the principle accepted by all intelligent breeders that, however well-bred animals may be said to be, if their pedigrees are not recorded, and cannot be authentically given, they should be valued only as grades, I will sell all Imported Stock at Grade Prices when I cannot furnish with the animal said pedigree verified by the original French certificate of his number and record in the Stud Book in France. 140 Page Catalogue sent free. It is illustrated with Six Prize Horses of the Exhibition of the Societe Hippique Percheronne of France, 1884; purchased by M. W. Dunham, and drawn from life by Rosa Bonheur, the most famous of all animal painters.

SCIENTIFIC AND USEFUL.

Thermometer tubes have to be seasoned. This requires a year or two. When glass is new it changes, expands, contracts and warps almost as badly as green wood.

In Germany they are now trying a composition of cork, sand and lime, molded into bricks, for the construction of light partition walls. It is said to exclude sound better than ordinary brickwork, while being light and a good non-conductor of heat.

Experiments have been made in France with electricity as an agent to prevent the incrustation of boilers. The passage of a current through a boiler not only causes the impurities of the water to settle as a loose powder, but detaches the old incrustation.

The railroad system of Japan has attained a length of 225 miles, and is increasing steadily. It has been mainly built by the Japanese Government with native capital. The business results up to the present time have given no cause for dissatisfaction.

Some time ago the discovery was made by M. Ch. Montigny, by the means of a beautiful instrument called the scintillometer, that blue largely predominates in the twinkling of the stars when there is much water in the atmosphere, and that the preponderance of green or violet is indicative of a great dryness.

Sulphuric acid will remove spots from brass that will not yield to oxalic acid. It may be applied with a brush; but great care must be taken that no drop of the acid shall come in contact with clothes or skin, as it is ruinous to garments and to cuticle. Bath brick or rotten-stone may be used for polishing, the latter being preferable for delicate work.

Mr. F. W. Clark has exhibited in London a new system of gas lighting for private houses by means of recuperative lamps. By a ventilating arrangement the lamps consume their own smoke, and the burners are so formed that the requisite air is heated to a high temperature and admitted into the lamps at the point of ignition.

Mr. Wolff's treatment of writers' cramp seems to be making steady progress in popular estimation. It consists of a combined application of massage, gymnastics, and caligraphic exercises. Any sufferer from that annoying and distressing species of cramp can devise a special system of relief by noting the objects aimed at by the method adopted by Mr. Wolff.

When tempering cold chisels or any other steel articles heat to a very dull red and rub with a piece of hard soap, then finish heating and harden in clear, cold water. The potash of the soap prevents the oxygen of the atmosphere from uniting with the steel and forming rust or black oxide of iron. The article will need no polishing to enable the colors to be seen. This will be appreciated when tempering taps, dies or various complex forms not not easy to polish. Never "upset" a cold chisel. It is sure death to the steel.

Paper slippers are the latest form in which paper is introduced in new inventions. An Englishman has patented a system of manufacturing slippers, sandals and other coverings for the feet out of paper. Paper pulp, or paper mache, is employed for the upper, which is moulded to the desired form and size, and a sole is provided made of paper or pasteboard, leather board, or other suitable paper material, which is united to the uppers by means of cement, glue, or other adhesive material. The upper is creased, embossed, or perforated at the instep or sides, which renders them somewhat pliable and prevents their cracking while in use.

An Unexpected Result.

At a recent sham fight in England the commanding officer of the attacking force, which was expected to advance directly against a strong position, departed from his instructions, and, taking advantage of a heavy mist, out flanked and dispersed his opponents, driving them pell mell down hill. The result was precisely the reverse of what had been arranged for; but as it was a good deal more like war than the scheme laid down in the instructions, the Government does not feel like censuring the daring officer, who, by the way, belonged to the marines. As the assailants were mainly sailors and marines landed from a fleet supposed to be hostile, the whole affair was voted by them to be "a jolly lark," and an instructive lesson to the amateur soldiers who were defending the position. Everybody has laughed so heartily over the affair that the Goverment professes official ignorance of it.

Seas on the Australian Coast.

It is said that the seas on the Australian coast are heavier than anywhere else in the world. For hundreds of miles black, beetling cliffs from 400 to 600 feet high, extend without an opening of any kind into which a distressed ship might run for safety. Round the base of these cliffs the crested hills of angry waves surge and roar, swept along with terrible force by winds born at the southern pole, and which, careering over thousands of miles of sea, have encountered land here for the first time.

Who Wouldn't be a Lawyer?

At the close of prolonged litigation over the affairs of the Columbia Life Insurance Company, the depositors got $105,137 and the lawyers $221,720. This is pretty good for the West, but we can do better here. In the Marie-Garrison suit, which has just been settled, the lawyers for the plaintiff got $93,750 and the council for the defence $450,000. Litigation may be pleasant, but it is an expensive luxury.

AN ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF THE REBELLION.

SUPPLIED BY TWO SOUVENIR NUMBERS OF THE "ILLUSTRATED WAR NEWS."

As soon as the country is settled down to its usual peaceable pursuits, every Canadian who takes an interest in his country's welfare and history will be looking out for a history of the recent troubles in the North-West which have been the source of so much anxiety to thousands and the cause of untold suffering to many thousands more. Anticipating this demand, the Grip Printing and Publishing Company of Toronto have decided to supply the want, and have adopted a somewhat novel and interesting plan for doing so. They propose to issue two grand souvenir numbers of the Canadian Pictorial and Illustrated War News, which will be a complete letter-press and illustrated history of the late rebellion. The first of these parts has just been issued and contains a complete history of the rebellion from its inception up to the Battle of Fish Creek. Besides the letter-press history, it contains a large number of very fine illustrations, amongst which are the following:—"The Battle of Duck Lake," "The Sacking of Battleford by Hostile Indians," "Escape of the McKay Family through the Ice," "Capture of White Cap's Band by the Governor-General's Body Guard," "How Her Majesty's Mails Travel through the Hostile Country," "The Battle of Fish Creek," "Murder of the Priests by Wandering Spirit," "Heroic Defence of Fort Pitt." Also a grand allegorical two-page Supplement entitled "Canada's Sacrifice."

In addition to these illustrations there is given away with this first part a magnificent plate in three colors of Generl Middletou and the commanding officers of the different Battalions on duty in the North-West. Amongst others in the group are the following:—Major-General Middleton Major-General Strange, Lord Melgund, Col. Otter, Col. Van Straubenzie, Col. Williams, Col. Montizambert, Col. Ouimet, Col. Grassett, Col. Miller, etc.

The illustrations, which have been made specially for this publication, have been compiled at great expense from the most authentic sources, including sketches from their special artist who is accompanying General Middleton's expedition. The artists engaged in the preparation of the illustrations comprise the best talent available both in Canada and the United States, and include the following:—W. D. Blachley, J. W. Bengough, J. D. Kelly, J. Humme, W. W. Wesbroom, A. Lampert, Wm. Bengough.

The history is from the pen of Mr. T. Arnold Haultaur, M. A., the author of "The War in the Soudan."

There is no doubt that this illustrated history will be by far the most valuable of any that may be published, and when the two parts are bound together they will form a very attractive memento of Riel's second rebellion. In the years to come those who are fortunate enough to possess a copy will have a volume that will be studied with intense interest by both young and old. We advise all our readers to lose no time in securing a copy of Part 1, and giving their order in advance for the 2nd Part, which is in preparation, and will be ready in a short time.

The price of each part is 50c., which we consider is remarkably cheap, as for this price the publishers have compiled a work of which the letter-press alone would make an ordinary book of about 150 pages, and in addition give 12 full pages of lithographed illustrations. It is only by a very large sale that the publishers will make any profit, and they are certainly justified in anticipating a great demand for the issue.

We have no doubt their anticipations will be realized.

The souvenir number can be procured of all newsdealers, or from the office of publication direct.

Lake Mistassini.

When young Mr. Bignell returned from Lake Mistassini last fall, and confirmed the rumor that it was a very large body of water, a few scientific gentlemen of Canada treated his story as a sensational yarn. They were sure his report was grossly exaggerated and they were rather amused by his statement that the lake they had visited was Little Mistassini, and that just beyond it was a vast inland sea called Great Mistassini, of which the Canadian Survey expedition had never heard.

Mr. John Bignell, late leader of the Government exploring party, has just returned, in accordance with his instructions. He confirms in every particular the information which his son brought home last fall. His party have not been able to circumnavigate the lake, but they believe it to be at least six times as large as Little Mistassini, which they have found to be 100 miles long. Mr. Bignell says that in the portion they have explored several islands, about twenty miles long, each containing lakes of considerable size, have been discovered. The directors of the Canadian Geological Survey will probably admit before long that they narrowly escaped making a great discovery years ago, and the report which the exploring expedition will submit when its work is done, there is little doubt, will amply justify young Mr. Bignell. There was no reason in the world, except professional jealousy, to discredit him last fall, as he had the reputation of being a competent surveyor and a responsible man.

We will perhaps know soon how nearly this inland sea approaches in its dimensions the greatest of our lakes, if indeed it be not found to equal Lake Superior in size. Young Mr. Bignell started for Lake Mistassini from Quebec the other day with a party of gentlemen, among whom is Prof. La Flamme, the geologist, to whose efforts is largely due the sending out of the expedition that is now exploring the great lake.

A man has applied for the position of "sexton" of the Postoffice Department. This is tomb much! We suspect he wants to inter the dead letters.

"Fools Rush in, Where Angels Fear to Tread."

So impetuous youth is often given to folly and indiscretions; and, as a result, nervous, mental and organic debility follow, memory is impaired, self-confidence is lacking; at night bad dreams occur, premature old age seems setting in, ruin is in the track. In confidence, you can and should write to Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., the author of a treatise for the benefit of that class of patients, and describe your symptoms and sufferings. He can cure you at your home, and will send you full particulars by mail.

We censure the inconstancy of women when we are the victims; we find it charming when we are the objects.

"Is there no balm in Gilead?
Is there no physician there?"

Thanks to Dr. Pierce, there is a balm in his "Golden Medical Discovery"—a "balm for every wound" to health, from colds, coughs, consumption, bronchitis, and all chronic, blood, lung and liver affections. Of druggists.

The essence of education is the education of the body. Beauty and health are the chief sources of happiness.

Best French Brandy, Smart-Weed, Jamaica Ginger and Camphor Water, as combined in Dr. Pierce's Extract of Smart-Weed, is the best remedy for colic, diarrhœa, cholera morbus, dysentery or bloody-flux; also, to break up colds, fevers and inflammatory attacks if used early.

The highest mark of esteem a woman can give a man is to ask his friendship; and the most signal proof of her indifference is to offer him hers.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star

Everyone loves power, even if they do not know what to do with it.

No MAN ever smoked "Myrtle Navy" tobacco for a fortnight and then took to any other brand in preference to it. It bears its own testimony of its qualities, and it is testimony which is always convincing. The smoker who uses it is never annoyed by getting it sometimes of good quality and sometimes of bad. The arrangements of the manufacturers for keeping its quality equal are very elaborate and complete, and are the results of many years of experience and close observation.

Of all things that man possesses, women alone take pleasure in being possessed.

What 10 Cents will Do.

A 10 cent bottle of Polson's NERVILINE will cure neuralgia or headache. A ten cent bottle of Nerviline will cure toochache or facache. A ten cent sample bottle of Nervline is sufficient to cure colds, diarrhœa, spasms, dysentery, &c, Nerviline is just the thing to cure all pains, whether internal or external. Buy at your druggist a 10 cent sample of Nervline, "the great pain cure." Safe prompt, and always effectual. Large bottles at any drug store, only 25 cents.

A Dog's Peculiar Trick.

There is a postman in one of the suburbs of London who has lately been put to serious inconvenience by the extraordinary conduct of a greyhound belonging to one of his neighbors. No sooner does he start on his rounds than the dog sets off also. When the postman drops a newspaper into the box the dog stops still, waits till the postman is a good distance off, then endeavors to force his way into the house. If the door is locked he follows his friend again, and waits his opportunity for making a second attempt. At length he succeeds. He seizes the paper in his mouth, and darts off at full speed. The postman has never been able to discover what he does with his stolen goods. He followed him once, but the dog was too quick in his movements to allow himself to be caught. This conduct is extremely awkward for the poor postman, who on more than one occasion has had to reimburse the cost of the paper to the angry subscribers.

The day of small things

Is forever. It is not the great difficulties of life that try us but the small annoyances that ceaselessly wear away patience and good temper. The smallest grain in the eye, or the pricking of a pin, even an aching corn upset us completely, and therefore it becomes our duty to protect ourselves against the lesser evils which grow great by repetition. To remove corns all that is necessary is to purchase Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. It will very quickly remove them, and without the slightest pain or discomfort. Alligator Hunting in Florida.

The Florida shiver, a "cracker," as he is called, selects a dark, quiet night for hunting this peculiar game, observes a writer in the Pittsburgh Dispatch, and entering his skiff or "dug-out," places a small iron grate or cage securely in the bow. Next he fills the cage with dry pine knots or "light wood," and deposits a plentiful supply in the bottom of the boat. Then with a companion to row him, he loads his rifle carefully, and seated in the bow of the boat right behind the jack-light gives the order to push off. Involuntarily one feels awed by the solemnity of the scene—the dark brown waters of the sluggish and narrow river, hemmed in by swamp grass ten feet high, with here and there a tree standing out like a grim sentinel in the waste of sand and water. Occasionally they pass a tributary stream, and into one of these small creeks turn their boat, gliding silently along in the quiet night, with the moon rising slowly over the tall grass. Now all is changed. They dart into a dense growth of palm trees and scrub palmetto. The lofty cabbage palm rears its straight trunk aloft, smooth and even as a marble shaft, crowned above by a glorious foliage, while more humbly the many other trees indigenous to this warm climate stand with the funeral-looking Spanish moss hanging in filmy gray drapery almost to the water's edge, and the small patches of ground here and there visible are covered with poisonous vines and lovely ferns. Here the "cracker" gives the order to cease rowing and, striking a match, he lights up his cage of pine knots, illuminating the water many yards in advance. With his rifle cocked and in readiness they push silently ahead. Soon what appears to be the end of a log appears a few rods in front. The boat drifts slowly forward until the little sharp eyes of a "gator" shine forth from the log-like head. He is immovable, transfixed, as it were, by the bright glare, and now is the time to shoot. Aiming carefully, either at an eye or behind the fore leg, he pulls the trigger, and the deed is done. The huge reptile awakes from his lethargy. A gurgling roar, like that of a bull, a violent plunge and powerful lashings of the tail indicate he has received his death wound. After this flurry, which lasts perhaps for half an hour, the body immediately sinks to the bottom. To prevent this he is secured by a rope and anchored safely. When a sufficient number has been shot the "cracker" proceeds to skin his game. He takes a sharp knife, and making an incision on either side from behind the foreleg, removes the silver-gray skin from the belly and sides, the armored skin on the back and tail being useless. Then, securing the teeth, he returns home, and after salting the hides they are ready for the "commission man," who pays the hunter about $2 per skin.

Bound to Beat Bob Ingersoll.

In Dale County, Ga., only a few miles from the Barbour line, lived a few months ago an old gentleman who had given the best years of his life to hard work and free living. He was a free eater and free drinker. He was devoted to his matutinal, ante-prandial and evening tod, and he did not hesitate to say that a good article of corn-juice was about the most satisfying thing he ever tasted.

He was an eccentric individual and noted far and wide in the neighborhood as being in most of his ways quite peculiar.

Well, he discovered less than two months ago that he was approaching his end and began to make his final arrangements. He called his family around his dying bedside and made a last request.

He had read how Bob Ingersoll had employed a secretary to take down his last words when the end should come, so that the Sunday-school and Dorcas society books could not forge, as he appears to think they would, a final retraction of his unbelief. The intemperate old man would beat Ingersoll. He determined that his last end should be in keeping with past acts of his life and not a denial of his habits. Only the immediate family was to attend his funeral. Others were not expected and did not attend.

When the coffin was ready to be lowered into the tomb the eldest son drew the lid and exposed the face to view. He then moistened the lips of the dead clay with whiskey from a bottle provided for that purpose, took a drink himself, passed it to each member of the family present, all of whom drank freely, when the death-dealing poison was put in the coffin with the dust of the intemperate old man, and his remains laid away to await the resurrection and judgment.

This was all in accordance with the dead man's last articulate request. It is not a newspaper exaggeration, but the solemn truth. The reporter has every assurance that it really did happen.

An Aeronaut's Terrible Death.

A shocking accident occurred at the circus grounds, Charleston, the other afternoon just prior to the opening performance of Richards & Leon's circus. Among the outdoor attractions was a balloon ascension. Just as the ropes holding the balloon were cast off, the hot-air stove used in inflating it was overturned, and set the balloon on fire. The burning balloon shot up into the air at a rapid rate, with William Patterson the aeronaut, in the basket. When a short distance up the crowd yelled "Jump!" but he did not heed the advice, and after going several hundred feet up the balloon collapsed, and Patterson fell to the earth a lifeless mass of humanity. Patterson was 22 years old, and lived in Wellsville, Ohio, where he leaves a widow and family. It was his first ascension. The balloon was totally consumed.

FOR THE FARMER.

Crop Suggestions.

Good plowing and packing is half in fruit growing.

Plowing under a green crop is always beneficial to the soil.

Try plaster on all kinds of soil you have, and learn where it does best, and if it will pay anywhere.

Oats are very liable to lodge on strong soils and so not mature. Consequently such soil should be given to other crops.

Sow barley at the rate of three bushels to an acre on a patch near the barn. The young shoots are particularly rich and succulent and will be greedily eaten by the cows.

Mangolds furnish a grateful change of food for the cows in winter and are not more troublesome to raise than potatoes. They yield well and keep well, do not flavor the milk and butter, and are equally good for horses, sheep and swine.

Peach orchards need potash, and the yellows will not be any longer a serious drawback to peach growing. Potash will not restore a tree that is injured by the yellows, but will prevent it in all orchards if applied when the trees are set, or better still, before setting.

Manures for corn should, for most soils, contain potash in some form, and phosphates. The effect of ammonia on corn is usually not well marked, but potatoes will require all three. Ammonia is a dear manure but is usually wasted when applied to corn, but valuable for potatoes.

Valuable as Ammonia is to crops, it is too expensive in commercial manures to be used on a large scale, or except as it is made on or in the farm itself. We say in the soil advisedly, for all fairly fertile land has in it the elements from which cultivation will develope nitrogen and other forms of plant food.

A serious loss occurs when the drill will not distribute fertilizers evenly. Not only will the missing places be poorer, but they will ripen later and often be filled with light, chaffy grain. An old drill may thus by imperfect distribution of fertilizers lose enough grain to pay for a new one in a single season's crop.

Beans produce an enormous crop in deeply trenched soils, and will improve as much as any crop by surface manuring. Peas for a fall crop may be sown. It is, however, useless to try them unless in a deeply trenched soil, and one that is comparatively cool in the hottest weather overhead, as they will mildew and prove worthless.

We cannot burn stubble where land is seeded with clover or grasses without injuring these. We would not burn it under these conditions if we could, as it is worth more to remain on the ground. But dry stubble plowed up is apt to do more harm than good, and it is better economy on most kinds of soil to turn it into ashes where it grew.

That it is better to spread manure on the field at once rotten than to place it in heaps and thereafter spread it is obvious if the matter is carefully looked into. It is not probable that the escape of gases into the air is any greater in the one case than in the other. Spread evenly, the soluble parts are carried equally into the earth, the manure is more easily turned under than when newly laid, and it takes longer to spread from the heap than from the wagon. The matter is of special importance in manuring for summer crops.

Poultry Points.

Don't let your fowls roost in the draft.

Move the coops of young chicks occasionally.

To fatten poultry quickly, feed them with rice boiled in milk.

Keep apart young and old fowls of the Light Brahama variety.

Every poultry yard should have at least a pair of guinea fowls in the flock.

Young chickens turned into the garden will eat up all the bugs and insects.

Select hens with red combs, bright eyes, clean nostrils and legs, and that appear active.

Give your poultry plenty of run. They need exercise; give them space and they will take plenty of it.

Turn once every day all eggs that are being saved for hatching purposes, otherwise the yolks may set to one side and adhere to the shell.

The best inclosure for poultry yards is the wire fencing. It makes a pretty appearance, and at the same time proves itself of much value.

It is said that eggs from mature hens are much better for hatching purposes than those from young ones, as a larger proportion of them are likely to prove fertile.

On a large farm it is rarely necessary or best to confine fowls in summer. If given free range they will do as much good in destroying insects as they can do injury.

Plant at least one tree in your yard, as poultry need shade as well as sunshine. Plant plenty of sunflowers. The seed is not only relished by fowls but is also productive of health.

As the ground often becomes hard and compact, especially after a rain, a convenient mode of making a dust bath is to spade up a few feet of earth, working it up fine. It will serve the purpose admirably.

Poultry cannot be kept to advantage unless they have a properly arranged house for their accommodation. This is just as necessary to their well-being as it is that horses and cattle should have a good stable.

Do not throw soft food on the ground, as grass and chicken will in time be the result. Make small troughs, and when the hens have finished their meal, clean the troughs thoroughly, washing them occasionally.

If well-rotted manure is used the potato plat cannot be fertilized too heavily. Potatoes require the richest soil on the farm, and a good crop can not reasonably be expected unless, besides this, the ground is heavily fertilized.

The best feed for young chicks till two weeks old is to make a bread by the use of sour milk, salt, saleratus and molasses, out of a meal made from grain in the following proportions: 20 lbs. corn, 15 lbs. oats, 10 lbs. barley, 10 lbs. wheat bran; grind and mix, bake and crumble into scalded milk, giving no water. The milk is all the liquid needed. There is seldom a death in the brood if so fed.

To Avoid Fires.

The Fireman's Herald condenses into small compass a vast amount of useful information having a tendency to prevent fire, thus so:—

1. Always buy the best quality of oil.
2. Never make a sudden motion with a lamp either in lifting it or setting it down.
3. Never put a lamp on the edge of a table or mantel.
4. Never fill a lamp after dark, even if you should have to go without a light.
5. See that the lamp wick is always clean and that it works freely in the tube.
6. Never blow a lamp out from the top.
7. Never take a light to a closet where there are clothes. If necessary to go to the closet, place the light at a distance.
8. Use candles when possible when going about the house and bedrooms. These are cheaper and can't explode, and for many purposes are just as good as lamps.
9. Matches should always be kept in stone or earthen jars or in tin.
10. They should never be left where rats and mice can get hold of them. There is nothing more to the taste of a rat than phosphorus. They will eat it if they can get at it. A bunch of matches is almost certain to be set fire to if a rat gets at it.
11. Have perfectly good safes in which place where matches are to be used and never let a match be left on the floor.
12. Never let a match go out of your hand after lighting it until you are sure the fire is out and then it is better to put it in a stove or earthen dish.
13. It is far better to use the safety matches which can only be lighted upon the box which contains them.
14. Have your furnaces examined carefully in the fall and at least once during the winter by a competent person. All the pipes and flues should be carefully looked to
15. If there are any closets in the house near chimneys or flues, which there ought not to be, put nothing of a combustible nature into them. Such closets will soil silver and crack crockery and burn bedding. They form a bad part of any house that contains them.
16. Never leave any wood near a furnace, range, or stove, to dry.
17. Have your stove looked to frequently to see that there are no holes for coal to drop out.
18. Never put any hot ashes or coals in a wooden receptacle.
19 Be sure there are no curtains or shades that can be blown into a gaslight.
20. Never examine a gas meter after dark.

Leaning Towers.

The wonder of Bologna is its pair of leaning towers. Wonder is the correct term, for a leaning tower is always unpleasant to look upon. The motto of a tower should be "I aspire, but I am strong;" a leaning tower seems to suggest, "I am weak because I aspire." Who, putting aside the marvel of the thing, can help regretting that the noble campanile of Pisa did not find a firmer foundation? and this is even more true of the towers of Bologna, whose lines are simpler and severer. They stand side by side on the Mercato di Mezzo, in the heart of the town. The older, called the Torre degli Asinelli, built in the beginning of the twelfth century, is full ninety yards high, and leans a little more than a yard from the vertical; the other, the Torre Garisenda, built in rivalry a few years later, leans over more than eight feet, and thus was left incomplete at a height of 138 feet. Various explanations have been given of these leaning towers, some believing that they were purposely so built. Goethe's reason, quoted by Mr. Hare, is, that as in old times every important family possessed a tower, this, when vertical, became a familiar and common object; accordingly, "a leaning tower was built; architect and owner attained their object; the mass of upright towers are just glanced at, and all hurry on to examine the leaning ones. Others have attributed the inclination to an earthquake. To me it appears more probable that the sole cause is a defective foundation; for at Pisa the subsidence evidently commenced early, and after the third stage the builders tried to remedy the evil. La Garisenda, also, is said to have become more out of the perpendicular during the last hundred years.

An egg within an egg is said to have been laid by a Dorking hen at Owensboro, Ky., the other day. The contrarity was of unusual size and when broken, and the white and yolk poured out, a smaller egg, with perfect shell, was found inside.

So acute is the sheep's sense of hearing, it is said, that it can distinguish the cry of its own lamb among a thousand others, all bleating at the same time; and the lamb, too, is able to recognize its mother's voice, even though it be in the midst of a large flock.

Great Guns for British Ships.

The new guns which have been designed to maintain the naval supremacy of Great Britain are in an advanced state, but they have to undergo a course of experiments to settle the range tables and other particulars, and it will probably be the beginning of next year before they are ready for sea. This will, however, be earlier than the ships which are to carry them can be completed, and there will be ample time available for a full and leisurely study of their requirements and capabilities. The first of the four 63-ton steel breech-loaders for her Majesty's ship Rodney will be shortly finished, and will be used as an experimental gun, care being taken not to damage it in the process by any of the surgical operations to which experimental guns are occasionally subjected. Although seventeen tons lighter than the 80-ton muzzle loaders on board the Inflexible, the 63-ton gun is expected to surpass the older weapon in its destructive power. It will probably throw a 13½ inch shot of 1,250 pounds weight with a powder charge of about 580 pounds, and the estimated velocity at the muzzle is to be 2,100 feet per second. The 80 ton projectile weighs 1,700 pounds but the cartridge is but 450 pounds, and the muzzle velocity recorded is 1,600 feet per second. Should the new gun realize expectations it will penetrate 29 inches of wrought iron armor at close quarters and prove too much for 27 inches even at the liberal fighting range of a thousand yards. Still more powerful, but not in the same ratio of increase, will be the 110-ton guns now being manufactured for Her Majesty's ship Benbow. There are three of these guns ordered, one of which will be surrendered for the purpose of scientific experiment, while the other two are sent on board ship, where, however, they will not be wanted until midsummer of 1886. The projectile will be 16¼ inch diameter, and weigh 1,800 pounds or 2,000 pounds. The powder charge will be the enormous one of 900 pounds, or half the weight of the projectile, supposing this to be 1,800 pounds, on which supposition the velocity may be reckoned at 2,050 feet per second, and its power of penetrating armor at 31½ inches near the muzzle, or two inches less at 1000 yards. The guns will be vastly superior to the Italian 100-ton guns, which are at present at the head of all the naval artillery in the world, and they are to the like extent in advance of the 100-ton guns which are doing duty for England on the fortifications of Malta and Gibralter, although these are larger bore by 1½ inches. The substitution of steel for wrought-iron admits of heavier charges of powder, and this fact makes all the difference.

Baby Buffaloes.

The herd of buffaloes at the Zoological Garden, Philadelphia, is increasing, three woolly-coated strangers having come into the world during the past week. The young strangers keep close to thier mothers, who lie on the grass dozing in the warm sunshine.

"No keeper has entered the inclosure in which the mothers and calves are kept for several days," said Superintendent Brown, "for a buffalo cow is the most jealous and watchful parent in existence. She will allow no one to approach her calves, apparently fearing that they may be taken away.

"The herd of buffaloes owned by the Garden is undoubtedly the finest in the world, and they are becoming more rare each day on account of the rapid disappearance of the buffalo from the plains. An incident which occured last week gave me a lively sense of their value, and now I would not part with a buffalo under any circumstances. I was called on by a man who had come all the way from Nebraska to induce me to sell him one of the buffaloes. He was willing to pay anything in reason for the beast, and while I was compelled to tell him that it was impossible to sell one, I became curious to know what he wanted it for. 'It is a serious matter,' he said, in a solemn manner, 'and I must get some kind of a buffalo to take back to Nebraska with me, for there is a whole tribe of Indians waiting to celebrate their national medicine dance around him. There ain't a buffalo to be got in the West, and I have come East especially to get one." That little conversation boomed buffaloes with me," concluded the Superintendent, "and you couldn't get one of our herd now for love nor money."

Fortifying Sebastopol.

The Russian Goverment is re-fortifying Sebastopol without loss of time. Enormous earthworks are in course of construction or repair for some distance along the shore, looking seawards, and on all points commanding the approach to the harbor. They are being mounted with immensely powerful guns. The batteries are numerous and powerful, and all the works are being pushed on as rapidly as possible under the direction of a large force of sappers and artillery men who, with the soldiers under them, never cease work, on the strictest of Russian holidays. The completion of the ironclads Tchesme and Sinope, in course of construction in the dockyards of the Russian company, is also being hastened on, the work being continued during the night, by the assistance of the electric light. The statement from Sebastopol, which appeared in a leading journal, that the captain of one of the circular ironclads there had been removed on account of his English proclivities, &c., is a pure mistake. The captain retired from command of the Novgorod having completed seven and a half years' service, and for no other reason than that it was in accordance with the regulations of the service. He was almost immediately afterwards gazetted to the command of the torpedo squadron in the Black Sea.

BIG BEAR CAPTURED.

Big Bear and a number of his braves were captured by the Mounted Police near Carlton last Saturday; so the rebellion is now virtually ended.

The troops are on their way home and will pass through here next week.

The trial of Riel will commence the 20th July.

Rocklyn.

ROCKLYN CELEBRATES DOMINION DAY IN GRAND STYLE.

As the hour of 9 a. m. drew near, and the sun shone forth from a beautiful clear azure sky, while a gentle and refreshing breeze coming from the West somewhat neutralizing the effects of his burning rays, the roads in every direction were lined with people—young and old—coming to seek recreation and enjoyment in Rocklyn, and such they found to their hearts content.

Shortly after 11 a. m. the sound of the Markdale Brass Band was heard in the near distant sounding forth strains of music such as was never before heard in Rocklyn, and as they drew near and marched through the streets, cheer after cheer went up from hundreds of throats as a welcome to the boys from our neighboring town, and such a welcome they richly deserved, as their music was well chosen and played equally as well as many of the older bands.

Sharp at 12 noon the calithumpians came forth from their resting place and marched through the streets followed by hundreds of spectators. Nearly all nations and tribes were there in representation. Riel coming foremostwith the other two Insurgents Big Bear and Pound-Maker close behind and the Rockly Fife & Drum Band bringing up the rear, which created rounds of applause and langhter from the spectators who all proclaimed it to be the best procession on record.

The athletic games were commenced at 2 o'clock in the Agricultural Grounds. The attendance to the grounds was somewhat slim, yet those who were there fully enjoyed themselves and went away perfectly satisfied. The games were all contested for, and won by the athletes of Markdale. The most amusing event was the climbing of the greased pole 27 feet high, won by W. L. Young, time 11 seconds. The band furnished music throughout. Next came the horse races which were very exciting and closely contested in all the heats, and which passed off without any accident, greatly to the satisfaction of all. On the whole the day passed off pleasantly, and it is now one of the grains of sand on the shores of time. Its memories, whether of gladness or sorrow, are now but passed mile stones on life's highway.

The Concert given in the evening by the Markdale Literary, Gymnastic & Dramatic Society was a grand success, superseding anything of the kind ever given in Rocklyn. The attendance was fair and perfect order was maintained throughout. Prof. Jones is deserving of great praise for the able manner in which he displayed his talent as a musician on the several instruments. As usual W. J. Benson fairly brought down the house, creating rounds of laughter and applause. The reading by Miss Wilson was well delivered and highly appreciated. Robert Sproule's clog dancing is also worthy of praise, while he also acted the part of a colored gentleman to perfection. The play entitled—"Advertising for a Star Company"—carried the house by storm, the parts being all well acted, especially that of F. Porter, acting as bouncer. He is very muscular and bounced the Stars in great style, while the orchestra furnished a few choice selections.

ROCKLYN AGAIN TO THE FRONT.—As the 12th of July comes on Sunday this year it will be celebrated in Rocklyn on the 13th, when the following lodges will be here: Meaford District Lodges, accompanied by the Silver Cornet Band; St. Vincent District Lodges, and Euphrasia District, making in all eleven lodges, and Thornbury District to hear from. Grand and extensive preparations are being made for the reception of the visiting lodges. The speaking will take place in the Pine Grove adjoining Rocklyn. —COM.

Berkeley.

From a correspondent.

The hay is making rapid growth now, but will be a light crop.

We expect a large gathering of Orangemen here on the 13th, those of this district having decided to celebrate that eventful day in Berkeley. Mrs. Allen is making extensive preparations to feed and water the crowd.

Mrs. Speers has her house now completed. E. Brown did the plastering in good style.

Mrs. Allen and Thos. Abbott have built a sidewalk in front of their property. Would like to see others do likewise.

W. J. Lackey has added to the appearance of his lot by building thereon and fencing.

Williamsford.

From a Correspondent.

PIC-NIC.—A very enjoyable time was spent by those who attended the pic-nic held in the Williamsford grove on Friday, the 26th, by S. S. Nos. 4 and 7 of Holland, and being the first of the kind ever held here, was a grand success. When justice had been done by all at the tasteful and well-filled tables, a programme, consisting of choruses, songs, recitations and dialogues, the latter being, for the most part, very laughable and well carried out, after which the chairman, Mr. Dobbin, announced that a cake, provided by the young ladies of No. 4, would be voted for between the teachers Miss Horton and Miss Moore, the proceeds on each side to be used as a prize fund for their respective schools. The result was, a great amount of canvassing and a good deal of fun. When time was called it was found that Miss Horton was the successful candidate. About $13 was realized in all. The cake was then cut up and divided between the children of both schools; and all dispersed well satisfied with the day's sport.

Osprey.

From our own correspondent.

Mr. Edward Handly was seriously injured at the raising of his barn last Saturday. A stick of timber struck him on the face breaking his nose. Dr. Kerr attended the patient and has every hope of his speedy recovery.

Mr. A. McGirr lost a valuable horse on Sunday, by inflamation.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

Dominion Day passed off very pleasantly in Flesherton, the weather being about as good as could be desired. A very large crowd of people gathered to witness the various amusements of the day. From early morn almost every moment brought fresh arrivals from the North, South, East and West, until the town was filled to overflowing.

About 10 o'clock the volunteers assembled in the Drill Shed, while stray indians could be seen gathering and wending their way to their own grounds—the woods and ravine west of the village—when they took their position and fought in the sham battle between the Red Coats and themselves About 11 o'clock the volunteers marched out headed by the band, passed through the village to the north of the Indian ground. After some manouvers on the field Sergeant Field threw his men in skirmishing order and advanced upon the enemy when they opened fire at several hundred yards distant. At this point the fire fell short, when the men were ordered to cease firing, and again with another run, gained a position under cover of the hill on the west side of the river; here the fire from both sides was sharp. After several sharp movements of the men on both sides the Red Coats gained a good position on the left of the enemy and then poured in a deadly fire upon the Red Skins; this continued but a short time when Dumont with one of his men was seen to emerge from the thicket waving the white flag, when it was seen at once the fighting was over. The rebel advanced and had a pow wow with Sergeat Field when he returned to the ravine and brought out what men he had left alive. The Red Coats then, led by their band, marched back to the village with their captives in a very imposing and military manner. After having made a very nice parade through the village, and the large crowd of people so far seemed delighted with the display. The men marched to the shed and were dismissed. Mr. Sept. Good appeared as Riel, and A. R. Fawcett as Dumont, and performed their parts well. The costumes of a good number of the Indian tribe was excellent.

The garden party on Mr. Armstrong's grounds on the afternoon of Dominion Day was a complete success. Miss Jenny McDowell was there presented with an address and purse in recognition of her kind services as organist while living here.

The tea and speeches in the Presbyterian church in the evening was also quite a success. The ladies served an excellent tea in the basement, after which addresses were delivered by the Revs. Dobbins, D'Argent, Ross and McLeod.

Rev. Mr. Ayr, Methodist minister, delivered his first sermons to his people here on Sunday last. Mr. Ayr is a very lively and fluent speaker and made a very favorable impression.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

There is a super-abundance of picnics in this locality. During the last eight days there have been no less than seven, no record is given of the quantity of eatables that disappeared at them, but is supposed to have been enormous.

Friday last was our civic holiday. A number of our villagers spent the day at the romantic Falls of Eugenia, they appear to have had a very pleasant time, with the exceptation of one young lady, who in hopping from rock to rock sprained her ankle, and now she hops on one leg. Johnny, you should have taken better care of your girl! What will cousin John say?

Rev. D. Strongman, and J. W. Mahood have arrived and entered heartily into their work. A reception was tendered them at the parsonage on Thursday evening last. A very pleasant time was spent.

The Dundalk Orangemen, and the Young Britons will attend Divine service in the Methodist Church next Sabbath. Rev. D, Strongman will deliver an appropriate discourse.

Dundalk Public School held their annual pic-nic on Monday last. It was a complete success. Games, races, archery, base-ball, etc., occupied the time. Prizes were given to the successful competitors in the various games.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

Crops looking very well. Some have commenced haying.

Although the Flesherton Base Ball Boys have won several games this season, and expected to do the same at their recent match at Singhampton but nay; they got left badly, we think they would have succeeded in taking the game had it not been that their attention was so much drawn by the fairer sex, which were lookers on, of course they wanted to make a mash.

A number of our young men left here bound for Bolton, where they expect to get big wages for the harvest months.

One morning last week as we were out early taking the benefit of the morning air, whom did we spy but a couple, consisting of a lady and gent. crossing a field on a farm close by "linked arms," the young lady carrying on her arm a pail, we suppose the loving pair set up all the previous night, till the morning sun was beginning to pour down its rays upon them the young man then thinking it was time for him to disappear, the young lady accompanied him accross the fields, as that was on her way to milk and as there had been a heavy frost the same night, it was quite cool and they kept pretty close together you bet.

RUN AWAY.—On Friday evening last as Mr. D'Argent was out driving, he made a call on his way home, within about a mile of this place, he tied the horse at the gate, and while he was away the horse broak losse, and ran away, coming through this place at full speed making his way home, the buggy was damaged slightly.

Mr. W. H. Colquett our lively Implement man seems to be doing a rushing business in that line this season. We witnessed a large load of Rakes, &c., coming into town for him on Thursday last, from that well known firm of Knight & Wilson, Alliston.

Mrs. L. Hamlin, & daughter of St. Louis, are visiting friends in this place.

Mr. Elias Gray & wife, of Dundalk, are visiting in the neighborhood.

Mr. Wesley Long, our post master is building a frame kitchen in connection with his house, and is almost completed.

Statute labor is all the talk for the past week, some of the young men seem rather troublesome and wanted to get out of it by saying they were not of age, but, Harry says must do it, or pay the fine, they say go ahead.

Mr. C. A. Chant, our Aesthetic little School Master left for Unionville this week where he will spend his summer holidays. PAUL.

"WHAT SAY YOU TO A PIECE OF ROAST BEEF AND MUSTARD?"

Well, there is much to be said. The question being asked of the banqueter at the average boarding house, calls up reminiscences of close contiguity to the horns, and beefsteak three cuts south thereof. He, of course, will pass unless it occurs to him that he needs a binge for his trunk. ANGUS PLEWES.

County Council.

The council met pursuant to adjournment from the January session on Tuesday evening of last week in the Court House, Owen Sound.

Members all present.

The Warden briefly addressed the Council, after which he read several communications, which were referred to the respective committees.

The Treasures statement was read; also reports from School Inspectors of East and South Grey.

The Reeve of Artemesia presented petition of ratepayers of S. S. No. 5, Artemesia.

The Council adjourned till 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

Several accounts and communications were read and referred to committees.

The Reeve of Osprey presented petition relative to the widow of the late John Keegan, of the 30th Cambridgeshire regiment, Report of School Inspector for West Grey was read.

The Reeve of Artemesia presented report of County Property Committee recommending the erection of additional County Buildings, together with plans and specifications for the same.

The Council went into Committee of the Whole, and passed the report without amendment.

On the motion for the adoption of the report. Mr. V. Lang moved an amendment, seconded by Mr. Rogers, That the report of the County Property Committee as passed in committee be not adopted, but laid over for the December session, to give members of this Council an opportunity to ascertain the best and most economical of the schemes presented —lost.

The yeas and nays being called for on the motion for the adoption of the report, were, Yeas—Christoe, Blakely, McNichol, McKenny, Campbell, Hewgill, Robertson, Breen, Caulfield, Cameron, Shute, Totten, Pringle, Stewart, Bowes, Read, W. Lang, Gordon, McNaught, Jamieson, Agnew, Frost, Miller, Heming—24. Nays—Messenger, McBallum, Gilray, Fawcett, McCormack. Davis; McMillan, Clark V, Lang, O'Forrell, Widmeyer, Gamey, Potts, McPhail, Rogers—15.

On motion, a petition was ordered to be forwarded to the Honorable Minister of Militia on behalf of the widow of John Keegan.

The request of the Deputy Reeve of Owen Sound to be allowed to withdraw from special committee appointed last session in reference to school matters, was granted, and V. Lang appointed in his stead.

Mr. Potts gave notice that he would ask for a grant of $500 to open side road 40 in the township of Osprey, from gravel road south to town line of Melancthon, as a leading road to Dundalk.

The Council adjourned till 2 o'clock on Thursday afternoon.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

The Warden read communication from Col. Brodie relative to grant for volunteers; also several accounts.

Dr. Christoe read report of special committee of Railway Delegation, which was received and adopted.

Mr. Read read report of Education Committee. The Council went into Committee of the Whole on the report and on motion rose, and asked leave to sit again.

Mr. Frost introduced By-law 336 for the appointment of a County Solicitor without salary, (payment being according to services rendered.) which was read first and second times

On motion, the Clerk was instructed to send copies of rules and regulations of the Council to the Councils York, Bruce and Simcoe.

The council adjourned till 7 p. m.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Mr. McKenny read report of Finance Committee, upon which the Council went into Committee of the Whole, and after making some amendments thereto, the report was adopted.

Mr. Read introduced By-law 337 to assess the different municipalities of the county for an amount at least equal to the Legislative School grant, which was read first and second times after which the council filled up the by-law in Committee of the Whole.

By-laws 338 and 339 to levy rates for the currant year, were introduced, and read first and second times.

A motion to grant $500 to open 40 side line in the townhip of Osprey was lost.

The Council adjourned till 7 p. m., Friday evening.

FRIDAY EVENING.

Report No. 2 of County Property was read, recommending payment of some accounts; also recommending that five feet be added to length of proposed additional County Buildings; also that a proper time tenders be advertised for in the Globe, Mail and Owen Sound papers. The report was adopted.

Dr. Christoe read a lengthy report of special committee to inquire to correctness of certain charges of School Inspectors, and other school matters.

On motion the Council went into Committee of the Whole on report. The first clause set forth that the committee had waited upon the Minister of Education, who. in answer to questions, had assured them that $8 per day was all Mr. Gordon was entitled to as School Inspector at Examinations, and recommended that in accordance therewith he be paid at that rate.

Letters were read by Mr. N. Read, Chairman of Education Committee, and Mr. H, Gordon, in which the Minister of Education was asked what the County was entitled to pay Mr. Gordon, and answers received that being Town Inspector he was entitled to $5 per day; and Mr. Read moved that the clause be amended by inserting $5 instead of $8. After a lengthy debate the amendment was carried by 20 to 19, and the clause amended to $5.

The second clause of report stated that answers had been received from twenty-four Inspectors as to salary paid for Secretary's services to Board of Examiners, and recommended that $25 (being the average amount of salaries given,) be paid for such services here, instead of $100 as formerly. After some discussion the clause passed.

The next matter referred to in report was the amount of allowance to Examiners, and a recommendation was made that 75c. be paid for each pupil examined, which was according to statutory regulations. The clause was passed.

The last clause set forth the necessity of Inspectors devoting their whole time to the work, and that they should be men of the highest qualification attainable for the office, and recommended that the three Inspectors of Grey should be merged into two—six months notice to be given of the change to the present Inspectors. A lengthy discussion ensued on this clause, which was eventually struck out.

The committee rose and adopted the report as amended in Committee.

The Council adjourned at midnight till Saturday Morning.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Mr. McKenny presented report No. 2 of Finance Committee. Council went into Committee on the report, and after making some amendment thereto, passed and adopted it.

Report of Committee on communications was read, and on motion adopted.

Council went into committee on report of Education Committee, and passed report without amendment, which was afterwards adopted.

The Council again went into Committee, and filled up By laws 337, 338 and 339, which were then read a third time and passed.

Moved by Mr. Frost, seconded by Mr. Miller, That in case of an appeal by any municipality from the equalization of the assessment now made, this Council hereby expresses its willingness to have the matter determined by the County Judge.

The Council then adjourned to December 15th.—O. S. Advertiser.

DOES THIS REFER TO YOU.

Are you troubled with biliousness, dyspepsia, liver or kidney complaints, or bad blood! if so you will find a certain cure in Burdock Blood Bitters.

The season is now far enough advanced in the United States that a fair estimate of the coming wheat crop can be made. The official estimate of the Agricultural Bureau is that the total wheat yield this year will be 330 million bushels, or 30 millions less than was at any time estimated: It is said that after all required for bread and seed is deducted from this quantity the balance left for export will be quite small. The wheat market of England has been glutted for the last year or two, however. and there will probably be plenty and to spare, anyway.

THE HISTORY OF HUNDREDS.

Mr. John Morrison, of St. Anns, N. S., was so seariously afflicted with a disease of the kidneys that dropsy developing and his life was despaird of. Two bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters cured him after physicians had failed.

LOSS OF MEMORY.—A reporter of the Toronto World, one of Canada's best dailies, has been interviewing a number of medical men on the prevalence of loss of memory. "They all said it was a common complaint of their patients. One doctor said I notice that a man never forgets that you owe him a dollar; I also notice that if a man owes me one, it is very apt to escape his attention. How do you account for that? said the reporter. In this way: We are becoming more one sided every day. A well-balanced man ought to remember that he owes and is owed; most of us become infatuated with one side of our mental activity and neglect the other." Thanks, Mr. Reporter for the information, we did not know before what was the matter with some of our subscribers who are in arrears. We now see thas they are cultivating the one side-business. Many, many thanks.

THE Oddfellows' Excursion to Collingwood by the Campana on Wednesday was by far the largest excursion party that has ever left the town; but notwithstanding the great crowd, the Campana accommodated them all without trouble, and a pleasant day was spent, though some had a taste of sea-sickness on the return trip. It is said that notwithstanding the Scott Act, a good many of the Collingwood bummers still indulge in their favorite beverage.—O. S. Times.

THE PIC-NIC.—The Pic-nic under the auspices of the ladies of St. Mary's Church, Owen Sound, came off at Rockford Grove on Dominion Day. There were a large number present, who enjoyed themselves, some in dancing, while others were competitors for the prizes offered for running, jumping, &c. The event of the day however, was the voting of the gold-headed cane between D. Creighton Esq. M, P. P., editor of the Times, and J. H. Little, editor of the Advertiser. The vote run pretty even during the whole of the afternoon, but during the last half hour a large number of votes were cast for Mr. Little, who won the cane by a handsome majority. The amount realized was about $65. The Cape Croker Indian Band was in attendance, and added much to the enjoyment of the day.—O. S. Advertiser.

JOHN TOELLE'S DEATH.

Hydrophobia Follows One Month After His Fight With a Mad Dog.

John Toelle, the Kansas man who had the desperate struggle with the mad dog May 7 has died from hydrophobia. Ever since his battle with the dog Mr. Toelle had been firmly convinced that he would die of hydrophobia. His friends attempted to persuade him that there was no danger, but no amount of persuasion or argument could shake him in his belief that his death was only a matter of time. After the battle his wounds were cauterized and he was given all the whiskey that he could stand. A mad stone was also applied to the bites, but would not adhere. Toelle accepted this as an omen, and told his physicians that it was no use, and that all their efforts could not save him. The wounds all healed nicely, though Toelle complained of pains in his arms. Last Monday night week he visited his brother-in-law.

He talked of the battle with his sister, and was firmly convinced that he would die in a short time. When he returned to his home he said he felt sick, and wanted his bed made differently. He remarked: "I will not stay long, I feel it coming on, and do not want to hurt anybody, so you had better strap me in my bed; I feel that the first spasm is coming on." That night, as he had predicted, he had his first spasm, which was not, however violent.

Tuesday afternoon he had another, and the third occurred Tuesday night. Each spasm was more violent than the preceding one. Between the intervals of the attack on Tuesday he was rational and made his will. Till Tuesday night he had been drinking water and keeping pounded ice in his mouth, Then he refused to drink further, and the sight of water would throw him into convulsions. He also began to froth at the mouth and scream like a wild beast, all the while making desperate efforts to release himself from the ropes with which he was tied to the bed. He died in a terrible agony. His struggles were frightful. His eyes glared like a wild animal's, his mouth was flecked with foam, and his screams could be heard for a mile. Four strong men were required to hold him, to prevent him him from breaking the ropes. He breathed his last at about 5.30 o'clock.

Mr. Toelle was a man of 35 years of age. He was in good circumstances. The dog that caused his death was an immense Newfoundland, over three feet high and for a long time had been the pet of the family. Mr. Toelle, noticing that the dog was acting strangely, tied him up, but he chewed the strap, and started across a field. Thinking that he might bite some one, Mr. Toelle followed. When he caught him a desperate struggle ensued, lasting for over an hour. Mr. Toelle caught the strap, intending to take the dog back to the house. As he did so the beast sprang for his throat. Mr. Toelle got out of the way, when the dog again attacked him and seized him by the right hand, which he clung to with bulldog tenacity. With his other hand he managed to choke the dog till he let go his hold, only to renew the attack again. Again and again he was choked off only to renew the fight more savagely than before. Finally, with his hands and arms lacerated and bleeding and his body covered with bites, he got the dog's head in chancery and threw him to the ground. He threw his whole weight upon the dog and held him down, screaming all the time loudly for help, with the dog biting and fighting viciously. He was finally rescued, torn, bleeding, and mangled by a passer by, who shot the dog as it was being held down by the unfortunate victim.

A New Torpedo for the British Government.

An official inspection has taken place within the past few days of a torpedo invented by Mr Brennan, an Australian, to whom the British Admiralty granted facilities for the manufacture of and experiments with his invention at Garrison Point Fort, Sheerness. The trials and inspection having proved satisfactory the Admiralty have agreed to adopt, the torpedo as a part of the national armament. It is asserted that the inventor has been paid £10,000 on account, and various sums, ranging from £40,000 to £100,000, are mentioned as the reward to be alloted for the invention. The new torpedo differs essentially from any existing system. It can be directed and discharged either from a shore torpedo battery or from a ship. Separate propellers are actuated by means of wires coiled in reels within the topedo, the motive power being a steam engine within the fort or ship, from which it can be steered with great accuracy. Jets of light, produced by some chemical agency, indicate to the operator the position of the torpedo to night.

Witty.

Lord Chesterfield, whose "letters" our grandsires received as the code of politeness, was a polished wit and an astute courtier. On one occasion, George II. and his ministers differed as to the person who should fill a position of trust. The ministry insisted upon their man, and delegated Lord Chesterfield to present the commision for the royal signature.

In a deferential tone, his lordship begged to know with whose name His Majesty would be pleased to have the blank spaces filled up. "With the devil's!" answered the enraged king.

"And shall the instrument," asked the earl, without the slightest change of manner, "run as usual—'Our trusted and well-beloved cousin and counsellor'?"

The king burst into a hearty laugh and signed the commission.

THE ROYAL FAMILY.

Some Interesting Facts About the Queen's Revenue and Expenditure.

Under this rather fascinating title, Mr. Arthur Arnold contributes an article to the June number of The Fortnightly. The writer, however, confines himself to the incomes of Royal personages, which is somewhat disappointing. The ninth and last of the Queen's children is about to enter the marriage state, and this interesting event might very well have tempted some one to venture upon a family biography. The Queen, in her journals, tells us not a little of the home life of that happy circle before the clouds began to hover, and the Letters of the Princess Alice show that even Princes have their domestic cares like ordinary folk. Still there is a timeliness about Mr. Arnold's facts and figures, in view of the contemplated appointment of a select committee to consider the further claims of the Queen's descendants upon the national purse. By the granting of an annuity to Princess Beatrice, Her Majesty is relieved of any anxiety, respecting the income of her sons and daughters, but the question now arises what provision, if any, is to be made for her grandchildren. There is a notion abroad that the Queen, owing to the careful handling of her money, and her retirement from public life, has become possessed of vast wealth. The passing of an act in 1862 enabling the Sovereign to hold and dispose of private estates, gave rise to this conjecture. A glance at the civil list and the claims upon a monarch render it very doubtful whether the Queen has been able to lay by a store anything like sufficient to place her very numerous grandchildren, beyond the need of State assistance. The Queen receives from the Civil list £385,000 per annum. Of this sum about £60,000 is apportioned to the privy purse, which, together with the revenue of the Duchy of Lancaster, brings Her Majesty's personal income up to £140,000 a year. That is, supposing the remaining £320,000 derived from the Civil List no more than meets the claim upon it. The Queen's establishments are neccessarily expensive, and unlike a private lady, she cannot reduce them to counterbalance calls upon her purse in other directions. Windsor, Buckingham Palace, Osborne and Balmoral, have to be cared for, not to mention two or three private palaces, one of which is to be placed at the disposal of Princess Beatrice, who by all accounts, is to remain near her Royal mother, in keeping with the adage, "A son's a son till he marries a wife, But a daughter's a daughter all the days of her life. The Queen's purse needs to be pretty capacious. The officers of the royal household, over one hundred in number, receive in salaries £52,000 a year. In addition, there are some five hundred persons engaged in and about the Queen's palaces, whose pay and allowances must swallow up a considerable sum. And yet these are merely items of royal expenditure. If asked to make provision for some of the Queen's grandchildren, people will naturally turn their attention to liabilities already incurred. The total annuity voted by Parliament for the sons and daughters of the Queen amounts, Mr. Arnold tells us, to £157,000, but by the death of the Duke of Albany and Princess Alice the payment has been reduced to £132,000 a year. According to precedence the children, not only of the Prince of Wales, but also of the Dukes of Edinburgh, Connaught, and Albany will be entitled to annuities. In fact, it has been the custom for Parliament to grant an annuity to every Royal personage, as evidenced by the payment of £12,000 a year to the Duke of Cambridge, and annuities of £3,000 each to his two sisters, Princess Mary of Teck and the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz. Princely families are more numerous to day than, formerly, and a doubtful succession is not likely to be one of the troubles of the near future. How the altered circumstances can best be met remains to be seen. The antiquated and obsolete procedure of the Royal household, perhaps, stands in need of reform and curtailment, which might leave a surplus in the Royal income. Mr. Arnold thinks the Grandson of the Sovereign, like the Grandson of a Duke, should become an untitled commoner, as follows when the Queen's daughter marries a subject not of Royal blood, which would, in fact, have been the position of the Princess Louise's children had she been blessed with a family. Parliament, it will thus be seen, has a delicate matter in hand. Out of respect for one who has proved herself a wise administrator, loving wife, and model mother, nothing, we may rest assured, will be done to cause pain to the amiable lady who, for close upon half a century, has wielded the sceptre of this mighty Empire.

Bad Habits.

Like flakes of snow, that fall unperceived upon the earth, the seemingly unimportant events of life succeed one to another As the snow gathers together, so are our habits formed. No single flake that is added to the pile produces a sensible change; no single action creates, however it may exhibit, a man's character; but, as the tempest hurls the avalanche down the mountain and overwhelms the inhabitant and his habitation, so passion, acting upon the elements of mischief, which pernicious habits have brought together by imperceptible accumulation, may overthrow the edifice of truth and virtue.—Bentham.

"Which do you like the best, Miss Florence, rowing or driving?" he asked as he gazed into her azure eyes. "Oh, driving, by all means." "Why?" "Because you have to use both hands to row." They went driving.

FROM JEST TO EARNEST.

The Happy Outcome of a Proof-Reader's Prank.

One hot night last July, when the burden of proof-reading in a close room in the office of the Kansas City Times seemed almost suffocating, when the hot air of blazing gas-burners and the stifling fumes from fifty jets over types' cases seemed beyond human endurance, Dick Shanks might have been seen working as only night-fiends on morning papers can work, gazing intently at the agate and nonpareil takes, deciphering bad manuscript and laboriously contributing his share to make a morning paper. With fevered brow and tired eyes the old copy-holder toiled on through the busy rush of a "heavy" night, gazing through his spectacles to catch a turned "o" or a wrong-font "a." About 3.30 there was a slack in the run of copy, and while Shanks and his fellow-workmen were waiting for other proofs, he began to tell how night-work was wearing on him, how he could not sleep through the hot days, and yet how dependent he was upon his small salary for livelihood! He longed to leave the desk, and told how he had lost a fortune in the war and now had to work like a slave; that he was poor and discouraged with his condition, and he did not care how soon the good angel called him to another world. A few minutes later than this the proof-reader who sat beside him came to a little telegraph "take" which said something about a vast fortune in Kentucky. Thinking he could have a little fun by inserting his companion's name in the dispatch, the proof-reader added in a few lines on the manifold paper of the dispatch these words:

"The only known heir of the Kentucky Shanks is R. L. Shanks, a proof-reader, supposed to be working like a slave on the Times."

The copyholder read it and laughingly put it in his vest pocket, where it remained for many months. Of course no one ever dreamed that there was a word of truth in the silly prank of a leisure hour, but it has now come to light that every word of that manufactured telegram is true. Mrs. Shanks one day found the telegram in her husband's vest pocket, and asked what it meant. Just for fun he said it was a true telegram which he had received. She told a sister-in-law, and this sister-in-law wrote to Stanford, Lincoln Co., Ky., to know if it was so. The answer came that there was a fortune there for the heirs of David L. Shanks, formerly of Virginia; that he had at one time owned a number of shares in a turnpike road. He died in 1841, and the annual dividends had accumulated and been in the public treasury ever since, and that the heirs could not be found. When Dick Shanks saw that letter he knew that his father, who died just before Dick was born was the former owner of those shares, his name was David L., and he came from Virginia. The story is a long one, but it is enough to say that subsequent communication with the State Treasurer and county officials has placed Dick Shanks' identity without a doubt as the heir of three-fifths of the entire fund, which has been accumulating for over forty years. The case is in the hands of Mr. C J. Bower, of this city, and Dick will soon have his money. —[Kansas City Journal.

An Effectual Remedy.

Theophilus Parsons, the most eminent of the chief justices of Massachusetts, died in 1813 under circumstances so peculiar as to cause sharp comments in the community and differences of opinion among the doctors. He had been suffering from a general increasing debility when he began to be troubled by an irritating humor. This increased until it spread around all his body. This irritation was violent and constant, accompanied by some fever. It harassed him the more because it was a new thing, as he never before had the slightest eruption. He could not eat or sleep, and was wearied and then ill and kept his chamber. Dr. Rand, his physician, whose prescriptions thus far had given no relief, said one day, "There is a remedy, if you like to try it, which is sometimes extremely efficacious."

"What is it?" "Water, almost scalding. Take a bath of water just as hot as you can possibly bear it, and lie there as long as you can. I have known it to cure skin disease almost at once." The chief justice was ready to try anything. His son, who put him in the bath, afterward said it was so hot he could not bear his hand in it, and that he begged his father to have it made cooler. But no, he got in although shrinking and evidently suffering extremely. He stayed there an hour and then returned to his bed. The humor appeared to almost dry up at once, and in a day or two was all gone, and in three weeks the eminent magistrate was dead.

Monday Luck.

Friday, as every one knows, has for many years been regarded by many as an unlucky day. But there are other days of the week which are regarded as more or less unlucky, and not a few look upon Monday as indicative of what they may expect during the following days of the week as to their business. There is a large class who will bemoan a dull Monday, and some of them will court good luck by selling to the first customer who appears Monday morning at a nominal figure. Others have for various reasons selected other days of the week as lucky or unlucky. From the number of marriages on Thursdays and Tuesdays it would appear that those days are regarded as happy ones by the matrimonially inclined. The question of the influence particular days may have upon the luck of a couple does not, however, appear to enter the minds of those who run away from their homes for the purpose of marrying.

THE MODERN HIGHWAY.

Interesting Items of Railway News from Various Sources.

The Nictaux & Atlantic Railway (N. S.) company have completed their financial arrangements in London, and that work will be pushed forward vigorously to completion. The rails have been purchased and will be shipped forthwith.

Mr. George Stephen, President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, has assured Hon. Mr. Norquay, Premier of Manitoba, that the Manitoba, and South Western Railway will be extended to White Lake puring the present year.

The Indian government proposes, with a loan of $50,000,000, sanctioned by parliament, to rapidly strengthen the railway system of India in both a commercial and military sense. There will be expended $10,500,000 in constructing a railway west of the Indus, $10,000,000 will be laid out in building another railway on the east side of the Indus, including a ferry across that river, $2,000,000 will be used in the building of a bridge, $1,000,000 will be spent in the construction of another road on the west side of the Indus, and crossing the Pisseen plateau, and $1,000,000 will be expanded on still another line west of the Indus.

Who shall say that the love of the beautiful is not gradually permeating all sections of the community when we find a railway company supplying their employes with regulation neckties of a uniform and artistic type? This is what the South-Western Railway Company have just done, and doubtless other companies will follow the example that has been set. The neckties in question are in color a brilliant red, and have the effect of making the South-Western porters look almost picturesque. But the object of the red neckties is partly æsthetic and partly utilitarian. They are supposed to provide a ready-made and easily accessible danger signal. If ordinary signals go wrong, the South-Western guard or porter has only to divest himself of his necktie and wave it in front of an advancing train to indicate that danger is ahead. Travellers by this line will pray that the occasions when porters' neckties have to do duty as emergency danger signals may be few and far between. In the meantime anything which brightens up one's everyday surroundings is a matter for gratitude.

Passengers on the sleeping-cars of the New York Central Railroad have wondered where the company secured so many hollow-eyed and haggard conductors. Conductor Hanson, of the St. Louis express, went to sleep while walking along the platform at the depot here, and narrowly escaped being run over by a dummy engine. Passengers who have asked the conductors for more bedclothes have seen the functionaries start off to get the covering and go to sleep on the way. Conductor Foster reached up to pull the bell-rope the other night while nearing Elmira and went asleep with his hand on the cord. The train ran three miles beyond the station before he woke up, and it had to be backed to Elmira. The cause of the general broken-up appearance of the conductors and their peculiar actions was explained. Eight of them sent in their resignations and went home to go to bed. They claim that Dr. Webb, Mr. Vanderbilt's son-in-law, who was recently appointed superintendent of the road, has been working them too hard. Conductors on the St. Louis express are required to be up five nights in the week and do all the work, while the colored porters crawl into a berth and go to sleep.

A few nights ago, as the eastbound Chicago express on the Erie Railway was approaching Waverly, a mishap occurred which obstructed the rear car in the train. This car is the through Pullman sleeper from Chicago to Boston, which is transferred at Binghampton to the Boston connection. In the hurry and hubbub caused by the accident, three passengers who were in the car were transferred to other cars in the train which went on to Binghampton, leaving the Boston car to be extricated from its trouble. After the obstructions were removed and the car was in readiness for use when it should be called for, the discovery was made that there was a passenger sleeping peacefully in one of the berths. He was aroused. He produced a through ticket for Boston. He had slept all through the hubbub of the accident. He said he wasn't to blame for the accident. All he wanted was to go on to Boston, as he had a ticket that agreed to see him through on that train. Without parley or delay a locomotive was attached to the car. The passenger turned over and went to sleep again. The car was whisked over the road between Waverly and Binghampton on special time, and the solitary and soundly-sleeping man from Boston was landed there in time for his connection.

The scheme for connecting Ireland and Scotland by a tunnel from Portpatrick to Donaghadee has now (says a London correspondent) taken a definite form. A company has been formed for the purpose of promoting the scheme, and it is said that the total cost of the tunnel will not exceed six millions. Mr. James Brunlees, the well-known engineer, states that the work may be done within reasonable limits of time and cost, and a boring of 1000 feet deep is to be made in each end of the proposed tunnel in order to discover the character of the formation through which the tunnel would pass. The greatest depth of the Channel is 780 feet. The effect of the tunnel would be to bring Belfast within 390 miles of London, Moville within 450, and Dublin within 478. The distance between London and Dublin by Holyhead is, of course, shorter; but there being no channel passage, the journey could be accomplished by the tunnel in considerably less time than by the Holyhead route. By the tunnel, Glasgow would be brought within 121 miles of B... fast. Probably, also, the whole of the Atlantic steamers, instead of going round by the south of Ireland, and calling at Queenstown, would go by the north and land mails and passengers at Moville.

A Blue Book issued recently contains returns of accidents and casualties as reported to the Board of Trade by the several railway companies in the United Kingdom during the year ended December 31, 1884. In the twelve months the number of persons killed on the railways was 1134 (as compared with 1167 in the previous year), of whom 135 were passengers, 546 servants of companies or contractors, 65 persons passing over level crossings, 348 trespassers (including suicides), and 40 persons not coming in the above classification. The number of injured was 4100 (as compared with 4187 in 1883), of whom 1491 were passengers, 2319 servants of companies or contractors, 27 persons passing over level crossings, 187 trespassers (including would-be suicides), and 76 other persons not coming under these categories. In addition to the above, three passengers were killed and 114 injured whilst ascending or descending steps at stations; 39 injured by being struck by barrows, &c., on platforms; 2 killed and 30 injured by falling off platforms; and one killed and 58 injured from other causes. Of servants of companies or contractors 6 were killed and 982 injured whilst loading, unloading and sheeting waggons; 223 were injured whilst moving goods in warehouses, &c.; 3 killed, and 169 injured, whilst working at cranes or capstans; 3 were killed, and 322 injured, by the falling of waggon doors, lamps, bales of goods, &c.; 5 were killed, and 463 injured, by falling off or when getting on or off stationary engines or vehicles; 6 were killed and 223 injured by falling off platforms, &c.; and others were killed and wounded by various minor causes—making a total in this class of accidents of 52 killed and 3923 injured. Thus the total number of personal accidents reported by the railway companies during the year was 1186 killed and 8023 injured.

Alexandria and the Nile Delta.

Alexandria and its people have an Old World aspect, but strangely mingled with what is new; and though a modern city in comparison with some others in Egypt, it is historically old. Yet to the geologist its site, and the Delta on the margin of which it stands, are but of yesterday, and the stone, of which the mole and the houses are mostly built, is also of comparatively modern date. Except the shafts of columns and masses of stone brought down from Upper Egypt, there is nothing here so old as the London clay. The soft limestone and indurated sand of the vicinity of the city are of late tertiary age, probably older than the advent of man. The mud of the Delta stretching southwards of the city is most likely a deposit of the historical human period. What ever Egyptologists may make of muddled and uncertain lists of Egyptian kings, many of them evidently unhistorical, or contemporary heads of local tribes, the history of Egypt as a nation must begin after the Deluge. Anything previous must relate to antediluvian times. We may also assume, on the evidence so ably summed up by Rawlinson of the convergence of the history of all the ancient nations to a point about 3,000 years B. C. that the dispersion of men after the great flood is an event that occurred somewhat less than 5, 000 years ago. The only colonists who at that time made their way to the Nile valley must have found its conditions approximately similar to those that exist now, except in regard to the extent and level of the Delta. But we know from the marks left by the inundations of that early times that they were higher than at present whether because of a greater supply of water or because of the bed of the river not being so deeply cut or completely levelled as it afterwards became. We also know from the monuments that the early settlements of the Egyptians were on the Upper and Middle Nile, not on the Delta; that the earlier kings were much occupied with works of embankment and drainage; that the Delta, probably because of its lower level and less extent was less important than at present. As their history advances we find their capital moving from Upper Egypt to Memphis, and finally to cities far north on the Delta.

LATE MOTHER-IN-LAW JOKES.

Who is the most proficient housekeeper in the country? The young man's mother-in-law.

A man cannot be altogether bad when he can kiss his mother-in law a welcome when she comes to stay with him.

It is said that the first almanac was printed in 1640. That accounts for the gray hairs on the head of the mother-in-law joke.

"On account of the anniversary of the death of my mother-in-law I will take pictures at half-price to day," was the notice posted on the door of a Greenwich, Conn. photograph gallery last week.

Talk about mysteries!—both mother-in-law of a young married couple have been living with the latter over a week, and yet no separation has taken place.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has decided that a man has no insurable interest in his mother-in-law and cannot gamble on her life. This takes away the only attractive feature which has ever pertained to a mother-in-law.

Despair, utter and unspeakable, never darkens a man's soul until he discovers that his mother-in-law has taken to writing poetry, and wants him to find her a pretty and suggestive rhyme to "Saturday."

AVENGED:
R, CALM AFTER STORM.

He cannot ask the question; he can look at her more. With a longwn breath that is almost a sob, he ks into the nearest chair, and covers bronzed face with his strong shaking nds.

In an instant she drops upon her knees side him, all things forgotten at sight his keen pain but the desire to console and, if possible, to clear herself in eyes.

"Frank, dearest Frank," she cries h pathetic eagerness, twining her own ite fingers round the strong brown nds, and trying to draw them down, do not condemn me unheard; you ow nothing yet!"

He raises his head then, and she is cked to see how pale and drawn his e has grown in those few moments of ony. His deep blue eyes—her mother's
, and the only real beauty of Francis rmichael's face—look at her with a t of terror. The terrible shock of the e revelation has altogether unnerved n; he dreads all and hopes nothing m the story she has to tell.

"I know enough," he says, with a deep passion that is as condemnatory in its y as the fiercest anger or the coldest rn—"I know, poor child, how terrible must have grown to you when you ght refuge from it in a suicide's grave."
The red blood mounts swiftly to her ehead, and the sweet lips quiver; but re is none of the shame he dreads to in the clear steadfast eyes; they do not nk from his.

"It was so terrible, it turned my brain,
—I do not know—I think I wished to rly. But, Frank, there is no sin in past, nothing that I could blame myor blush for, only a great and cruel ng that blackens all my life with an deserved shame. Listen, dear, and shall judge for yourself."

Then, very quietly and clearly, with earnestness that finds the right word the right moment and gives her a ple and convincing eloquence, she tells the brief story of her life—her loneunloved girlhood, the glamour cast over simple school-girl by the brilliant nchman who taught her that she was more a child, the sudden closing of Misses Smerdon's school, the circumnces that led her guardians to urge on hasty and imprudent marriage—her year of weary and neglected wedded the summons to Paris, and the terri-shock awaiting her there.

The young man hears it all, a wonder-chaos of conflicting passions struggling the mastery within him. Deep, hear-rellef, passionate pity, burning indig-on, each in turn sways him, and all swallowed up in a loyal and tender all she has endured, the cruellest comes to Cressida now. She loves the man who holds her in such an inexorable clasp, whose eyes plead so passionately with hers, whose daring lips have used another eloquence than that of words. She loves him—she knows that now—as she has never loved before, will never love again, with the whole passion of her womanhood with the love that is her doom. But in proportion to her love is the intensity of her shame that he should so misconstrue and insult her, should thus tacitly acquiesce in the verdict that makes her less than a wife.

For a moment she struggles vainly in his strong clasp; then, hiding her crimsoning face, she breaks into a tempest of bitter tears.

Mr. Carmichael releases her instantly, his face growing stern and pale. He is angry with himself, and angry too with her.

"I beg your pardon," he says, with a savage kind of humility. "You still consider yourself to be that scoundrel's wife, and I retain my right to find and punish him."

Cressida cannot answer, for at this moment the door opens and Lady Gordon enters the room.

CHAPTER IX.—(Concluded.)

The handsome old lady comes quickly across to where Frank stands; she does not seem to notice the very evident agitation of her grandchildren; she is herself to the full as pale and distressed as they.

"Florence!" she says, seizing Mr. Carmichael's arm and speaking with a painful sort of gasp. "Oh, Frank, what will your father say!"

Absorbed in his own moody thoughts, the young man has hardly heeded her entrance, hardly hears what she says. But with a quicker intelligence Cressida reads the dazed horror in the proud old face, sees the slip of paper in the shaking old hand, and makes a quick guess at the truth.

"It is a letter from Florence; read it, Frank," she says, in a rapid whisper, as she leads the trembling old lady to a chair.

Frank Carmichael obeys—that is, he takes the paper; but hardly have his eyes rested on the first lines when he grinds his teeth savagely and crumples the blotted letters to a ball in his fierce clasp.

"She has gone!" he cries, with a bitter laugh. "That scoundrel Frenchman has followed her to England, and she—great Heavens, that my sister should do this!"

"You must follow her, Frank, at once—thank Heaven, there is still time for that! The letters were not to have been given to us till the morning; but she had hardly left the house when her maid came to me with a full confession. They are to leave this station by the eight o'clock train, so you have still half a hour in which to follow and catch them."

"Thank Heaven!" cries the young man fervently—yet there is a grim determination mingling with his thanksgiving too. "I will go at once. If I know myself, this wicked, headstrong girl shall return with me. And, as for Monsieur St. Just——"

He pauses significantly—words fail him to express his opinion of the man who has so warped his young sister's mind; but the pause is strangely and terribly filled. A scream, shrill, piercing, agonized in its intensity, breaks from Lady Gordon's pale lips, and Cressida stands before him, looking, but for the vivid anguish of her eyes, like one fresh risen from the dead.

"St. Just! St. Just!" the former repeats wildly. "Who is he Frank? What is his Christian name?"

The young man looks from one to the other with angry frightened eyes.

"He is the man who came who came between Florence and my best friend—a man to whom my father forbade her to speak—a man I horsewhipped in Port Elizabeth: and his name is Isidore St. Just!"

"It is the same! Lady Gordon says in a terror-stricken whisper. "Oh, Cressida, it is——"

"Hush, grandmother!" Cressida says quietly. Her face is pale, but her eyes are bright, her every nerve is braced for action. She would not break down now were the pain at her heart twice as fierce and sore. "Take me with you, Frank!" she plead. "You will not refuse me this great favour, dear? Let me come with you to the station."

"He listens with a wordless pain in his blue eyes. All seems mystery and misery to the frank-hearted gentleman.

"Come, if you will, Cressida!" he says sadly. "I cannot guess your reason; but come!"

She just touches his clenched hand with her fingers, but the action is a caress that thrills through his whole frame.

"You will never be sorry, dear," she says earnestly; "for I know that, without scene or struggle I shall bring Florence—poor, misguided Florence—back."

He says no more. By the time she has donned her hat and scarf the carriage is at the door, and in a few seconds more they are driving swiftly and silently through the summer night.

* * * * * *

And in the meantime, oblivious alike of the misery they leave behind them and the grim fate that is tracking them down, the runaway pair are pacing the narrow platform of the little rose-grown country station, anxiously waiting for the coming of the train that is to bear them to a larger liberty, and a new love-lit life.

At least this is what Florence Carmichael pictures to her foolish fancy as she clings to her lover's arm and looks up into his dark handsome face with romantic adoration.

"You will never blame me for this, Isidore—never remind me that I disobeyed my father and turned my back upon my home, all for your sake!"

She puts the question, not coquettishly, but with a real and deep anxiety. She is feverishly excited, recklessly gay; but in her heart Florence is not happy. Remorse and self-disgust are stirring within her already, and she wants the charmer's voice to lull them once more into their dangerous sleep.

Monsieur St. Just smiles fondly into the soft dark eyes, presses the little hand against his side, and knows his easy victory is won. His only sensation is a sylvan triumph. He knows the money-value of his prize, and he tastes already the sweets of his victory over the proud father and brother who had rejected his pretensions with such intolerable scorn.

"Blame you!" he echoes, with a fervent tenderness that does great credit to his histrionic abilities. "My beautiful queen, I will thank you to my life's end for your love and trust in me. Hark!"—dropping suddenly from high-flown fervour to practical common-place. "I must be later than I thought, there is the signal for the train!"

"Not ours," Florence answers, with a careless backward glance at the drooping arm of the semaphore; "that is the signal for the down express which is due in five minutes more."

Isidore mentally consigns the down express and every other object that stands between him and the journey on which he is so anxious to start to perdition. But he murmurs the softest love-words in the girl's credulous ear, and once more the remorse he vaguely guesses to be stirring within her is charmed and lulled to sleep.

It is a soft misty evening; the moon is slenderest crescent, and the stars are just beginning to twinkle faintly through a gray vaporous haze. The station is still enough for the few passengers who will travel by the slow up train have not yet made their appearance, and porters are not needed for the down express; but the lovers are too deeply absorbed in each other to hear the sharp firm step that sounds upon the waiting-room floor, or the heavy swing of the opening door. They do not know that any one is with them till a hand closes with a vice-like clasp upon Isidore's shoulders, and Florence looks with startled eyes into her brother's stern set face.

He does not address her, although he draws her quickly to him, feeling as though he drew her from under the trampling feet of some infuriated animal. It is on the cowed and frightened Frenchman that his eyes rest with a blazing scorn and anger, it is to him that he speaks in tones of bitterest contempt.

"Coward and thief! Could neither my whip nor the money with which my father bribed you teach you to keep your distance—or your word?"

Isidore St. Just is at heart a coward; but he is at bay now, and submission will serve him no more. He sees Florence wince and whiten at her brother's scathing words—sees how eagerly she looks to him to deny the charge they bring—and knows he cannot. What then is left him but the insolent defiance that will at least relieve the swelling bitterness of his heart?

"Tut, mon cher!" he says, forcing a smile to his white lips, and looking away from Miss Carmichael with an uneasy glitter in his restless dark eyes.

"We are not at the theatre of which your talk savours too much. You have essayed to bully me, to entrap your sister, to force us both to submit to your arrogant will! Eh, vien"—with the facile shrug he uses so eloquently—"We have counter-schemed and counter-plotted! I do not deny the charge. Why should I? Your proverb says that in love and war all things are fair. We love so deeply, mademoiselle and I, that we have dared take the future in our own hands and defy you all. She is no child, but a woman, strong, brave, and independent. If she keep her faith to me, who shall come between us?"

"I!"

It might be a voice falling from the stars, so strangely clear and solemn is the sound. It might be an accusing angel, or a woman risen from the dead, who comes forward from the shadows and stands in Isidore's path, with the faint moonbeams falling with ghostly effect upon the white dress and whiter stern-set face.

"I—Cressida your wife!" she repeats, in the same thrillingly monotonous voice, and moves a step nearer still.

Then a sudden mad terror seizes the guilty man's soul, and his eyes glare frenziedly round, and the clammy drops of a mortal agony cluster thickly on his brow. That he stands in the presence of flesh and blood he never for a second dreams. Two years ago he saw the Seine waters close over the girl whose life he had ruined, whose heart he had broken; and now she has come back from the dead to avenge her wrongs. All his life he has scoffed at religion, and now——

"Isidore!" she cries, bewildered by the stony horror of his look.

The sound breaks the spell that holds him; and, with a wild scream of abject terror, he flings his arms above his head, jumps from the platform, and dashes across the line, and then——

The scream is horribly echoed; there is a shrill whistle, a rush and roar of steam, and then the down express is flashing past on its journey, and all that is left of Isidore St. Just is a crushed and mangled fragment of humanity.

* * * * * *

"Cressida, my darling, it is the one wish of my heart. You will not let me die with that ungratified!"

Lady Gordon looks at her grand-daughter's face with fond fading eyes. All the hoarded love of the proud woman's life is lavished on Cressida. If she can but see the patient sadness vanish from the brown eyes, if she can but leave her grandchild happy, she will die content.

And she thinks she knows where that happiness lies. In the three years that have passed since freedom came to Cressida, through Isidore St. Just's terrible death, she has never ceased to hope that she would yet be Frank Carmichael's wife.

The hope that fills her she has imparted to her grandson, and Frank has for the second time told his love, and met with a firm but grateful refusal, which, protest as he may, he is compelled to accept.

"You are all that is generous and good and noble," Cressida says, when, a year after the event that has shadowed all their memories so darkly, he pleads with her again. "But it cannot be. I am not fit to be your wife. Go, dearest Frank, throw your whole heart into your work, and—forget me——"

He cannot doubt her steady purpose, despite the tears that sparkle in the soft dark eyes, despite the sudden quiver of the lips. He knows he must submit. But forget her?

"I will try," he says, half-savagely, half-sadly. And then he goes; and for two years they do not meet. And the ache in Cressida's heart grows sharper, and life grows grayer and emptier every day.

She feels very old, though she is not yet three-and-twenty, and envies her grandmother the painless fading that means the laying down of all burdens and the ending of all cares.

She stands now at the foot of the quaintly-carved couch on which Lady Gordon lies, with dreamy eyes, and face a shade paler than she is wont. It is hard to refuse that pitifully urged request and yet——

"Cressida, if Frank asks you again you will accept him? I ask no sacrifice, my darling, for you love him, and you have been three years a widow."

"Yes, I love him," the girl cries, a strange thrill of triumph in her swee' voice—"how dearly he will never know! It almost breaks my heart to refuse you; but how can I do this thing? If Florence, whom you call light and unstable and frivolous, thinks her life so stained and darkened by—by that man that she can never marry, think how much greater is the shadow over mine!"

She speaks with a painful agitation, and is as surprised as hurt to see the glad smile that lights Lady Gordon's withered face. She turns instinctively round, and the next instant is clasped in Frank Carmichael's arms. Vainly she struggles to escape; he bends his head to hers, his blue eyes are ablaze with triumph, his bronzed face radiant with joy.

"If that is all, my darling, my cause is more than won! Florence has seen the error of her ways; she will not let a schoolgirl's headstrong folly blight a woman's whole life. Next month she will be married to Clement Marshall, my father's aide-de-camp and right-hand man, who loved her before St. Just ever crossed her path. Now, Cressida, will you send me from you again?"

She does not answer; but she struggles no more.

She nestles contentedly against the strong heart that beats with so loyal a passion, and looks shyly up into the glad blue eyes; then in a flash she knows it is all real—real as the strong arms that enfold her, real as the betrothal kiss. She starts from his arms then, blushing rosy-red with a sweet happy shame.

"Children, come here," Lady Gordon says feebly; and, hand in hand, they kneel beside her. "Frank, she is yours!"

He meets the eager eyes, with a proud happy smile.

"Mine to love and honor for evermore!" he says triumphantly. "She shall pass out of the shadows now, grandmother; you may trust her to me."

"I do so gladly," the old lady answers with a little gasp; and then the pale lips move and the slender hands flutter momentarily over the bowed brown and golden heads. And Cressida knows that as earnest a benediction as earthly love can frame has rested upon this second betrothal of hers; and, knowing this, she ventures to remember that she is young and fair, loved and loving, and to dream of happiness once more.

THE END.

An Overheated Bat.

Early one December day, when the snow first began to fly, I was much surprised to see a silver haired bat fly into my hallway, having been unable, evidently, to find a place in which to lie dormant. It was a bitter cold night, and I placed the bat in a pasteboard box containing cotton, where he hung himself by his claws to one edge and went into his torpid sleep. After two weeks I told him to wake up for refreshments, but recieved no response. Then I placed him by the fire and he came to life, took some water, flew around the room, ate a dead fly which he found on the top of the library case, and finally attached himself to a pendant painting and again went into torpidity.

One month afterward I recalled his lonesome condition, took him down, and subjected him to heat. He seemed to be hopelessly gone. I held his nose to a mirror and, obtaining two faint spots of breath, placed him in the cotton-lined box on an ornament of the stove, and turned to my writing. Soon my attention was aroused by a dreadful odor. I looked around and discovered the box on fire. Before I could reach it, out sprang the bat, only to drop dead on the floor, evidently frightened or heated to death.

These and other facts show that torpidity is not caused by extreme cold, although the sensation is similar to that of freezing. Bears living in torpidity hibernate in a warm place, and for the same reason reptiles and frogs crawl into the mud to escape frost. Torpidity is a conundrum, and we give it up.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

"I hearn a sermon de odder Sunday," said Brother Gardner, as he rose up and nodded to Samuel Shin to turn down the lamps a little and economize on oil—"a sermon by a white clergyman dat I can't make fit me nohow. He 'lowed dat de world had grown wicked at de rate of ten per cent. per y'ar fur de last five y'ars, an' incidentially announced dat de increase of Bibles was 600,000 per y'ar, an' de increase of preachers about twelve per cent. He was pained to diskiver a growin' lethargy in de cause of religun, but announced dat 3,844 new churches war built last y'ar. He was made sad to learn dat crime was increasing all ober de world, but figgered dat twenty-two evangelists had been steadily at work seekin' to turn people frum de error of deir ways.

"I can't jist make it out. If the world am growin' wicked in the face of all dat Christianity am doin' dar's sumthin' wrong. If 4,000 new churches and 2,000 new preachers bring about a feeling of lethargy on de subject of Christianity, we'd better build mo' stores and fewer churches. If Moody and Sankey am increasin' crime instead of reducin' de record, dey had better be called in.

"De fack am, my friends, dar was no call fur sich a sermon, an' no pertickler cause to abuse de world. True Christianity am held in de same reverence as a hundred y'ars ago, but Christian-hypocrisy am easier to see frew. We am placed heah as free moral agents. If one man feels dat he can't be saved widout a sartin amount of singin' an' prayin' an' repentance he should be allowed his way. If anoder man holds dat he kin occupy a front seat in de circus widout a crime bein' charged up to him by de recordin' angel, you has no right to pitch into him. If religun am not a matter of conscience what am it? If conscience guides one man to de right an' anoder to de left, you has no right to admire one an' condemn de oder. 'Judge not that ye be not judged.'

"An' when you come to alverage up world it isn't so werry bad. Consider our ills—our burdens—our sorrows—our woes and disappointments—de numberless set-backs an' painful surprises human flesh am heir to, an' de man who steadfastly refuses to offend agin de law or de morals of society am worthy of all admiration.

"I want you to go to de circus, but doan' scandalize your naybur.

"I want you to go to de theater, but doan' use money dat should go to pay an honest debt.

"I want you to sing an' dance, but doan' skip Thursday evenin' prayer-meetin' to do it.

"I want you to keep yer eyes open in a hoss trade, but doan' let de contribushun-box pass widout your dime.

"I want you to sympathize wid de heathen of Africa, but keep a little money by you for de heathen in your own nayburhood. Let us now purceed to attack de bizness of de meetin'."

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

Under this head Maj. Cabal called up the case of the Hon. Whereas Jones, of Selma, Ala., who was dismissed from the club about a year ago for having been convicted of stealing 300 pounds of cotton. It seems that the Honorable was sent to prison for a year, but granted a new trial, and the decision of the lower court was reversed on the ground that the complaint did not include the stealing of the ties and bagging around the cotton. A new trial had taken place, and the prisoner had been acquitted on the grounds of insanity, and therefore felt at liberty to renew his application.

"Brudder Cabal, I fine you $700 an' costs!" said the President in his sternest tones. "Dar was no question but what de applicant stole de cotton, an' dat was de charge he was rejected on. De Supreme Court hunts fur technicalities; dis club hunts fur full pertricklers. If de applicant was insane when he stole de cotton he am barred out by de law. If he wasn't den he am a fraud who am barred out by de constitushun. I ar surprised, sah, to see you renderin' your assistance to such a case, an' I would advise you to wash your hands of it to once."

LOST AGAIN.

The Librarian submitted his quarterly report, showing the number of almanacs under his charge to be over 13,000, and to cover every year since 1856. There was hardly an evening that the patrons of the library did not discuss the subject of anatomy, and he would again recommend the purchase of a full-sized skeleton. He would prefer that of a murderer, but wouldn't be captious. The bones of the lawyer who defended the murderer, and almost made the jury believe him a very much abused angel, would fill the bill.

Whalebone Howker seconded the motion. He had a great curiosity to see where the bunion built its nest and hatched its young.

Trustee Pullback was also in favor of the purchase. He wanted to locate the spot where the cucumber colic got in its work. Elder Toots and several others favored the idea, but Brother Gardner struck the triangle and said:

"Anatomy might go well wid blacksmithin' or carpenter work, but I doan' see how it would help whitewashin'! De matter will be laid on de table, an' we will sing our closin' ode an' percolate homewards."

Precise young lady to her little brother: "Willie don't do that way. Don't kick the ankle of the table, you disturb me."

"A man and his wife may differ," says an essayist, with great gravity. They may, they may; and what's more they generally do.

Glenelg voters list for 1885 is out, being printed at this office. The council are highly pleased with the job. We compliment Mr. Black the Clerk for the excellent manuscript provided for the same.

MARKDALE was almost completely deserted on Monday, the 18th. The brass band left early in the morning for Flesherton, also Markdale L. O. L. while the citizens went east, west, north and south, but returned in the evening "right side up with care."

INSENDIARY FIRE.—On Thursday night the alarm bell sounded and it was soon discovered that the saw mill of Mr. O. Jull was in flames. There was a good deal of delay in bringing the hose to play on the fire, and the mill was soon destroyed. There is no doubt but this was the work of an incendiary. Mr. Jull is an earnest supporter of the Scott Act, and we learn that threats were made against him by some of the liquor party. The loss of Mr. Jull is serious, as there was no insurance, but such acts of persecution will only make the friends of the act more determined to punish the law breakers.—Orangeville Advertiser.

BOYS FOR CANADA.—Dr. Barnardo, of London, England, is sending out about the last week in July, a party of one hundered Boys for farm and other employment. Those desirous of engaging boys should apply early to Mr. Edward Duff, Superintendent, Hazel Brae, Peterborough, Ont.

A STRAWBERRY FESTIVAL will be held on Monday evening next, (July 20) at the residnce of Mr. G. Walker in Aid of Christ Church Building Fund. The ground will be illuminated. Music, Games, and Refreshments provided, gate open at 7 o'clock Admission 15 cents. All are cordially invited.

ARE YOU ONE OF THEM.—We have just taken a look through our Subscription list and find 306 subscribers in arrears. Now this is a very unsatisfactory and embarrasing state of affairs for us. Will each one kindly come forward with the needful, and thereby show us that you will not be one of them any longer.

Important to whom it may concern. All accounts and over due notes payable in my favor and not settled either by cash or satisfactory notes on or before the 25th day of the present month, will be placed in court for collection, positively no exception, do not look for further notice.

D. J. SHANAHAN.

WE learn from the Durham Chronicle that James Edge, Esq., is retiring from active life. Mr. Edge has been a successful farmer, and an honorable and efficient man in public affairs, which latter he has been identified with for thirty years in various degrees from Township Councillor to County Warden.

KICKED.—While Mr. Thos. Banks, of the 2nd Con. Glenelg, was attending to his horses on Friday last, one of them got loose in the stall and while trying to get it back to its place he received a rather severe kick in the face. His jaw bone was slightly fractured, and it will be a few days before he is able to resume his usual labors.—Grey Review.

Miss Laura Rorke, is prepared to give lessons in music on Piano or Organ, also in Drawing and Painting at reasonable terms. Having made a speciality of these studies while attending Ont. Ladies College. She respectfully solicits the patronage of the people of Markdale and vicinity. Rooms at the residence of Mrs. Austin. 258-4

THE LADIES' AID of the Markdale Methodist church will hold their annual garden party on Friday evening, the 24th July, at the residence of Mr. Wm. Armstrong, adjoining the village. This is perhaps the most beautiful location for a residence in the County and is well arranged for a lawn party. The Brass Band will be in attendance, and a splendid time is expected.

TRIMBLE'S Imported entire horse "Garfield," presented a magnificent appearance and attracted a large crowd of spectators as he passed through on his last round last week being completely deluged with ribbons of all shades and colors. Mr. Gilkinson, the manager, is a first class horseman, as shown by the excellent condition of the animal at the close of the season.

WE have received the fifteenth number of the Canadian Pictorial and Illustrated War News. The publishers have reduced the price to ten cents per copy thus placing it within the reach of all. It continues the following illustrations: Gallant Attack on Big Bear's Band by a handful of Mounted Police under Inspector Steele and Squadron Sergt.-Major Fury; The Steamer Marquis Poling off a Shallow in the Saskatchewan, from a sketch by Mr. F. W. Curzon, Special Artist of the Canadian Pictorial, with Gen. Middleton's Command; Portraits of Interest; The 91st (Col. Scott's) Battalion of infantry on Service; Military Views at Battleford, from sketches by Lieutenant R. Lyndhurst Wardmore, "C" Company Infantry School Corps. The price is ten cents per copy, obtainable from local booksellers and from the office of publication.

WE regret that our notice last week of the Orange men's Sunday service was in part incorrect, as one of the lodges worshipped in the Presbyterian church. The error was not ours, however, as we knew nothing of the arrangements until a prominent member of the order called and wished us to make a note of the service, which we gladly did, precisely as stated to us.

BEAR KILLED.—A bear was seen in the vicinity of Mount Forest on Saturday a week ago, and about twenty-five huntsmen turned out. After an exciting chase the bear was shot by Geo. Wait, and the party returned home with dangling from a pole. The carcass was made into steak and the skin and head given to A. McEwan, who will have it stuffed and set up in his museum.—Grey Review.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Three young men named Henry Newell, Edward Stiver, and Wm. Moore, of the centre line of Osprey, went out shooting on Saturday last. Newell, the deceased, had his gun standing beside him at full cock, and Stiver was standing at his side engaged in loading his gun when it accidentally struck the other and discharged it, the whole charge entering Newell's jaw causing instantaneous death. The deceased was about 22 years of age, and was highly respected. The funeral was held on Monday last. The services were conducted by the Sons of Temperance of which the deceased had been an active member. —Shelburne Free Press.

THE School Festival of the Town Line Church, held in Mr. Hawkins' grove was a most successful affair. The superior quality of the good things provided reflected great credit on the ladies. After the young people had enjoyed themselves with swings and games, Mr. E. Moore, Superintendant of the School took charge of the Programme. Excellent recitations were rendered by three of the children Short addresses were delivered by Messrs. Lyons, Moore, Martin, Hawkins, Logan, Brown, Grandy and Casson. The choir sang some very choice pieces. The proceedings were closed by the National Anthum. Procoods about $18.

ANOTHER OLD MARE.—Mr. Jas. Dowsett of Leeds County, Township Basterd, writes to us and says that he owened an aunt of Mr. John Whitbys old mare for 29 years and she worked 28 years of that time, and died three years ago, in her 32nd year she was also without blemish, active and smart until death. She spent the last nine years of her life-time in hauling milk for her owner to the cheese factory, to the value of three thousand dollars. Mr. D. comes short of owning her as long as Mr. Whitby by two years. Strange coincedence that those two mares has been drove together many times in Leeds County BANQUET.—About forty sat down to a sumptuous and toothsome spread at the Markdale House on Wednesday evening to do honor to Mr. W. L. Young on the occasion of his departure on a trip to Scotland. After the wants of the inner man were replenished, Mr. A. Turner took the chair, which position he filled with credit to himself and satisfaction to all, and the usual toasts were drank, in cold water, and responded with more than ordinary ability, seasoned with a superabundance of wit and humor, during which the guest of the evening was presented by R. S. Rae, Esq., on the part of Markdale C.O.O.F., of which Mr. Young is a worthy member, with a beautiful Oddfellow's Seal. Time and space prevents us doing justice in our report, it was however a grand success throughout, showing to a demonstration the high respect of the citizens of Markdale for Mr. Young.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

Edward's Dream.

Want of reflection, rather than a purpose to give trouble and do wrong, was the fault of Edward Martin. Truth, it is but just that we should in favor of a lad who was, to his poor widowed mother, a daily source of trial.

Edward never seemed to think of others; or, we should say, how his conduct would affect others. Reckless, impulsive, and noisy, he kept all in excitement around him. His appearance at home, after school, was always the beginning of disorder, or the signal for trouble. He could not pass his younger brothers or sisters without putting his hand upon them in an improper manner; nor could he see them enjoying themselves without some kind of interference.

Thus Edward made himself the disturber of the household.

As we have said he was a great trial to his poor mother, whose health was feeble, and who, in order to keep her children around her, toiled daily beyond her strength.

One afternoon Edward came dashing into the house, in his usual boisterous manner, slamming the door behind him with a loud jar rattling and stamping up the stairs with a noise that resembled more the trampling of a horse than anything else. At the landing above, he met his brother Harry, whom he saluted with a pinch on the ear, and set the little fellow to screaming violently. As he entered the sitting-room he deliberately kicked over a house which Charley had just built with patient ingenuity out of some blocks which had been given to him; and, siezing Anna's doll, he threw it roughly to the top of a clothes press.

The consequence was, that all three children were set to crying.

"Edward!" A feeble voice called to the lad from the adjoining room. It was the voice of his mother.

Knowing that he would be reproved for his conduct, Edward did not obey the call, and waited for it to be repeatod three or four times before answering his mother.

"What do you want?" came then, rudely and undutifully, from his lips.

"I want you" There was something unusual in the tone of Mrs. Martin's voice. It was not angry nor reproving, but low and very sad.

Edward felt, instantly, sorry for what he had done, and spoke a few soothing words to his brothers and sister, though with little effect. Then he went into his mother's chamber. He found her lying upon her bed, and looking very pale and troubled.

"The children were quiet and happy until you came in, Edward."

There was, to the ear of the boy, a still deeper sadness in his mother's voice. He did not attempt to excuse himself, for he felt that he had done wrong—but stood silent, with his eyes upon the floor.

"Edward," resumed Mrs. Martin, "it is not very long that I have to stay with you. When I am dead, you will remember the pain you gave your mother, and this will be a sad recolection."

The mother's voice trembled; then she burst into tears and hid her face in the pillow.

Edward's feelings were touched. He stood, for a few moments, near his mother, and then slowly moved away. He felt sorry for what he had done. Passing through the adjoinidg room, he went up to the garret, where he slept, and with a sigh laid himself across his bed. He seemed to have been lying there only a few minutes, when he was surprised by the entrance of a stranger who said to him, abruptly:

"Your mother is dead!"

Starting up, Edward ran down-stairs, where he met a crowd of persons going into the chamber he had just left. He followed. One glance at the pale, death-stricken face of his mother sufficen.

Uttering a cry of grief, the unhappy boy threw himself beside the lifeless form of his parent. Oh! what a crowd of rebuking memories now thronged through his mind! Every unkind act and word came up before him, and they filled his heart with unutterable, yet unavailing grief. She who had so loved him and so suffered through his unkindness, had passed away. He would see her no more—would never again hear her loving voice. What would he not then nave given to be able to recall the past?

"Oh my mother! my mother!" he cried. "Come back! come back to me! I will never grieve you again!"

Suddenly there was a change. A light seemed to break around him. He started up and found himself in his garret room, with the last rays of the setting sun looking in upon him.

"Was it only a dream!" he murmured, as his panting breast rose and fell and he gazed doubtingly around him. "Was it only a dream or is my mother really dead?"

Not until he had hurried down to his mother's room and looked upon her living face, was Edward fully satisfied that he had been asleep. She lay in a quiet slumber; but there were tears upon her pale cheeks. A little while he stood bending over her, and then, obeying the impulse of his heart, he awakened her with a fervent kiss.

"I will try to be good, mother; indeed I will," came earnestly from his lips.

"Only try, my son," said the mother, [illegible] "and [illegible]" "I will try, my mother, and we shall all be happy."

"I will, I will," promised the [illegible] and from that boy.

And since that time, the thoughtless Edward Martin has been one of the kindest of brothers and most obedient of sons.

A Tiger Story.

Here is a perfectly true tiger story, illustrating the effect of the human eye on the lower animals and more especially of the inscrutable goodness of Providence in dangers from which weak mortals, who do not put their faith or trust in Him to whom all things are possible, would think there was no escape.

A man, who shall be nameless, was on a journey in connection with his business which had to be accomplished in a given time. To save time he planned going through a small island, the centre he knew to be a dense jungle, the abode of tigers.

He, however, changed his mind and thought he would take the longer route round the island. But again at the last moment he found it necessary to adhere to his original arrangement, and accordingly started alone and unarmed to go through the jungle.

It was day when he started, and he hurried on anxious to complete the journey before night set in with its dangers. But night at last began to fall and he had still a good way to go before he reached his home. He heard the roaring of the tigers coming nearer, yet nearer, and still he pressed forward.

He heard them circling roun', ever coming near. Tigers never go straight to their prey, but circle round and round, always making the rounds smaller until they spring, and then there is no escape from their terrible grip.

Still they came and he could see their eyeballs glaring in the dim light. He knew that one false step would have been his death. He kept on and on, never flinching, though with yells they fawned round his feet, looking up in his face. On he pressed with a strength given to his trembling limbs for the time, and still the awful brutes glared in his face with their bloodshot eyeballs looking as though they thirsted for blood.

Steadily, with his eyes looking straight before him (he had peculiarly glistening black eyes), he pressed on, when through the gloom he saw a bright light which he knew was his home, and the tigers only left him when almost at his door. His wife opened the door, and he walked past her and sat down without a word, and so changed was his face with the dreadful hour's terror that his wife did not know him. It was two hours before he was able to utter a word. Terror had paralyzed his speech, and he had kept on walking mechanically.

He was never the same man in health after that.

Some Original Proverbs.

A white lie often makes a black story.

It's a poor musician who can't blow his own trumpet. He who would eat the egg must first break the shell. Every back has its pack. Pens and ink out of reach avoid many a breach. Look after your wife; never mind yourself, she'll look after you. The present is the child of the past and the parent of the future. The want of money is the root of much evil. Egotism is an alphabet with one letter. If you'd know a man's character, follow him home. Better a line of sense than a page of nonsense. The surest road to honor is to deserve it. Only whisper scandal and its echo is heard by all. It's not the clock with the loudest tick that goes the best. Sighs are poor things to fly with. Home is the rainbow of life. Don't complain of the baker until you have tasted his bread. They who live in a worry invite death by hurry.

It Saved My Wife's Life.

This is the report of a Princess street gentleman who had the opportunity a few nights since of testing Polson's NERVILINE, the great pain cure. Be prepared for any emergency by having a bottle of Nerviline at hand. It only costs 10 cents to test it, as you can buy test bottles at any drug store. Get a 10 or 25 cent bottle to-day. Sure in rheumatism, neuralgia, cramps, colic, headache. Nerviline, the sure pop pain cure. All druggists, 25 cents a bottle.

Our grand business in life is not to see what lies dimly at a distance, but to do what lies clearly at hand.

MESSRS. TUCKETT & SON are often asked to sell their "Myrtle Navy" tobacco to retail dealers. They never, in any case do so, and for the best of reasons. The wholesale trade of the country have a distributing machinery which handles the "Myrtle Navy" without any addition to its permanent expenses. If the manufacturers were to undertake that work, as they would by selling to the retail trade, it would require an independent machinery, the whole cost of which would have to be borne by the proceeds of the tobacco sales, and of course it would fall upon the consumer Selling to the wholesale trade alone, is, therefore, for the consumer's benefit, and is a convenience to the retail trade, because every traveller who calls—in the grocery line—can take orders for "Myrtle Navy."

[illegible]'s Statue Of "Liberty Enlightening the World."

[illegible] reminder of personal liberty for [illegible] come. On just as sure a foundation has Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" been placed, and it will stand the [illegible] cycles of time as a monument to the physical emancipation of thousands, who by its use have been relieved from consumption, consumptive night-sweats, bronchitis, coughs, spitting of blood, weak lungs, and other throat and lung affections.

Beads of lead and wood are in much favor for trimming waists, fronts of skirts, and mantles.

"That Miss Jones is a nice-looking girl, isn't she?"

"Yes, and she'd be the belle of the town if it wasn't for one thing."

"What's that?"

"She has catarrh so bad it is unpleasant to be near her. She has tried a dozen things, and nothing helps her. I am sorry, for I like her, but that doesn't make it any less disagreeable for one to be around her."

Now, if she had used Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, there would have been nothing of the kind said, for it will cure catarrh every time.

Halcyon Day.

How varied the range of association upon the human mind. Memory is ever fond of preserving pictures of events but the character of such events must be different to meet the peculiarities of the individual. The pleasant recollections of one would fail to find a place in the memory of another, but to our mind the halcyon days are those that follow the use of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, the same safe and painless corn cure, for it promptly relieves the misery by removing aching corns. Try Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, and see that no substitute is palmed off as genuine.

FOR THE FARMER.

Farming.

If we consider what farming is, or what it ought to be, we will come to the conclusion that farming ought to be the managing of land so as to keep it in condition to pay for occupancy. There may be some land that will pay for occupation that will not pay for cultivation—that is, some tracts of country which from the nature of the soil, from the price of labour, and from its adaptability to remain in perpetual grass, would be exceeding well for grazing of any kind of live stock, dairying or fattening, and for which good growing money could be made. This would be farming; and a system of cultivation and course of cropping on good, free working land, which would keep the soil rich in plant food and allow enough for selling to cover expenses and pay interest on capital, and also a profit to the occupier, would be farming, and good farming, too. Therefore it is easy to say what farming is; but robbing the land is not farming. It is a running down of the land. Many men have purchased a fine tract of land and accumulated a competency from the abundant crops of new virgin soil produced, but if they continue to take crop after crop without the system of reimbursing it for the drain upon its productive powers, they are not farmers in the strict sense of the word, but real despoilers of the country's wealth, and all such are deserving of severe censure. Farming, to be worthy of the name, should be conducted so that the manure made on the farm be applied to produce a very heavy quantity of some nutritious food for cattle or sheep; thus the converting of such a heavy growth of vegetable food into dung and urine adds to the richness of the soil, so that a rotation can permit the sale of some valuable crop, and the end of the term will find the land better than before and the manure made on the farm will have increased, because the produce from which it has been made has been more, and consequently, on an improving system, the manure will augment in proportion to the crops. Market gardening is not farming, fruit-growing is not farming, for horticulture and agriculture are not one and the same thing. Near any great supply of manure from livery stables and other city sources, of course the land can be compensated, and, indeed, be forced to such a degree of fruitfulness that is of no consequence how frequently crops of the most exhaustive character succeed each other. Farming requires to be carried on as all other ways of successful business are. A shopkeeper or business man will keep such articles as are in demand and that will sell readily; and if the farmer finds that fine, powerful draught horses are in demand, or good milch cows, or hogs, or sheep, and pay those who raise them, he has only to use common sense to make his farm pay. Do not go it blind, but keep posted and direct your efforts toward sure ones.

Two Enemies of Sheep.

The shepherd should now carefully watch his flock to preserve it from attacks of the green blow flies. These pests lay their eggs, in fact deposit the living larvæ, upon the soil spots about the sheeps' tails, and when, by the carelessness of the shepherd, who should clip the sheep and lambs in these parts at this season and by every means keep them clean, these grubs get a lodgement immediate efforts should be made to get rid of them. The best thing to be done is to mix raw linseed oil and kerosene in equal parts and to add enough carbolic acid that the oil to give it a strong odor—1 per cent. is enough—and smear the fly-blown parts with the mixture. If the wool is too long this should be clipped off. It is not rare that neglected sheep are literally devoured alive by these pests, which soon spread all over the sheep and eat it to the bones.

Soon will be the season when the sheep will be worried with the gadfly—the parent of the grubs which infest the heads of these poor suffering animals. It is easier to prevent the attacks of these flies than to get rid of the grubs. This is done by providing a long, narrow V-shaped trough, so deep and narrow that the sheep cannot reach the bottom with their tongues without pressing their noses to the sides of the trough. Some tar is spread in the bottom of the trough and a mixture of pine tar with a little raw linseed oil to make it softer is brushed on each side of the trough. This adheres to the sheeps' noses and destroys every egg they may deposit. It is necessary to renew the tar mixture, so as to keep it soft, and to keep the trough protected from the sun, which would quickly harden the tar. This is better than cutting through the bone of the face into the frontal sinus to take out the grubs.

Sundry Suggestions.

A mixture of lard and snuff is the California remedy for lice on stock. This ointment does not need to be applied to the whole animal, but a ring of it two or three inches wide completely around the neck will have the desired effect.

An easy way to kill plantain, dandelion, and other weeds in a lawn is to place a little sulphuric acid with a stick on the crown of each plant, carrying the acid in an open-mouthed bottle with a long handle, so as not to touch it with fingers or clothes.

Both millet and Hungarian grass are hot-weather plants; the former, requiring a rather longer season, should be sown earlier. In fact, it is better to sow both as early as possible after warm weather begins. Hungarian will ripen if sown July 1, or even later, but it cannot be cured so easily late in the fall as when it can be cut during warm weather. The late sown will be maturing during the droughts which often occur the last of August and the first of September, and which are just what are needed to dry a crop of succulent thick stems of grass into hay.

The breast collar differs from the usual neck collar worn by working horses in bearing less on the shoulder. It is more suitable for light work, driving on the road in single harness, than for heavy loads. But it is often handy to have a breast collar with extra wide breast piece to work horses in should their shoulders begin to be galled with their usual harness. If this is done great care must be exercised, as the new collar will bear on a place that has probably not been roughened by use.

A horse with a high ridge on the top of his head will be balky unless very carefully treated. This ridge is located on the phrenological bump of firmness, and in the horse at least, this indication is to be avoided. A horse broad in the forehead will be generally intelligent and kind.

Notable Earthquakes.

The recent earthquake in the United States, recalls those of a more remarkable character.

The most notable and disastrous earthquakes on record, it may be said, are those of Italy (526), when 120,000 persons perished, and of Sicily (1693), when 60,000 lost their lives. According to Gibbon, toward 542 each year was marked with the repetition of earthquakes of such duration that Constantinople was shaken about forty days—of such extent that the shock was communicated to the whole surface of the empire. At Antioch a quarter of a million persons are said to have perished. This period of earthquake and plague (542-7) was the period when the superior planets were in perihelion, as they are now. Arabian and Persian chronicles record 111 earthquakes between the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, some lasting from forty to seventy days, and nearly all accompanied by winds or floods, or terrible storms of lightening or thunder. Readers of the "Relations des Jesuites" will remember the great earthquakes of 1663, which shook and tossed the earth for six months from Gaspe to Montreal, the rival of our own earthquake of 1811 on the Mississippi Valley. The severest of the earthquakes felt in this region was that of November, 1755, an echo of the convulsion that tumbled down Lisbon—and saved the Pomba ministry, through the fact that the minister's house was almost the only one left uninjured, and his family one of the few not bereaved of a member.

Hein, in his interesting opuscule on earthquakes, estimates that on an average two earthquakes a day occur on the earth.

In 1870, though there was no severe single shock, 2,225 houses were destroyed or greatly damaged in Italy, 98 persons killed, 223 wounded. The same shock may last for years; instance that of Viege in the Valais, which endured from July, 1855, to 1857. At Cabul 31 severe shocks have been felt in one day; at Honduras in 1856, 108 were counted in a week, and at Hawaii, in 1868, 2,000 shocks occurred in one month. Hein, it may be said in conclusion, opposes the theory of a connection between earthquakes and volcanic eruptions, and considers that of their coincidence with atmospheric phenomena as better supported by facts; for they are occasionally preceded or accompanied by thick and wide-spread fogs at seasons when fogs are not frequent by sudden falls of barometer, and equally sudden changes of temperature. Their occurrence, however, in the majority of cases coincides with normal meteorological conditions. Earthquakes are more frequent after sunset than in the daytime, in autumn and winter than in spring. The influence of the moon is insignificant.

Queen Victoria.

Court Talk says that the Queen's regret over the marriage of Princess Beatrice deepens as the date of the event approaches. The departure of Princess Beatrice from the maternal home will probably prove inconvenient to Her Majesty in many material ways. The Princess saved her mother much state work, and mastered for her all the state documents whose contents it was necessary for the Queen to be personally made acquainted with.

The arrangements for the celebration of the jubilee next year on the fiftieth anniversary of Queen Victoria's ascension to the British throne, have already been begun. It is proposed to make the celebration one of the grandest events of modern times. It is reported that the Queen has already expressed a desire to conclude her reign on this anniversary. Very little credence, however, is given to this report.

A cheap edition of Caroline Bauer's memoirs is announced. There is said to have been a royal protest, which, however, was unavailing. The Queen is deeply grieved at its reflections on her uncle Leopold.

Fond mother: "You are very sick, my child; I will send for Dr. Jones." Daughter (quickly): "Not Dr. Jones, mother, dear; he is engaged already."

Persons who are always innocently cheerful and good-humored are very useful in the world; they maintain peace and happiness and spread a thankful temper among all who live around them.

Life is made up, not of great sacrifices or duties, but of little things, of which smiles and kindness and small obligations, given habitually, are what win and preserve the heart and secure the comfort.

We often think we are of great importance to other people; that they must be thinking of us and our affairs; that they watch our actions and shape their course accordingly. In general we are quite mistaken.

The people of a republic like ours are peculiarly like a single great individual man, full of passions, prejudices often, but with a great heart, despising anything like show or pretense, and always striving forward in a general right direction.

The truest lives are those that are cut rose-diamond fashion, with many facets answering to the many-planed aspects of the world about them. * * * Society is always trying in some way or other to grind us down to a single flat surface.

An excellent and useful maxim is this hopeful ejaculation—never despair! The lot of man is disappointment, but his worst enemy is despair. Resolute confidence, when all other means fail, may often avert danger and overcome difficulty; nay, more, it may convert the bane into a blessing.

Right-doing is first hard, then easy, then delightful. Such is the history of each virtue in the race and in the individual. Its beauty may be hidden in the root of self denial and effort, but it comes into full bloom when at length the effort has grown into a pleasure that we would not willingly forego.

Like flakes of snow that fall unperceived on the earth, the seemingly unimportant events of life succeed one another. As the snow gathers together so are our habits formed. No single flake that is added to the pile produces a sensible change; no single action creates, however it may exhibit, a man's character.

It is a fatal mistake to think that industry united with talent or ability is the right direction is sufficient to insure success in any given pursuit. They are needful, but also much more. A whole man, with deep feelings, strong principles, firm will, generous impulses, fully alive to every obligation, and faithful to every trust, will unconsciously infuse into his work a value to mankind that can never follow the most urgent efforts of a different character.

Riel's Appearance.

In appearance the captive does not bear much resemblance to the portraits published of him in various newspapers. A long unkempt beard, of a light brown color, nearly overgrowing his face, almost corresponding with his sun-browned features. His hair is quite black, and falls nearly to his shoulders in small ringlets and curls. His head-gear consisted of a light-colored slouch hat, which was turned up at the sides and allowed to fall over a high and intellectual forehead. The features of Riel are prominent, his closely compressed mouth and aquiline nose being indicative of the firmness and other superior qualities he is known to possess. A keen, piercing blue eye, one glance from which the observer readily understands would enable the owner to read a man's innermost thoughts. In person Riel is of medium build, and is still attired in the tattered and faded suit worn throughout the memorable engagements at Batoche. His trousers are of a brownish color, and shows evidences of the wear they have received during the recent rebellion. His vest is of the same material. Riel, when seen by the writer, was coatless, his sun-browned elbows protruding from a shirt that may have been white many long years ago. The feet of Riel are encased in a large sized pair of beef moccasins, which also exhibited signs of wear. His bare heels peeped forth through two large apertures. When a spectator approaches the prisoner momentarily raises his head to scan the features of the new comer, only to relapse into his unattractive posture. Every movement of the man in the presence of any of the officers ives evidence of his dignity and sauvity of manner. On the approach of the commander one morning he lifted his hat with a graceful movement, and during the conversation that ensued maintained a most respectful demeanor. Not till the gentleman had got a considerable distance away did the courteous prisoner deign to don his broad sombrero.

On returning to his cell, he passes the forenoon usually writing letters or engaged at his devotions Before and after every meal he also returns his thanks to the Almighty for his bountiful goodness. In the afternoon the half-breed champion usually enjoys another brief outing, retiring to rest at an early hour. Those who have had occasion to be in the presence of the captive frequently positively assert that he does not exhibit a symptom of insanity, but, on the contrary, that his every action shows him to be a keen, deep and resolute man, not easily oppressed with difficulties. Riel can sleep soundly at night, with the assurance that his dreams will not be disturbed with the appearance of an assassin.

Art Replies.

A long list might be made of men who have won advancement in life by smart answers given at the right moment. One of Napoleon's veterans, who survived his master many years, was wont to recount with great glee how, when he had picked up the Emperor's cocked hat at a review, the latter, not noticing that he was a private, said carelessly, "Thank you, captain." "In what regiment, sire?" instantly asked the ready-witted soldier. Napoleon, perceiving his mistake, answered with a smile, "In my guard, for I see you know how to be prompt." The newly-made officer received his commission next morning. A somewhat similar anecdote is related of Marshal Suvoroff, who, when receiving a despatch from the hands of a Russian sergeant, who had greatly distinguished himself on the Danube, attempted to confuse the messenger by a series of whimsical questions, but found him fully equal to the occasion. "How many fish are there in the sea?" asked Suvoroff. "All that are not caught yet," was the answer. "How far is it to the moon?" "Two of your Excellency's forced marches." "What would you do if you saw your men giving way in battle?" "I'd tell them that there was a waggon-load of whiskey just behind the enemy's line." Baffled at all points, the Marshal ended with, "What is the difference between your colonel and myself?" "My colonel cannot make me a lieutenant, but your Excellency has only to say the word." "I say it now, then," answered Suvoroff

Death of the Old Wife.

She had lain all day in a stupor, breathing with heavily laden breath; but as the sun sank to rest in the far-off western sky, and the glow on the wall of the room faded into dense shadows, she awoke and called feebly to her aged partner who sat motionless by the bedside; he bent over his dying wife and took her wan wrinkled hand in his. "Is it night?" she asked in tremulous tones, looking at him with eyes that saw not. "Yes," he answered softly, "it is growing dark." "Where are the children?" she queried; "are they all in?"

Poor, old man! how could he answer her; the children who had slept for long years in the old church-yard—who had out-lived childhood and borne the heat and burden of the day, and, growing old, had laid down the cross and gone to wear the crown before the old father and mother had finished their sojourn.

"The children are safe," answered the old man; "don't think of them, Janet; think of yourself; does the way seem dark?" "'My trust is in Thee; let me never be confounded.' What does it matter if the day is dark? 'I'd rather walk with God in the dark than walk alone in the light. I'd rather walk with Him by faith than walk alone by sight. John, where's little Charlie?" she raised. Her mind was again in the past. The grave dust of twenty years had lain on Charlie's golden hair, but the mother had never forgotten him. The old man patted her cold hands—hands that had labored so hard that they were seamed and wrinkled and calloused with years of toil, and the wedding ring was worn to a mere thread of gold—and then he pressed his thin lips to them and cried. She had encouraged and strengthened him in every toil of life. Why what a woman she had been! What a worker! What a leader in Israel! Always with the gift of prayer or service. They had stood at many a death-bed together—closed the eyes of loved ones, and then sat down with the Bible between them to read the promises. Now she was about to cross the dark river alone. And it was strange and sad to the old man, and the yellow-haired grand-daughter left them, to her babble of walks in the woods and gathering May flowers, and strolling with John; of petty household cares that she had always put down with a strong resolute hand; of wedding festivals and death-bed triumphs; and when at midnight she heard the bridegroom's voice, and the old man bending over her, cried pitifully, and the young grand-daughter kissed her pale brow, there was a solemn joy in her voice as she spake the names of her children, one by one, as if she saw them with immortal eyes, and with one glad smile put on immortality.

They led the old man sobbing away, and when he saw her again the sun was shining, the air was jubilant with the songs of birds, and she lay asleep on the couch under the north window where he had seen her so often lie down to rest, while waiting for the Sabbath bell. And she wore the same best black silk, and the string of gold beads about her neck, and the folds of white tulle, only now the brooch with his miniature was wanting, and in its place was a white rose, and a spray of cedar; she had loved cedar—she had loved to sing over her work:—

"Oh, may I in His courts be seen
Like a young cedar, fresh and green."

But what a strange transformation was there! The wrinkles were gone. The traces of age, and pain, and weariness were all smoothed out; the face had grown strangely young, and a placid smile was laid on the pale lips. The old man was awed by the likeness to the bride of his youth. He kissed the unresponsive lips, and said softly:—"You've found heaven first, Janet; but you'll come for me soon. It's our first parting in over seventy years; but it won't be for long—it won't be for long." And it was not. The winter snows have not fallen, and to-day would have been their diamond wedding. We had planned much for it, and I wonder—I wonder—but no! Where they are there is neither marriage, nor giving in marriage.

A Strange Chariot.

BY B. S L.

The chariot in which the Emperor of Japan used to take his outings is a strange object.

Imagine a large box ten feet long, six feet wide and six feet high, and you have the dimensions of this royal equipage. This huge box is elegantly lacquered. There are no springs, but the box is placed upon two immense wooden wheels that reach high on either side. When His Majesty used to ride out, this cart, for cart it is, was drawn by one huge black ox. When the people heard the rumbling of the imperial chariot they must hasten into their houses and close their doors, for none were permited to look upon the sacred chariot. In Northern China the carts or carrages are very similar to this royal cart in Japan. They are drawn by donkeys. Sometimes in the very heated term there are awnings stretched above the little creatures. Very often the great wooden wheels are cogged to prevent their slipping as they pass over the stony streets. Travelling in one of these carts, sitting flat on the floor with your feet stretched straight out in front, is very uncomfortable. In the course of a long journey you realize by the uninterrupted thumps and bumps just how many bones there are in your body, for every joint will be sore. And yet these are preferable to the Shanghai wheelbarrow, which is a huge wheelbarrow with a board on either side on which passengers may sit—as many as can be wheeled by one man.

A teacher in one of the Altoona schools recently electrified her pupils who were annoying her with questions: "Children, I am engaged." Noticing the general look of astonishment, she added: "But not to any fool of a man," and the excitement died away.

Miss Proudflesh (of New York)—"Oh, dear, yes. I know all about Canada. It's a lovely country." Miss Oldfam—"You have summered there?" "Oh we never consider one summer anything. We spent several years there. It was just after pa retired." "Retired?" "Yes. I don't remember what bank he was connected with.'

MARKDALE JULY 16, 1885.

MARKDALE BAND CONCERT.

We were in doubt as to the success of our Amateur Dramatic Club, from the fact that the club comprised nearly all the members of the Brass Band. However, we were very agreeably disappointed last Monday evening, not only at the excellence of the music, but the delineation of Nature, and Nature's Laws, as described by the various actors in the various scenes which has crowned the native talent of Markdale with an undying success. There were not less than 300 persons present, being the elite of our town; and the programme, which was almost exhaustive, was carried out successfully. John Lyons, Esq., was called to the chair, and gave a lucid description of the enobling influence of music upon human character; its patriotic development upon national sentiment, and the social elevation of its influence.

BAND.—ORATORIO.

Recitation by Miss McDuff, descriptive of an amusing family scene, wherein Irish wit, humour, and the usual burlesque, were introduced in the scene of Mrs. Babby was rendered, as was evidenced by the enthusiastic applause of the audience. Violin [illegible] by Mr. Currie, accompanied on the organ by Mr. Jones, and was well appreciated. Duett, by Mrs. R. D. Irvine and Mr. J. Cæsar, in the play of "Mr. & Mrs. Wright," was a rendition of too many matrimonial infelicities from extravagance; and its excellent manner of description "brought down the house." Reading, by Miss M. Dundas, was highly appreciated. Song, by Miss F. Ford, with piano accompaniment, possessed a thrilling tenderness that enchanted the audience. Musical Duett, by Messrs. Jones and Mason, was rendered in a manner which elicited the applause of all lovers of correct instrumental music. Song (in character), "The Dandy Young Dude," by Mr. W. J. Benson. This was the "take down" of the first part of the programme, and so "took" the audience that encore came from all parts of the assemblgae, to which Mr. B. responded by singing a rare comic, which even brought down higher applause than its predecessor. After a short interlude, the Band opened the second part of the proceedings with an excellent march tune, and executed it with admirable precision and musical ability. Musical Quartette, by Messrs. Jones, Mason, Jackman & Armstrong. As far as musical talent was comprised in the entertainment, these gentlemen acquitted themselves in a manner equal to the best practitioners we have heard for many a day, and gave the audience a medley, which, for sweetness of tone and soul-speaking melody, has never been equalled in Markdale. The Orchestra gave a very enlivening air on violin, organ and cornet. Recitation, by Miss C. McDuff, who gave expression to some excellent hits at many of the youthful absurdities of the present day, interspersed with occasional glimpses of genuine wit and humour. Song (in character) by Mr. W. J. Benson, "Miss Fogarty's Christmas Cake." The applause of the evening was hearty throughout, but Mr. Benson evidently "brought down the audience." Recitation, by Mr. R. E. Currie, on the serious aspect of a battle-field, recounting the scenes in some of the engagements in the Crimea. Mr. C., even as an amateur, possesses rare histrionic talent. But, perhaps the best part of the performance was the burlesque of "Courtship in the Kitchen," Miss Johanna (Mr. A. J. Truss) acted the part of daughter, a seeking spinster. The sex was undiscernable in the anxious maiden. The coy youth was well sustained by Mr. Benson, in his cool repartee to the supposed boarding school miss, and shook the rafters with their applause.

Our Band, and Dramatic Club deserves the commendation of our citizens. Our efforts in behalf of their organization is well worthy of the patronage bestowed. Let our youths work, and they will meet the approving "Slap on the back" of an approving public.

The Band played "God Save the Queen," and with thanks to the Chairman, whose ably and well-timed remarks, added much to the enjoyment of the evening. All departed well pleased with the evening's entertainment. Proceeds $50.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

Markdale, July 13th, 1885.

This is to certify that certain serious charges, which have been made against Prof. Johnston in the Durham Chronicle are without truth or foundation so far as I have been able to investigate, and that he has always conducted himself in an upright manner since he came to this place.

GEORGE NOBLE,
Chief Constable.

To the Editor of the Standard.

Tobermory, July 14th, 1885.

DEAR SIR,—According to promise I send you a few jottings gathered since I came to this Peninsula. I left Owen Sound on the 3rd inst. at 4 p. m., arriving next morning at 2 a. m. The boat by which I came, namely, the Northern Belle, is a very fine boat, which runs two trips weekly between Collingwood and the Manitoulin Island, calling at this harbor every Friday. This is considered the safest fresh-water harbor in Canada. No matter how rough the lake is, the largest vessels can find shelter here, and accommodation between the two harbors for at least 80 vessels of the largest tonnage, and will float the largest vessel in the world, having a depth of from 40 to 80 feet. At the big Tob. there is a light-house now nearly completed, which the Government have erected. This will be a great benefit to vessels coming into this harbor. The light-house, when completed, will cost about $2,000. Quite a business is done at this harbor. There is a large steam saw-mill owned by Messrs. Rickson & Co., Owen Sound, with a cutting capacity of 20.000 feet per day, also shingles, lath, etc. This company own quite a piece of land in this township (St. Edmunds) wooded with splendid pine, maple and birch. There is also an extensive business done in the fish line. It is very pleasant to look out of my study window and see about 20 of those fishing skiffs sail out of the harbor to their fishing places across the bay, and then in the evening or next day return loaded with fish, which are taken away by steam tugs to be sold at different points. The land in from the harbor south-east for at least five miles, is well adapted for agricultural purposes, but after that until you get to Dyer's bay, the land is very rocky, unfit for anything but bears, which abound in great numbers. There are no doctors here. The people tell me they don't need any, for they are never sick. My congregation at the harbor is composed of fishermen and millmen — English, Irish and Scotch—very respectable and attentive. A number of them follow me to my afternoon appointment, 2⅓ miles out. They return and go back again to the same place to prayer-meeting and return to the harbor in the evening—10 miles all on foot —Beat that at Markdale or Mesford Road. I have not got to the other end of my Mission yet; but intend (D.V.) to try it next week. I am told it is a desperate road. Mail matter is very stale when it arrives here. The man who carries it has to walk a distance of 60 miles in two days. It is some consolation to me that he travels the same road I do when I go to the distant part of my Mission, every two weeks. He carries a small rifle and large knife to defend himself from bears and robbers. More anon.

Yours truly,
PHILIP SPARLING.

Notes by the Way.

The farmers along the town-line of Holland and Euphrasia deserve praise for the improvements they have made on the road this summer. There remains only one hollow to be filled up. It is almost impassable in the spring and also dangerous.

Early on Monday morning a steam tug left the Nottawasaga river with a raft of over 1000 logs belonging to Mr. Train of Meaford, but on her way a strong wind sprang up blowing from the main land which carried them far out into the rough waters and completely breaking up the raft and loosing all the logs.

The grass around Meaford was badly withered until this last rain of Monday evening.

[The above was crowded out last week ED.]

Dangerous fits are often Caused by worms. Freeman's Worm Powders destroy Worms.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

The anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne was celebrated in this village on Monday last in right royal style. Besides the Lodges of this district there were several visiting lodges from Proton and Egremont, in all twelve stand of colors. The shower on the night previous had laid the dust nicely and the morning of the 13th being bright and promising fair weather, hundreds left their homes dressed in their most comfortable summer attire. The various lodges had assembled, coming in from the North, South, East and West, between 11 and 12 o'clock, and after the usual stampede on the market square, and had just been dismissed for dinner, clouds began to appear in the sky, and almost without a moment's warning the rain began to pour in torrents, but the monster gathering of people all found shelter, from the many doors that were thrown open to receive them during the shower. All were able to refresh the inner man at the various spreads that had been prepared for them, by Mrs. Thompson who had made provision for a large number; also by the Presbyterian Ladies' Aid, who also catered to the wants of the many who visited their tables; and our popular hotel-keeper, Mr. Munshaw, pleased all who visited him. Some had said accommodation could not be had for so large a gathering in Flesherton, but that fear has been dispelled, as out of the thousands present there did not appear to be any but were loud in their praises for the treatment they received from the people of Flesherton. About 2 o'clock the clouds passed over and the rain ceased when the people assembled in the grove and then listened to several stirring addresses; especially might we mention that of the Rev. Mr. Ayr, Methodist Minister, and Rev. A. Wilson, Presbyterian Minister. After the addresses, the monster gathering formed on the square again, and after the usual cheers for Queen and country (especially was the cheer for our volunteers in the North-West heartily given), when all separated for their homes in a Flesherton-like loyal, sober, quiet and peaceful manner; and we trust the pleasant memories of the day may linger long in the hearts and minds of those who were fortunate enough to visit our little town on that auspicious occasion. A handsome four-square arch was erected on the centre of the square, which was elaborately draped with suitable bunting. The various business places and a large number of private dwellings displayed a great many flags and appropriate bunting.

The Concert in the Town Hall in the evening by the Bairnsfather family under the auspices of the L. O. Lodge here was a grand success, both in finances and programme. We think the programme was carried out to the delight and satisfaction of all present, and the hall was crowded to the doors. Should Mr. Bairnsfather ever visit Flesherton again, we believe he would have the pleasure of appearing before a very crowded house.

Owen Sound.

(From an occasional correspondent.)

Weather a little chilly.

Town and country gardens looking fine. Large crops of hay expected this season, also fruit bids fair to a large crop; that is if "Jack Frost" does not come around too early.

Steamer Athabasca left Saturday 4:45 p.m. with 50 first and 118 second class passengers and 450 tons freight.

Alberta arrived down Sunday morning 7:20 a. m, with 75 first, 30 second class passengers, 15,000 bush. wheat, 3 cars flour, 20 tons mdse.

An arch of a beautiful pattern is under construction on the passenger platform in honor of Gen. Middleton's volunteers which is expected to arrive about Wednesday. It is understood that lunch, straw-berries, cream, &c., will be given them on their arrival, provided by the town. Tables will be erected in the freight shed of the C. P. R., which it is thought will afford accommodation for the 2,000 volunteers.

On Sunday last we had the pleasure of seeing Mrs. Delaney and Mrs. Gownlock, who arrived down by the Alberta going east. They looked very much fretted and worn out. They were crying, which aroused the sympathy of the crowd of onlookers.

Fluid Lightning is simply a marvellous Rheumatic Remedy. I was for two months a cripple, unable to get out of the house from Sciatica. One bottle gave me instant relief, and placed me on my feet again. I have driven fourteen miles to-day (something I could not possibly have done were it not for Fluid Lightning) for the express purpose of procuring another bottle. So says Wm. Dixon, Gananoque. Only 25 cents per bottle at Hill Bro's. 6

Lily Oak Pickles.

The new Lily Oak bridge is in a approaching completion and is a fine structure, and very creditable to the contractor, Mr. James Bruce. Mr. Hannah, one of the workmen, fell into the river, causing a sudden fall in his temperature, but fortunately no serious results followed.

Miss Ferguson, our teacher, is spending her holidays in Owen Sound, Arthur and Stratford.

MR. CLARKE is prospecting in the bowels of the earth for water: perperhaps he may strike Gold, or more likely Coal Oil, but if he finds an abundant supply of water he will be satisfied.

Mr. Wm. Bradley had a very successful stoning bee, ending with a trip of the light fantastic at night.

Mr. E. Hannah had the sawing machine for two days running at lightning speed, trainsforming a great portion of his sugar plantation into fuel.

Mr. John Delane of this neighborhood died recently, and while the family were absent attending his funeral in Chatsworth some wretched scoundrel entered the house, and took therefrom the winding sheets of deceased, a ladie dress and $7 in cash. This is one of the most diabolical acts on record.

The corps are looking very promising in this locality, wheat is shooting out, peas and potatoes in bloom.

HEADACHE.

Headache is one of those distressing complaints that depends upon nervous irritation, bad circulation, or a disordered state of the stomach, liver, bowels, etc. The editor of Canada Presbyterian was cured after years of suffering with headache, and now testifies to the virtue of Burdock Blood Bitters.

Division Court.

From the Chatsworth News.

The sitting of the Division Court held here on Saturday last did not occupy much time as it usually does. Several cases were adjourned and a number of judgement suits disposed of which we deem advisable not to mention. The following is a list of cases:—

Sargeant vs. Winfield, et al—Adjourned until next court on account of the inability of defendant to be present. W. Masson for defendent

B. Coleman, on behalf of himself and all of the shareholders in Markdale cheese factory vs. Charles Boyd—action brought by plaintiff on account of breach of contract by defendant to draw milk. In this case the defendant set up fraud on the part of the plaintiff but failed to prove fraud, and on cross examination swore he could not read or write even his own name, when council for plaintiff produced notice of dispute signed by defendant. On the prodnction of this document the examining counsel dropped the defendant like a hot potato, stating that if all his evidence was as true as this statement it was not of much account His Honor fixed the damages at $20, but reserved judgment until the production of an agreement between the patrons of the Association W. Masson for plaintiff; A. B. Klien for defendant.

Harvey vs. Campbell—Judment for plaintiff $136.94. W. Masson for plaintiff.

Turner vs. Wolfile—Fred Lepskie, garnishee. Garnishee discharged. W. Masson for plaintiff.

Gerolamy vs. Davitt—judgment for plaintiff. J. M. Kilbourn for defendant.

Years of experience and successful trials have proved McGregor & Parke's Carbolicl Cerate the most complete and satisfactory compound for healing Old Sores, Festerings, Ulcers, Cuts, Wounds, Burns, Frost Bites or Felons, and for keeping out the cold and to cleanse or prevent proud flesh, sloughing or decay. Insist on having McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate, sold at 25c. by Hill Bro's. 6

A SECRET

The secret of beauty lies in pure blood and good health, Burdock Blood Bitters is the grand key that unlocks all the secretions. It cures all Scrofulous Diseases, acts on the Blood, Liver, Kidneys, Skin and Bowels, and brings the bloom of health to the palid cheek.

IMPORTANT.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Express and Carriage hire and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite the Grand Central Depot. Elegant rooms refitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced at $1.00 and upwards per day. European plan, Elevator, Resturant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

Open Letter!

TO ALL TEMPERANCE WORKERS.

The members of the Flesherton Division of the Sons of Temperance, at its last session assembled, desired to express their convictions, in a very unanimous and decided manner, on vital points in connection with the Scott Act movement:—

First,—The great extent of the County, with its prominent places so distant from its centre, and therefore difficult of access, render necessary some well defined method by which communications, touching vital operations, may be quickly disseminated through the most distant as well as the most central points.

Second,—That men—public men—with undoubted reputation as Temperance workers; intelligent, with tact and push, in every part of the county, should be selected to impart the necessary zeal and give instructions as to the required proceedure; so that the canvas shall be at once vigorous and enlightened.

Third,—It is the opinion of this Division, that without a more unanimous action, success cannot be secured—isolated and irresponsible action, that rest only upon mere supposition and hope, will be ephemeral and worthless; and, therefore, some more business like and substantial method is advised.

Fourth,—We think no time should be lost in calling a convention to some central part of the County to discuss and resolve—

(a)—As to the efficiency of the present organization.

(b)—As to the present status of the Petitions before the Government.

(c)—The necessity of being again renovo or otherwise.

(d)—The agencies best to be employed to obtain duplicate petitions.

(e)—The propriety or otherwise of bringing to the County celebrated lecturers.

Flesherton, July 4th, 1886.

I had for years been a miserable sufferer from Dyspepsia, and tried all known remedies and the best medical skill of my acquaintance, but still grew worse, until unable to eat any thing without great suffering, or do any kind of work. I began to think there was no hope for me, and that I must surely die; when, like a drowning man catching at a straw, I determined to give McGregor's Speedy Cure a trial, I at once began to Improve so rapidly that in two months I was as well as I had ever been in my life.—WM. The Law Of Libel.

What is being said by some of the public journals on the subject of libel and the libel laws is pertinent and proper. There is altogather too much facility afforded by the law to characterless individuals to enter actions against newspapers and carry a vexatious prosecutions for which there is no good ground. Any person at all who pleases to imagine that he has been libelled by a newspaper may put it to no end of expense by requiring it to "show cause," and doing other clear things required by the law. At best their may not be a shadow of ground for the action at all. Another unfair feature of the law of libel is that a publisher may be dragged from one end of the Dominion to the other and put on trial for an alleged libel. Even if he secures a verdict in his favor, the expense to which he is put is something terrific. The law should at least be amended so that the publisher should have fair play. At present the libel is assumed to have been uttered wherever a copy of the paper circulates whereas it would be only fair if it assumed that it was uttered at the place of publication. We have no wish to see the laws changed in any way that would lessen the responsibility of the newspapers for what they publish, but it is unjust that they should be subject to vexations prosecutions at the hands of characterless people.—Toronto Telegram.

Rev. Wm. Stout, of Wiarton, was cured of scrofulous abscess that seventeen doctors could not cure. Burdock Blood Bitters was the only successful remedy. It cures all impurities of the system.

Struck By Lightning.

STOUFFVILLE, July 4.—About four o'clock this afternoon Henry Rangle and George Cline were hoeing corn at D. B. Hoker's farm on the 6th concession of Markham. Mr. Hoker seeing the thunderstorm approaching left his men and went taking his horse to the stable some sixty rods distant. About five minutes later there was a flash of lightning and Mr. Hoker saw the two men fall suddenly. On going to them Mr. Rangle presented a terrible sight. His hair was completely burned off his head, his clothes and boots torn to shreds and burning. The hoe which he had been using was broken and thrown some distance. Death must have been instantaneous. Mr. Cline lay about six feet from Rangle, considerably stunned, but in about five minutes was able to rise and walk to the house. Dr Sangster was at once summoned and pronounced Cline in a critical condition. Rangle was in the prime of life and leaves a wife and three children.

AN EX-ALDERMAN TRIED IT.

Ex Alderman Taylor, of Toronto tried Hagyard's Yellow Oil for Rheumatism. It cured him after all other remedies had failed.

THE CHOLERA.

Possibly the cholera may not reach our locality this season. Nevertheless we should take every percaution against it. Dr Fowlers Extract of Wild Strawberry is a sure cure for Cholera Morbus, Colic, Cramp, Diarrhoea and Dysentry.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold by A. Turner & Co. x

The Wheat Shortage.

MILWAUKEE JUNE 26.—S. W. Tallmadge's monthly crop report says thers is no longer a question as to the damage and loss to the winter wheat of this country. A falling off of 160,000,000 bushels in winter wheat from last year is unprecedented in the history of wheat raising in the United States. The present condition of spring wheat is good, but we must have favorable weather till harvest. The estimates show the probable yield of spring wheat to be 131,000,000 bushels; winter wheat 210,000,000 bushels, or a total shortage of 182,000,000 as compared with last year.

A WANT OF ACTIVITY.

Much of the ill condition of chronic invalids is due to want of activity in a sluggish liver. Burdock Blood Bitters arouses a healthy action of the Liver to secrete pure bile, and thus make pure blood which gives perfect health.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diphtheria, and Canker Mouth. Sold by A. Turner & Co. x

AN OLD FAVORITE.

An old favorite, that has been popular with the people for nearly 30 years, is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for all varieties of Summer Complaints of children and adults. It seldom or ever fails to cure Cholera Morbus, Diarrhoea and Dysentery.

A STRANGE DISEASE.

There is scarcely a symptom belonging to chronic complaints but that is common to the poor dyspeptic, and he often feels as if he had every disease in the catalogue. Burdock Blood Bitters cures the worst forms of Chronic Dyspepsia.

WHY WILL You cough when Shiloh's Cure will give immediate relief. Price 10 cts., 50 cts., and $1. Sold by A. Turner & Co. x

KEEP YOUR HOUSE GUARDED.

Keep your house guarded against sudden attack of Colic, Cramps, Diarrhoea, Dysentery and Cholera Infantum. They are liable to come when least expected. The safest, best and most reliable remedy is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup Whooping Cough and Bronchitis. Sold by A. Turner & Co. x

SHOULD BE ATTENDED TO.

Much suffering is the result of neglected constipation. There is no bitter regulator of the bowels than Burdock Blood Bitters by its prompt action on the Liver all tendency to irregularity is removed, and one chief source of ill-health prevented.

NOTICE.

ALL persons are hereby warned against purchasing two notes of hand, one for $32.50, drawn about the 15th June last in favor of Wm. THE LIME KILN CLUB.

Brudder Gardner in Jail.

As the members began to fill the chairs and benches in Paradise Hall, and the hand of the clock crept along toward the usual hour for opening, there was much wonder and speculation over the absence of Brother Gardner. It was noticed that Sir Isaac Walpole, Elder Toots and Judge Cadaver were in close and earnest consultation, and when the triangle finally sounded its note of warning there was an undefined fear that something was about to happen—something not down on the usual programme.

SIR ISAAC EXPLAINS.

"My frens," said Brother Walpole, as a solid hush fell upon the assemblage, "our beloved President left fur de western part of de Stait two days ago to deliber a lecktur befo' a body named, 'De Association fur de Suppreshum of Corrupt Legislators.' He departed in response to a telegram, an' he left in such a hurry dat he took nuffin wid him except a pocket-comb an' a change of paper collahs. He 'spected to return in about twenty-four hours, but he am still absent, an' no word or line has bin received from him. We will open de excercises by singin' a song constructed and finished off entirely by hand by de Hon. Castoff Jinkins, of Varginny."

A JUST REWARD.

At the conclusion of the song Waydown Beebe arose with tears in his eyes and his bosom making thirty-six revolutions per minute. As Chairman of the Committee on Disinfectants and Poetry he had offered a prize of $5 to the best ode to the watermelon. There was no need of going any farther or waiting any longer. He should at once forward his note of hand to the builder of the ode—a note drawn at one year, without indorsement or interest.

HEARD FROM.

Brother Bebee's heroic and philantrophic resolution was being vigorously cheered when the keeper of the Outer Door announced a communication and sent it up to the President's desk. Sir Isaac Walpole was visibly affected as he perused it, and in his nervous excitement he lost one of the eyes of his spectacles and knocked a bottle of ink off the desk full upon the Secretary's bald pate.

A THUNDERBOLT.

"My frens," said Sir Isaac as soon as he could control his voice and stand on his legs, "dis message explains de mysterious absence of our President. Listen while I read:

ST. JOSEPH COUNTY, MICH., IN THE COUNTY JAIL.

MY DEAR BRETHREN—At de close of my lectur' las' nite I was arrested on de charge of havin' received a bribe to influence my offishul ackshuns. Dey hev taken me for a member of de Legislachur, an' I am charged with havin' received de sum of $300 for my wote on a land grant bill to a sartin railroad. While it am, of course, a case of mistaken identity, an' while I shall eventually emerge from dis cell whiter dan cut-loaf sugar, popular indignashun has so blinded de public dat you may not see me home fur seberal days—perhaps a week. Some of you go ober an' see de ole woman an' lend her a few shillins to run de house on until my return, and some mo' of you be prepar'd to take a freight train fur dis place upon receipt of a postal keerd. I shall hev to be identified, an' shall hev to prove dat I heven't bin widin fifty miles of de House of Representatives durin' de present seshum. Let Sir Isaac Walpole be called to de cha'r, an' let de meeting go on de same as if de dishonesty of high public offishuls had not brought dis calamity upon us.

BRO GARDNER.

CONFUSION.

All was uproar and confusion at once. Giveadam Jones called for 500,000 volunteers, armed with 500,000 bone-handled razors, to follow him to the rescue, and to shed 100,000 gallons of blood to wipe out the insult.

Shindig Watkins said he was ready to lay down his life, if necessary, and his words were echoed by Judge Cadaver, Cohorts Perkins, Trustee Pullback, and fifty others, and the enraged mob glared around for a victim.

Sir Isaac spoke soothingly. It was a mistake which had often happened before. It had often been remarked that Brother Gardner looked like a member of the Legislature, and the people who caused his arrest would willingly apologize as soon as their victim was properly identified. As for the routine business of the meeting it had all been upset, and he thought the wisest policy was to adjourn.

This decision was concurred in by the Rev. Penstock, Waydown Bebee and other influential members, and a motion to adjourn was carried. The hall then became the headquarters of such an excitement that the police several times rapped on the alley door and threatened arbitrary measures. It was finally decided by the members of the club:

1. To raise $10 and employ a lawyer who can cry to a jury.
2. To forward a committee of five members by the first Blue Line freight train.

Drouth in Russia.

The southern provinces of Russia are suffering from a long-continued drouth which threatens to ruin the wheat crop. The stock of wheat on hand is also very low owing to the great quantities that were hastily exported from the Black Sea ports when it seemed likely that they would be blockaded by England.

THE WOUNDED AT SASKATOON.

Some of the Disabled Soldiers Relate Their Experiences.

If the entire North-West had been industriously searched for a sanitarium no better spot could have been selected. Three houses facing on the paper street known as Broadway are used for the purposes of the hospital. Some are on the list, the up-stairs in two of the houses being fully occupied, a state of affairs that will become anything but desirable when the hot weather sets in, if we ever do have any really hot weather in the Saskatchewan. The upstairs of these houses, as of other houses in the "town," is formed by utilizing the mansard portion of the roof, and at present the inside of the exposed portion of the roof forms the ceiling. Shrubbery lines the sloping bank to the west of the town, and in every way nature has done its share in support of Saskatoon as an enticing place in which to settle. From the summit of the bank the land extends north, east, and south, in a level unbroken prairie, so that the constant summer breezes pass for miles upon miles of a radius, and will carry away any malaria or infection that may hereafter exist within the town as a consequence of growth of population. It is in this place that has been properly selected as a sanitarium for our wounded, and it is generally credited that the

from their dangerous and critical conditions is to be attributed in no small degree to the health-inducing locality in which they have been placed. The Rev. Mr. Ball, Chaplain to the 7th, had driven over from Clark's Crossing, and was holding an open-air service as your correspondent rode up. It was a sad sight indeed to see the sick, the lame, and the halt approach the spot to hear the word spoken that comforts in all cases and under all circumstances. A curious and incongruous lot it was who met in worship. Men and women and children of all ages came from the surrounding country, and conspicuous in the gathering were the wounded and convalescent, some with their jaws bandaged, some with their eyes bandaged, many with crutches, others with their limbs in slings, and others again gently assisted by the nurses.

Captain Mason related his experience to me as follows: "As you know, I am Captain of No. 2 Company, Grenadiers, the regiment that makes foot marches. My Company was the first, and don't forget it, to cross the river at Fish creek. We had not any chance there, however, but we made up for it at Batoche. My Company at Batoche, No 2 Company, was leading the regiment in extended order, Companies No 3 and 4 were in support. We extended for some time and formed up 300 or 400 yards northeast in advance of the church. We extended for some time in the open space in front, which ended in a ravine. We were there for some time under very poor cover, the saplings were thin and scattered. The guns suddenly began firing, and I heard the rebels shouting over the edge of the ravine but a short distance to our front. I at once send my sergeant back to tell the General where the enemy was, and the General came himself to me, and I told him where the enemy was. He then ordered me to bring my Company as near to open space as possible and to begin firing upon the rebels, who just then began to show themselves. As soon as the men got up to move forward and continued their fire, which became just as hot as we cared to have it. Just then I noticed that some of my men were clustered together instead of being extended. Knowing the danger of their being so, I crossed over in front of the company and arranged them in proper position. I put my hand on one of my men to place him, when a bullet passed through his coat and flattened in his cartridge box. 'Now,' I said to him, 'see the danger you were in.' I then turned to regain my place with my Company, but took but a few steps when I was struck and fell against a tree, and one of my sergeants catching me as I fell. The sensation when hit was as if I had been struck with a club, but I was perfectly sensible, and took out my knife and asked the sergeant to cut my cross belt that I might get my handkerchief to stop the bleeding from the wound. I had purposely selected a silk handkerchief that morning anticipating I might find use for it with some one, but I did not think I was then caring for myself. Soon a stretcher was brought and I was carried to the church. It was a strange sight in the church. Eight or ten were already there wounded. Ryerson dressed my wounds, and I can tell you it was a relief to find it was not fatal. The pain, though, was terrible, and I smoked to allay my sufferings. That same night the rebels fired the wood, and I, with the other wounded, was carried into the zoreba, fearing that the rebels might succeed in their intention of burning the church. They fired into our camp, however, and two men were wounded, when the lights, hitherto burning in the hospital tent, were ordered to be put out. It was then, and it made me think of home. However, I am all right now, and soon will be on the active service list once more."

Captain Mason's tunic contains two distinct bullet holes at the front and hind part of his tunic, indicating that the man who shot him fired from a double-barrel shot-gun. Only one bullet entered his thigh, however, the other must have passed him without touching aim. This way of "making sure" was a habit of the enemy's.

Lieut. Garden, of the Intelligence Corps, says:—"Yes. I was at Batoche. Our fellows are in every fight, though we get little credit. Don't you know that our part of the work is the most dangerous, especially scouting. Yet we don't gain half the kudos that the others do. I got my wound when making a rush with six or eight others of different regiments on the blacksmith shop. We reached it and took it as a mattr of course, but I get my wound then. The rebels were all about us, and one fellow quite close shot me in the shoulder at the moment my arm was in a horizontal position, and the bullet passed out above the elbow.

Lieut. Laidlaw, C Company, Midland Battalion, good-naturedly jokes out his experience as follows:—"A and C Companies were each divided into half, and I had command of the left hand portion of C Company on the extreme left flank of the entire column. We advanced along the water's edge towards the village under from across the river as well as from the pits in front. We advanced in successive charges, resting apparently every fifteen minutes. We took the enemy's pits straight along, but kept it going, though several of my men were wounded by the hot fire from across the river. After our first charge the ferry put out from the opposite shore with some rebels, but we stopped them, you bet, and they put back. Nothing more occurred that I remember, except our advancing until we got in front of the village. About eight of us were together all mixed up; two of them were Grenadiers. Sergeant Christie, of Bowmanville, was shot through the arm above the elbow, getting a flesh wound. He was taking aim at a rebel, and I said to Christie: 'Let me have a whack at him as I am in a better position.' Christie gave way and was shot. About ten minutes later I was shot through the calf of the leg. I crawled up to the village, when the doctor dressed my leg, and I was carried back in a waggon. I had hard work getting up the bank on account of the firing, which was pretty hot, I can tell you. After I was shot, Sergeant Wrighten, A Company, was shot, and then Corporal Daly through the hand, when on the top of the bank. Wrighten, you know, was all through the Afghan war, and the rebels have the credit of wounding him. I am not going to return home but going on to the front as soon as discharged from hospital. My governor would ask me why the deuce I came home for such a scratch as I got."

Capt. Doucet, A.D.C., was found in a house by himself. One could not but feel that a little companionship of his fellows in arms would have been an encouragement to him in his

SICKNESS AND SUFFERINGS.

It is said he treated his wound with too much indifference, and though he is getting along nicely now, his wound has not healed as it might have done, had he not made so light of it. He told me in his own language:—"I was wounded at Fish Creek, so had no chance at Batoche. I was going to the right to carry out the orders given me by the General when we suddenly came across the enemy not a 100 feet off; they at once fired a volley and I was struck in the elbow. I had previously dismounted, and was lying down, and when wounded had to drag myself back to the Ambulance Corps. I could not attend to myself when hit, because the men were retiring, and I had to stop to keep them from retiring too far; the trouble with my wound was that some of my coat sleeve, and shirt, and pieces of bone forced into the wound prevented the healing. I was hit about three quarters of an hour after the beginning of the fight. I was on the extreme right and not in the ravine at all; two others were wounded close by me at the same time. I remained on the field longer than the other wounded, which perhaps has been the cause of my not very speedy recovery. The sensation when I was hit was a stinging one, but I felt quite helpless. I was brought down here by waggon, a distance of 54 miles, and am now progressing favourably."

Lieut. Helliwell, of A Company Midland Battalion, gives his experience as follows:—"I was wounded in my shoulder on the last day of the charge at Batoche. We were rushing on the pits; we were on the slope of the hill, our Company being divided into two portions; between me and the water was the other portion of my company and "C" Company of the Midland. I could plainly see

THE MEN WERE FIRING AT US.

I had to pick up my gun and was just going to shoot when I was struck. I dropped instantly, 'struck all of a heap.' I waited for about half an hour, but I thought it was a life time; the bullets were dropping all about me, and I could hear them pass me with a 'tish.' I told Lieut. Grace, of 'C' Co. to keep his men firing, so as to prevent the enemy's fire on us, and I told Lieut. Laidlaw to keep up the fire across the river with the same object, after which firing was not so hot. The fact is we had rushed ahead in the charge so fast that we were without reinforcements, and so we had to rest in the charge, and Col. Williams went back for support. I can tell you we out heroded Herod in the cheering. I believe our British cheers scared the rebels more than anything and scattered them in all directions as we secured pit after pit. I believe we made noise enough to scare the whole North-West. Before the charge was finally finished I was carried back to to the river. I suffer a good deal from my wound, but am progressing slowly. I was struck in front of the shoulder, and the bullet glanced up and settled in the muscles. Here, look at the bullet, see its shape." This bullet referred to by Lieut. Helliwell, is twisted and torn into a ragged-edged, irregular, diamond-shaped form.

THE DIFFICULTY OF EXTRACTING

it must have been very great, and the suffering of poor Helliwell all the while must have been something intense. When the doctors squeeze the wound to discharge the pus the pain is excruciating, and somewhat retards his recovery.

One Dog Saved by Another.

We have received the following interesting narrative from a correspondent in Greenock, who thus writes: "A remarkable case of life-saving by a dog occurred last summer in Greenock, in a timber pond attached to a sawmill. The sawmill is built on land upon which the sawmill is built presents a frontage of about fifty yards to the public street, and extends fully two hundred yards towards the Clyde. Two-thirds of the ground is wet ground—that is, ground entirely covered by water when the tide is in. Three sides of this portion are inclosed by a stout paling, through which inclosure the tide ebbs and flows. The fourth side is formed by a perpendicular embankment of four feet deep, which also forms the termination of the dry ground. The inclosure, or 'pond' as it is called, is used for storing timber afloat. At high water, the floating timber and dry ground are nearly level. And as at the time of the following incident the pond was closely packed with timber, there seemed at high water to be little apparent difference between dry ground and wet ground.

"For several days two dogs of the bull-terrier kind, whose owners were at work in one or other of the adjoining shipyards, were enjoying themselves in their masters' absence by chasing each other in play, rushing impetuously hither and thither, sometimes along the street, occasionally making a dart into the yard round about the sawmill, and as suddenly disappearing again—out to the street, and up one of the many closes at hand. One of these charges led to a rather sudden and somewhat disastrous termination. It was high water. In at the gate of the sawmill premises rushed the two dogs, the one close at the heels of the other, across the yard and on to the floating timber. One of them was soon made aware of the instability of its footing, by its slipping into the water between two logs which were floating a few inches apart. The two logs between which the dog fell were floating on their corners, and therefore formed a slope on each side like the letter V, which caused the dog to slip back into the water at every effort to scramble on to the top side of its temporary prison wall. Its more fortunate companion retreated to dry ground; but on seeing the struggles of its friend, it at once returned, and, by intelligent gesture, invited it to terra firma. The efforts of the unfortunate dog were of no avail; still it persevered, during which time the other had twice returned from and to dry land. On making the third visit, it seemed to grasp the situation, for with its teeth it at once caught its submerged companion by the back of the neck, and assisted so effectually as to enable it to scramble out of the water and join in another romp, but not within sawmill premises. They were never afterwards seen within the gate, confining their fun to the streets on all subsequent occasions.

"It may be of interest to note that it was a male dog which fell into the water; the other, its rescuer, was of the gentler sex."

The City of the Future in Congo.

On entering on the terrace of Leopoldville, I quickly cast my eyes around to enjoy the delightful vision, and my first feeling, I remember, was one of stupefaction, an inability to realize the details, but conscious that all I looked upon was very sad and disheartening. Grass everywhere; grass on the terrace, tall grass luxuriantly thick on its slopes, grass in the crevices of the wall of the one residence, a damp green on the unbarked tree pillars of the veranda, the broad way of the native town like a grass-colord marsh above which the roofs of the huts could only be seen even from the commanding position of the terrace. A few acres of cassava, perhaps a hundred bananas independently apart and widely scattered, not a single pawpaw stalk in view, and if the semblance of a garden possessed any virtue within its rickety fence it was of such a mythical and modest nature that the prolific grass completely shrouded it from view. At one end of the terrace there was a palisaded inclosure intended for a redoubt, which I took to be evidence of unfriendly relations with the natives. Since the block-house of Leopoldville was finished only one small magazine had been added to the European quarter. The native town stood intact as it had been built eleven months previously, though in a dilapidated condition, and smothered by a wild and stubborn grass. Externally there was an unmistakable air of abandonment. . . . When I examined the magazines internally I found that the treasury of Leopoldville was at its lowest ebb.

General Logan, who visited General Grant recently, believes that the invalid's malady is scrofulous sore throat, and hopes that the physicians are mistaken in their diagnosis. The Grant family are inclined to favor this hope. It is now learned that the Grants have died for generations of consumption, and that the General was regarded as a victim to this disease when he left West Point. It was predicted then that he would certainly die within a [illegible] went to Missouri, bought a saddle-horse and took to the woods. He rode horseback for six months or a year. He strengthened his lungs and his general health in this time. But there was a stubborn sore throat from which he did not recover.

A Mongolian Legend.

Those interested in folk-lore may perhaps be glad to read the following [illegible] as to the origin of the Russians [illegible] Colonel Prjevalsky to be current [illegible] the Mongol inhabitants of Zaidam, published in the Russki Invalide:—

"In former times there lived [illegible] away from all people, a good hermit [illegible] or priest, who passed his life in [illegible] A pair of nomads, consisting of a mother and her daughter, happened to go that way, and the daughter with [illegible] ing cattle came upon the cave of the [illegible] lama, who was at that time ill. The [illegible] sionate maiden offered him some [illegible] but he did not like to taste it. At [illegible] gave way to her entreaties and took [illegible] sour milk every day until he got [illegible] Eventually, out of gratitude for [illegible] the lama married the maiden.

"As soon as the Czar of that [illegible] heard of this he sent his troops to [illegible] priest who had so flagrantly broken [illegible] and committed the sin of marriage. [illegible] the troops approached the lama [illegible] a bunch of reeds and stuck them [illegible] ground round his tent, and then by [illegible] of prayer caused them to be all [illegible] into soldiers, who defeated the [illegible] the Czar. The latter sent a second [illegible] a third army, but both were beaten. [illegible] the lama continued to pray and [illegible] more fighting men the reeds broke [illegible] by his first created defenders, so that [illegible] holy lama soon had a great number [illegible] troops. After the defeat of his third [illegible] the Czar left the lama alone in [illegible] but the latter did not wish to live [illegible] longer on the earth. The lama left [illegible] wife to rule the people created from [illegible] reeds, and from those arose the Russians. [illegible] They have white bodies and their [illegible] often fair, because the stems of the [illegible] were of a yellowish color, and the [illegible] somewhat darker."

Spartan Discipline.

During the last century Spartan [illegible] of discipline prevailed in English [illegible] American families. Dr. Johnson [illegible] ed against washing babies in cold [illegible] which was practised in his day, the [illegible] being that it would make them [illegible] The purpose to make children robust [illegible] tated the method of governing them.

An English boy, while playing [illegible] some river craft, tumbled overboard. His face was badly cut by striking [illegible] something in his fall, and it was with great difficulty that he was saved from drowning.

He was put to bed; two or three hours afterwards his father said to him, "How, Harry, how do you feel?'

"Quite well, sir," answered the boy.

"Nothing amiss?"

"Nothing, sir."

"Then get up and take your [illegible] for giving us all this trouble." He flogged he was.

Another English boy, being badly [illegible] ed at school, ran away, and presented himself at his father's house, many miles distant. He stated his case against the school, and his father, [illegible] ing until he had finished, said,—

"Well, my lad, you must be tired [illegible] your long walk; you had better go to bed for you must be up early to start for school again."

"But mayn't I have some supper?" ed the tired and hungry boy.

"No, my lad," replied this Spartan father. "I pay for your board at school and you cannot have it here."

Such stories as these two—they were related in the "Reminiscences" of the late T. Moxley, an English clergyman—account for that reaction in family discipline which has no sympathy with Spartan ideas.

The Fastest British Cruiser.

Our fastest cruiser in the squadron to be concentrated under the command of Admiral Hornby is the Mercury, and we are right in saying that she is the only full-sized ship afloat. The vessel has attained an average of 18½ knots, or [illegible] miles an hour, and this surpasses by a knot the Chilian cruiser Esmeralda (17 knots,) and the French cruiser [illegible] (also 18 knots, launched in 1884,) as well as the Phaeton and the Iris, the latter sister ship, but launched a year before (in 1877.) As the Mercury is 300 feet and 46 feet in breadth, with a draught of water of 22 feet, this is an excellent high speed for so large a vessel. Since the Iris thus stand unrivaled as to speed by any vessel of their size, the Esmeralda being only 277 feet in length while the French vessel has a length of feet but a beam of only 33 feet. [illegible] authority on these matters says that English cruisers that they are the best of the new type designed for high speed as the pre-eminent requisite. All other requirements have been subordinated to this important element. They have a sharp bow and long exceptionally clean run, and are altogether admirable specimens of a design for a swift and handsomely sparred vessel. They are specially despatch ships, and are unarmored of course. The Mercury, which is the Admiral Hornby's squadron, has an armament of ten 64-pounders. She is built of steel; and, in proportion to her tonnage has been one of the most costly vessels afloat. Her hull and machinery together somewhere about £180,000, within £10,000 or £15,000 of the sum which has been said to be as correct as the iron-clad Inflexible. Notwithstanding what has been written to the contrary the above statement shows that England still stands in the first rank as regards naval construction.

Reason and faith resemble the two wives of the patriarch; reason is the first born, but faith inherits the blessing.

The Village Oracle.

Beneath the weather-beaten porch,
That shades the village store,
To sit at ease, an aged man
Of three score years or more,
Great ample seat for him is placed
Beside the open door.

His face is very keen and shrewd,
And piercing are his eyes,
As with an air of prophecy
He scans the cloudy skies,
And children look with awe on him,
For he is weather wise.

And jolly farmers, riding by
On loads of fragrant hay,
Call out, "Good morning, Uncle Dan,"
And, "Will it rain to-day?"
While boys who would a fishing go
Await what he will say.

Well, of the wind shou'd change about"
They listen eagerly,
But he is very slow and calm,
For thus should prophets be),
"Mebbe them clouds will bring us rain,
But I dunno," says he.

And ever as the seasons come,
And as the seasons go,
The oracle is asked the signs
Of wind, or rain, or snow,
But still he never hesitates
To answer; "I dunno."

STORM AND SUNSHINE.

CHAPTER I.

"Twill be lonely for you, missie, living w with the ladies—a young thing like
!"

It is rather lonely," I answer, looking the old woman's head at the green elm e branches sweep the thatched roof of cottage and throw a cool shadow across lane; "but I suppose I shall get used
."

That's the worst thing I could wish my dearie. You won't get used to it e you've a young head on your shoulders a young heart in your body, and I hope ll have that for many a long day yet.
'mind me of your mother, Miss Lisle;
was just as young and blithe as you are when first I saw her, with her yellow curling all over her pretty head."

She died before she was as old as I am , Mollie."

I know that, dearie. I remember the she died, and the funeral, and how the ge children lined the grave with snows early in the morning—every bit of it lined with snowdrops—whole baskets-f them they used, and covered the cofwith snowdrops, after it was let down, ot deep before the clay was thrown in.
n the village children loved her, Miss
; she was so young and pretty—a great prettier than you are, though your face nnie enough."

I know that," I answer, smiling a little, erybody who sees me tells me that my er was prettier than I am."

She was so sweet-looking; I think that what made us all admire her so much.
r poor father never held up his head rwards. I heard people say the day of funeral that he wouldn't be long after and they were right. He was a good
, Miss Lisle, and I think she loved him, gh he was old enough to be her father.
was a little bit absent, and over-fond of musty books, but he was a very saintly-ded man. He couldn't see the hen hing under the dresser but he'd draw n Jerusalem on you. And it was the e with everything; he always had a text
y, and a sermon too, for that matter.
I'd rather have listened to him any day n to Mr. Irving, for all they say about cleverness. He's too clever for poor ntry folk like us, and that's the truth."

have never cared to hear much about father, or had much sympathy with my her's love for him, though I believe it sincere. Somehow I can never fancy loved him as she would have loved a nger man. I am sure she felt great rect and gratitude towards him, and I say she was quite satisfied with him, quite content with her life in the ivyered Vicarage—while it lasted; but I not think a girl of seventeen could really for a husband of sixty-two. I know grandfather was very poor, and that my her had a great many brothers and sis-
, though they are all dead and gone
. And I think she sacrificed herself for m; it was something to get one married, n there were three in the schoolroom four in the nursery.

nd so the minister's wooing had prosper-and so the sweet Dorothy Incledon had hanged the company of all her merry ng sisters and brothers for that of a older than her father, and had never retted it so far as I ever could learn.

If ye had even a sweetheart in the e," old Mollie says, looking hard at me h her dim bleared eyes, as she leans one otted sinewy hand on her stick. "But ybe you've one somewhere else, my bon-bird; and letters are better than nothing, he'll run down to see you now and in."

I have no sweetheart, Mollie—here or where else."

Do you tell me so, with such a pair of eyes in your head? Well, I had a eetheart when I was going to school in efores, and might have been married ee times over before I was sixteen. But, r all, sweethearts is a snare and a deion, and a body is as well without them, they could only believe it."

As old Mollie is a widow for the third e, this expression of wisdom does not ry much weight with it. I look at the thered cheeks, the shaking chin, the wrinkled throat, which reminds me of the neck of a turkey, and wonder if she could ever have been young and pretty, and if I shall one day be as gruesome and ugly, if I should live so long.

"Had my aunts ever any lovers?" It is on the tip of my tongue to ask. But I do not care to encourage old Mollie's gossiping tongue, though I have asked myself the question a hundred times since I came to Osierbrook, and there seems no probability of my being able to gratify my curiosity by any more legitimate means.

"'Tis a pity there isn't some young thing like yourself to keep company with you," Mollie mumbles on, looking up at me; while I wonder if she was always as small as she is now—the crown of her white cap scarcely reaches as high as my elbow as we stand together in the doorway, facing the shadowy lane. "But there's nobody in the place at all since Miss May Rutherford got married. That was a great wedding entirely, though the bridegroom was as mean-looking a gentleman as ever I laid my two eyes upon; and he a lord and all! There's nobody at Velfry now but the old lady and poor Mr. Ralph, though I did hear somebody say that Mr. Erroll had wrote to tell them he was coming back from China, and that as poor as he went out."

I know nothing about Velfry, nor the people whose names are household words to old Mollie. I have never been here, since I was a baby of a week old, till I came to Osierbrook three days ago, and I cannot say I feel much interest in either of the gentlemen whose names she has mentioned.

"You have got your garden in beautiful order, Mollie," I remark, looking over the low wooden palling which divides it from the narrow walk, paved with pebbles, leading into the lane.

"Yes," the old woman answers, with an air of pride, "I was eighty-three last November, Miss Lisle; but I planted that row of kidney beans myself yesterday. Do you mind the old rhyme—

"'When elm leaves are as big as a shilling, Plant kidney beans, if to plant 'em you're willing;
When elm leaves are as big as a penny,
You must plant kidney beans if you mean to have any.'

"I never heard it before," I laugh, looking up at the elm leaves. "Well, Mollie, I must go now; but I'll soon come to see you again. Oh, what a pretty cat!"

A large cat of curious uniform silver-gray color has squeezed herself slowly through the garden pailing, yawning and stretching herself in the sun.

"She was a pretty cat till she lost her tail—poor thing!—in a trap or summat. I never knew how she did it; but she walked in one morning with only a stump, just as you see. I cried a bucketful over her; but Miss Judith, she told me not to mind—that it made her look very tidy like, and sure I had to laugh then at the idea of a cat looking more tidier without her tail!"

It is a novel idea; but even tidiness may be bought at too dear a price.

"Who is Miss Judith?" I ask, stroking the cat's fur.

"Miss Judith Irving, up at the Glebe? Don't you know her?"

"I never even heard her name before. Is she an old lady?"

"No, indeed, she's a very young lady!" Mollie answers, shaking her head. At the same time she looks at me a little sharply, as if to see how far my ignorance is real or feigned.

"Oh, then, there is another young person in the parish, besides myself, Mollie?"

"I doubt if you'll see much of Miss Judith, Miss Lisle."

"Why not? The Vicarage is not a quarter of a mile from Osierbrook."

"Oh, it's near enough—too near, maybe!" Mollie observes, with a smile which adds a thousand wrinkles to her face. "I don't think the ladies care much for Miss Judith, or will care much to have you keep company with her."

"Why not?"

"Oh, she's very smart and fond of new-fangled notions, and she says just what comes into her mind about anything; and she laughs at the old clerk in the church when he says 'Ahmin,' and your aunts don't like that! Not that there is any harm in her," the old woman adds cunningly; "only she's too flighty-like and uncertain, and people have taken up ideas about her. And it's a pity, for she's real kind and charitable—'twas her gave me the knitted petticoat I have on, and brought me broth every day last winter while I was laid up with a bad foot, carrying the jug in her hand all through the snow."

I cannot help thinking that Mollie is an ungrateful old wretch even to hint at any shortcomings in a person who has taken the trouble to prolong her mumbling existence. But I do not say so, lest I should be consigned to the same category as Miss Judith Irving, who says everything that comes into her head.

To escape the temptation, I set out on my homeward journey up the lane, swinging the empty basket in my hand which had contained the weekly dole of tea and sugar aunt Theodosia has sent to old Mollie time out of mind, and which she consigned to me to-day because the old woman had expressed a wish to see me, having had the honor and glory of presiding at my entry into the world.

It is a glorious May morning, with the sun, as old Mollie expresses it, splitting the trees. The lane is cool and green in the shadow of the elm boughs, the grass is dewy wet still under the hawthorne edge, milky white with blossoms, and great iridescent clouds lie motionless against the deep blue of the sky.

Half-way down the lane a little wicket-gate opens into the pleasure-ground at Osierbrook; this is a short cut to Mollie's cottage, but not to the village, which lies farther down the road on which the front gate of Osierbrook opens—a long low wooden gate, painted white.

I open the wicket, letting it swing to behind me, and find myself in a long straight walk shut in by laurel hedges, with arches cut in it here and there, one leading round by a gravel path to the yard buildings, another to the kitchen-garden and so on. I have not had time to explore any but the laurel walk yet, and aunt Theodosia's garden close to the house; but, as I pass one of the green arches now, the perfume of narcissus greets my nostrils, and, if I have a passion for anything, it is for a double white narcissus. Aunt Theodosia had none in her garden; I had looked while she took me round it yesterday, because I know they ought to be in blossom in May.

I peer in through the green archway through which the pleasant odor seems to come. A border of box as high as my knee grows right across it—the space beyond is choked with overgrown lines and circles of the same plant, which look as if they had once been borders to flower-beds. In the large oval inclosure in the middle of a lovely clump of narcissi stand nodding their heads on their long straight stalks. To scramble in and gather them is the work of a moment.

Five minutes later I am sauntering up to the front door at Osierbrook with my nose buried in the delicious waxen-white blossoms, and with no more idea in my head that I have committed an unwarrantable theft than Beauty had when she gathered the rose in the Beast's garden.

Osierbrook is a small white house two stories in height, with a japonica growing about the hall-door. The door itself stands open into the small square hall, with polished floor and mahogany hatstand, whereon there are no hats, however—I doubt if any man ever hung up his hat there since Osierbrook was built, except perhaps my father; I suppose he came to see his sisters sometimes, when he lived in the ivy-covered Vicarage on the other side of the hill.

Aunt Anna is writing letters in the window of the dining-room when I walk in, the old parrot is swinging in his hoop, the old dog is asleep on the rug, the old canary is chirping away in his cage in the sunshine.

"How did you find old Mollie, Lisle?"

"Oh, very well!"

"I hope you enjoyed your walk?"

"Oh, yes; it was very pleasant!"

"Your aunt Emily is getting luncheon ready. We never eat luncheon, but I think young girls are always hungry. Where did you get the narcissi? Those are the first I have seen this year."

"I got them here, at Osierbrrook," I answer, touching the white blossoms tenderly.

"I did not know we had any at Osierbrook."

"They were growing in the old garden down by the laurel walk."

Aunt Anna's face changes all at once.

"Oh!" she says, and says no more.

"Why did you let that garden grow so neglected, Aunt Anna? It seems to me the prettiest and sunniest spot in the whole of Osierbrook."

"We did not wish to have it disturbed. Take off your hat, Lisle. Luncheon will be up in a few minutes."

Aunt Anna's manner puzzles me. It is not exactly angry, but as I go up-stairs to my room I fancy she is displeased with me. On the landing I meet aunt Emily coming down, with a pot of preserved apricots in her hand.

"Oh, you have come in, Lisle? What pretty flowers! Where did you get them?"

I tell her, and the smile dies out of her gentle withered face.

"Put them away," she exclaims hurriedly. "Don't let your aunt Anchoretta see them—keep them in your own room, dear; but don't bring any of them down-stairs."

"Why not?" I ask, in unqualified amazement. "Does the perfume make her ill? I knew some people who think it a little too powerful in the house."

"Oh, no; it's not that! But put them away, dear, and don't gather any more flowers in that place. You can get as many as you like in your aunt Theodosia's garden."

There are no narcissi in aunt Theodosia's garden! I arrange my treasure-trove in a tumbler on my dressing-table, wondering what the mystery can be, and thinking it rather hard that I cannot fasten two or three of the lovely white flowers in my brooch to make myself pretty for luncheon. I must ask aunt Theodosia all about it. Aunt Theodosia is the youngest of my aunts, and she seems to me to have more common sense than all the others put together. I think aunt Anne keeps her either frivolous, though she manages her for it on the score of her youth; but she is the most energetic of the four, and does not appear to have the same horror of anything "unusual" or new.

My room at Osierbrook is over the dining-room, very low, with a wide low window close under the eaves of the roof. The curtains of the old-fashioned four-post bedstead are of white dimity, the dressing table and funny little oval glass are draped with white muslin on which are quaint bows of powder-blue ribbon. The great mahogany wardrobe must be at least two hundred years old. Everything at Osierbrook is old—the servants, the furniture, the parrot—— As I look out upon the mossy lawn I see an old pony nibbling the grass, an octogenarian man-servant going down the avenue with letters, followed by a sheep dog whose limbs are stiff and muzzle gray with age. Only I, Lisle Warburton, am of the nineteenth century among all these ancient things.

How shall I contrive to live here, day after day and week after week, with no company but the company of four old women, the youngest of whom is sixty-five? I have scarcely had time to realize what my life here will be yet, but as I brush my curly yellow locks before the dim old glass now I begin to think it will be very dreadful if some companion of my own age does not soon put in an appearance. I shall very soon grow tired of the still dreamy quiet of the old house, with its musty-smelling room and passages, its lawn green with moss, its sunny old-world garden, its ancient ivied elms and oaks and chestnuts, shutting it in from the dusty-white high road.

I lunch by myself on bread and jam and a tumbler of milk, while Aunt Anna writes away in one of the windows, and Aunt Emily busies herself with some plants growing in pots in the other. Aunt Theodosia is working in her garden—I had left her there, in her brown linen apron and gardening-gloves, when I set out to pay my visit to old Mollie—I believe aunt Anchoretta is in her own room. She spends a great deal of her time there, putting her wardrobe and drawers in order, though it puzzles me to think what ever disarranges them.

Shall I grow into an old woman like aunt Anna? I wonder, as I look at her across the table—an old woman in a mob cap and black shawl, with spectacles on her nose, and black mittens on her hands, and a plain little foxy face. It is not a pleasant idea, and either it or the cold milk I am drinking makes me shiver a little. And yet Aunt Anna is a good woman—I may be thankful if my latter end is like hers—even if she has a wizened little foxy face.

"Mrs. Rutherford drove up to see you just now, Lisle, on her way to Longhurst," aunt Emily says, while she picks dead leaves from her geraniums.

"Mrs. Rutherford?"

"Mrs. Rutherford of Velry."

"But I don't know anything about Mrs. Rutherford."

"My dear Lisle, Mrs. Rutherford is your godmother," aunt Anna says severely; "Never say again that you don't know anything about her."

"I am sure I did not know that, aunt Anna."

"You ought to have known it, my dear."

"I never heard that I had any godmother."

Aunt Anna takes off her spectacles to stare at me.

"Never knew you had any godmother, Lisle?" she repeats, in a shocked voice.

"How should I know? Madame Poirotte did not know, or I suppose she would have told me. Not that I didn't get on just as well without them. I never could see what good it did people to have godmothers. There was one girl at the school whose godmother always sent her a great box of dragees and chocolate on her birthday, but she was an exception."

"The child is a perfect heathen!" aunt Anna ejaculates, looking over at aunt Emily.

"I never approved of sending her to that French school," aunt Emily says, shaking her head. "Well, Lisle, you are so fortunate as to possess two godmothers—Mrs. Rutherford of Velfry and myself. Mrs. Rutherford was very fond of your poor dear mother, and asked to be allowed to stand for you when she heard you were a girl

"What is she like?" I ask, more interested in the fact that she was fond of my mother than that she had asked to be allowed to stand for me.

"She is a most charming person. I think her second son is very like her in appearance. But both her eldest son and her daughter are very plain."

"Why does Mollie call Mr. Rutherford 'poor Mr. Ralph'?"

"Because he lost his wife and his little baby, poor fellow, within a week of each other."

"But isn't he quite young?"

"Oh, yes; not more than two or three and thirty."

"Then he can very easily get another wife!" I remark cynically, helping myself to some more apricot preserve.

The Meal Times of the Ancients.

The Greeks and Romans partook of luncheon, but both it and their breakfast were very slight meals. Even if the latter consisted of hot dishes, as it generally did, they were not of a very substantial character, and seeing that the breakfast was eaten immediately on rising, very early, the luncheon could not be regarded in the light of an insult to the breakfast and an injury to the dinner—in which way it is not unfrequently spoken of by English epicures. When one has broken one's fast between six and seven a. m by swallowing a few mouthfuls of bread dipped in a light wine, after the manner of the Greeks, or bread with salt, dried grapes olives or cheese, after the Roman fashion, one may legitimately be entitled to a hot dish of fish or eggs at noon. A luncheon under these circumstances cannot come under the category of either insult or injury to any other meal. The coena or dinner-supper of classical times, consisting of three courses, hore œuvres, piquant dishes, then fish, and meat in several removes, was held in far too high esteem by epicurean appetites to allow of its being injured by any previous repast. "Not till the supper or dinner, call it what we will, was served did the noble Roman take his daily food with luxurious elegance and ease. The evening meal was for the few, and not for the many. Those who partook of it reclined at length on couches, in the spirit of festal enjoyment and social pleasure, donned like a marriage robe. Dinner or supper, this was the meal of the day. Business was left behind, care and toil were forgotten, the day's work was done." This graceful peep at an ancient Roman's dinner, from the pen of one versed in the domestic life of those times, is sufficient broadly to show that, after all, our own habits are not very dissimilar; but it should be remembered that, like our more immediate predecessor's the Romans were not as addicted to turning night into day as we are, and that although the late dinner was the meal of the day the hour at which it was partaken of was far earlier than ours; and that consequently it may be assumed the lateness was divested of many of its pernicious results. Indeed, the Romans had a great regard for the value of daylight, artificial light was little resorted to, and he went to bed, generally speaking, at the close of day.—London Society.

"Our Father."

A good woman, searching out the children of want, one cold day, tried to open a door in the third story of a wretched house, when she heard a little voice say: "Pull the string up high! Pull the string up high!" She looked up and saw a string, which, on being pulled, lifted a latch; and she opened the door upon two little, half-naked children, all alone. Very cold and pitiful they looked.

"Do you take care of yourselves, little ones?" asked the good woman.

"God does," said the oldest.

"And are you not very cold? No fire on a day like this?"

"Oh! when we are very cold, we creep under the quilt, and I put my arms round Tommy, and Tommy puts his arms round me, and we say, 'Now I lay me,' then we get warm," said the little girl.

"And what have you to eat, pray?"

"When granny comes home she fetches something. Granny says God has got enough. Granny calls us God's sparrows; and we say 'Our Father' and 'daily bread every day. God is our Father."

Tears came in the good woman's eyes. She had a mistrusting spirit herself; but these two little "sparrows," perched in that cold, upper chamber, taught her a sweet lesson of faith and trust she will never forget.

Honesty the Best Policy in Religion.

An honest dealing with one's own hidden self has in it a spiritual dignity, beauty, value, even with only its one article of conscious faith, which must be inconceivably dearer to that God who is good, who is near, who knows us, than any amount of easy confession of longest creeds that have never cost a moment's hesitation in their recital. This, too, may be a genuine belief; but what the soul has to fight for of spiritual treasure, whether to retain it, or to regain it, or to win it, brings the soul into a closer sympathy with the tempted and victorious Christ than can be reached on any smoother road. In other natures similar conflicts must be waged against the worldly, sensual, and variously selfish spirit. But the present is especially a day of doubt, disbelief, uncertainty, in the higher ranges of religious thought. It is so difficult to walk by faith, to grasp the intangible, to endure as seeing Him who is invisible, that thousands are drifting, even against their own wish, from early anchorages, or have never yet found a firm roadstead.

A life spent worthily should be measured by a nobler line—by deeds, not years.

When you cannot do as you like, the best thing is to like what you do.

D. J. SHANAHAN.

THE new pastor of the Flesherton Methodist Church, Rev. W. Ayers, has taken a most active part in the great revival now in progress here, ever since his arrival. The Rev. gentleman has a strong voice, is a good singer, good speaker, and has infused a wonderful amount of enthusiasm into the meetings by his untiring energy and zeal. We predict for him a successful pastorate.—Advance.

SUDDEN DEATH.—Mr. Duncan McDonald, of Bentinck, on Thursday last, came down to the Rocky Mill and took home two bags of flour. Having to carry the bags some distance from the waggon to his house he put both bags on his shoulder and carried them some distance. When he reached the house he asked for a drink of water and on taking it was seized with a paralytic stroke. He never spoke afterwards, and died early Friday morning. He leaves a wife and seven sons and daughters to mourn his sudden death, and a number of other relatives in Durham and Bentinck. The funeral took place on Sunday and was largely attended.—Grey Review.

On Saturday morning, July 4th, Richard Banks, of Amaranth, a brakesman on the C. P. R., had his hand badly crushed between two cars at Flesherton. He was taken to Orangeville and on the following Monday, Drs. Smith and Lewis amputated the hand at the wrist. The patient is now doing well.—Shelburne Free Press.

THEIR REWARD.—The volunteers who went to the North-West to assist in putting down the rebellion are to have each the choice of a land grant of 320 acres or scrip to the cash value of $80, and those who have been wounded, as also the relatives of those who lost their lives will receive pensions according to their injury, and degree of standing in the army.

ORDINATION.—The ordination and induction of the Rev. J. A. Ross to the pastorate of Dundalk and Fraser settlement congregations, will take place on Wednesday, 29th inst., in Erskine church Dundalk at 2 o'clock p. m. Rev. A. Wilson of Markdale will preside, Rev. J. Morrison of Cedarville will address the pastor and Rev. D. McLeod of Priceville will address the people.—Dundalk Herald.

Miss Laura Rorke, is prepared to give lessons in music on Piano or Organ, also in Drawing and Painting at reasonable terms. Having made a specialty of these studies while attending Ont. Ladies College. She respectfully solicits the patronage of the people of Markdale and vicinity. Rooms at the residence of Mrs. Austin. 253-4

ANNUAL PIC-NIC.—The annual pic-nic of Miss Gilray's school, section 5, Euphrasia, was held in the grove of Mr. Geo. Kinney, on the 24th ult., where the children and friends spent a most enjoyable day, engaging in all sorts of outdoor sports. The refreshments were a marvel of richness and excellence, finishing with a plentiful supply of ice cream. The committe met on a recent evening to congratulate themselves over the success of the pic-nic, finishing up with a most delightful hop.—Meaford Mirror.

On Sunday last Mr. T. Gilray, Reeve of Euphrasia, was driving home from church in a single rig, accompanied by one of his sons. The horse took fright, becoming unmanagable, and Mr. Gilray jumped out thinking he could better control the animal if on the ground. The horse dragged Mr. Gilray a considerable distance by the lines but he eventually managed to head him into a fence corner where he was secured. Mr Gilray had the middle finger of his left hand knocked out of joint against a stone over which he was dragged, besides receiving some severe scratches and bruises on other parts of his body. His pluck in hanging on to the lines was extraordinary, but as he expresses it himself: "If he had let the horse go the chances were that my son would have been killed." Mr. Gilray will be unable to use his left arm for some time.—Meaford Mirror.

Euphrasia Council.

The council met pursuant to adjournment on the 4th day of July, 1885. Members all present; minutes of last session of council read and confirmed.

Moved by Mr. Williscroft, seconded by Mr. Galbraith, that Mr. Shute have bridge at grist mill repaired.

Moved by Deputy-Reeve, seconded by Mr. Howey, that we adjourn till the 22nd September.

CARSON PRICE,
Clerk.

IMPORTANT.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Express and Carriage hire and stop at the Grand Union Hotel, opposite the Grand Central Depot. Elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced at $1.00 and upwards per day. European plan, Elevator, Resturant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroad to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first class hotel in the city.

SCIENTIFIC AND USEFUL.

The British Government officials are making experiments with a new locomotive torpedo steered by electricity from the shore.

It is now claimed that birds as nearly as possible imitate the nests in which they were reared, and bring to the work a sort of rudmentary reason.

The camphor laurel, a native of China, and the tree from which most of the camphor of commerce is obtained, has been successfully introduced into California.

Cryolite, a mineral which is of great value in the potash manufacture, has been discovered in the Yellowstone. Heretofore it has been obtained only in Greenland.

Scorpions and spiders properly feed upon the juices of their victims after lacerating them with their jaws, yet fragments of insects have been sometimes found in their stomachs.

Dr. R. Von Lendenfeld found traces of glacial action on the highest peaks of the Australian mountains. No evidence of ice action was found at less than 5,800 feet above the sea.

A Bavarian chemist is reported to have invented an enameling liquid which renders any species of stone or cement harder than granite, and gives it the indelible appearance of any mineral that may be desired.

An English writer points out the probability that a smoky atmosphere is not a wholly unmitigated evil, since its carbon and sulphur must absorb many germs of disease, and tend to prevent the spread of epidemics.

A concentrated solution of bichromate of potash and glue makes a cement for articles of broken glass which will resist boiling water. It is carefully applied to the surface, and when the broken glass parts are brought together the whole is exposed to the action of the sun.

Many soft timbers, especially walnut are more destructive to the cutting edge of planes than harder wood, such as oak. The reason is the presence of extremely minute crystals of silica in these soft woods. These particles are of uniform size and evenly distributed through the tissue of the wood.

Mr. F. W. Clark has exhibited in London a new system of gas lighting for private houses by means of recuperative lamps. By a ventilating method the lamps consume their own smoke, and the burners are so formed that the requisite air is heated to a high temperature and admitted to the lamps at the point of ignition.

It has been noticed that boiler explosions are especially frequent in the morning. Take, for example, an engine which works during the day with steam at 6 atmospheres. The workmen leave the factory at 7 o'clock P. M.; about 6 o'clock the fireman reduces his fires and leaves the boiler with the gauge at 4 atmospheres. On returning the next morning, at 5h. 30m., he generally finds the gauge at 1.5 or 2 atmospheres; with a fine water level. He profits by the reserved heat, which represents a certain expenditure of fuel; as an economist he utilizes it, and drives his fires, to be ready for the return of the workmen, without suspecting the dangers concealed in the water which has been boiling all night. He does not feed his boilers, because they are at a good level. In other words, he prepares, unconsciously, the conditions which are most favorable to superheating, and a consequent sudden and terrible explosion, which will be attributed to some mysterious and unknown cause.

Mr. Adams and the Mule.

Mr. Archibald Adams, a teamster had an interesting and exhilarating experience the other morning. A week ago Mr. Adams bought a pair of plain, ordinary, everyday mules at the horse market. Now Mr. Adams is a careful man and has a kind heart for animals. So when he noticed in the farmers' column of a newspaper a day or so ago that it was an excellent thing to wash the hoofs of horses occasionally in hot water, he came to the conclusion that he would try its beneficial effects on those mules. He got a pail of hot water yesterday morning and hied himself away to the stable. The mules blinked at him with a mild, languid air, flirted their little tails about pleasantly, and awaited their master's will. Mr. Adams set the pail of water down at the rear feet of one of the mules. The mule kept on looking pleasant. Then Mr. Adams lifted up one of the hoofs and carefully put it in the bucket.—!!!....

The Kings.

The King of Greece is the founder of a dynasty.

King Humbert was 17 years old before a kingdom of Italy existed.

It was an act of abdication that made Francis Joseph Emperor of Austria.

Don Carlos is watching to pounce upon the crown of the young Alfonso.

The King of the Belgians is about the only European sovereign who was born to a throne and reached it.

The Kings of Prussia, Portugal and Sweden were born younger sons, the King of Denmark a distant cousin, and the Queen of England but fifth in succession of the reigning sovereign.

CURIOUS FACTS.

The giraffe has never been known to utter a sound.

Swans have been known to live to the age of 300 years, and Cuvier thinks it probable that whales sometimes live 1,000 years.

It is said that the crime of parricide was unknown in one of the states of ancient Greece until a law was enacted for the special punishment of such a crime should it occur.

On one of the Azore Islands, St Michael's the people invariably drop the family name, each being known by entirely different unlike titles. The same names are also applied to either sex indiscriminately.

Some time ago the two year-old baby of Owen Walker, of Marshall, swallowed a copper cent. All efforts to remove the coin from the child's stomach proved unavailing, and the little one has been growing weaker day by day. Strange to say the child is turning blue. A heavy blue circle under the eyes was first noticed. This began to spread and is gradually extending.

A Monongahela, Pa., cat is credited with preventing the burning of a house last Winter. It is stated that the family all went out one evening, and upon their return found that a live coal had been thrown out upon the carpet setting it on fire. For some distance around the place the carpet had been scratched to shreds and the blistered feet of their feline pet showed that it was through his efforts that a serious fire was prevented.

Italian antiquarians have discovered false teeth in a skull which has been excavated in an ancient Etruscan cemetery, with many other curiosities at present stowed safely away at the museum of antiquities at Corneto, in Tuscany. The sepulchre out of which the skull was taken dates, according to experts, from the fifth or sixth century B. C., and the false teeth are nothing but animal teeth attached to the human teeth by means of small gold plates.

Joseph Robins, hailing from Chicago, is known in side show circles as "The Human Furnace," because of the peculiar properties of his breath. To prove his claim to the title, he, some time ago, lit a match by blowing his breath upon it; set fire to a piece of paper, and singed the hairs on the back of a man's hand in the same manner. But the best test of all was when he lit a kerosene lamp three feet distant from him by blowing his breath through a piece of stovepipe on to the wick. He was unable to explain his peculiar faculty, further than to assert that he became possessed of it while a child, when he was ill for several years, and the physicians gave him large doses of sulphur. He asserted his ability to make water boil as easily as he could light a match.

Delicate Diseases

of either sex, however induced, speedily, thoroughly and permanently cured. Complicated and obstinate cases of blood taints, ulcers, obstructions, unnatural discharges, exhausted vitality, premature decline, nervous, mental, and organic debility, varicocele, hydrocele, diseases of prostrate gland, kidneys and bladder, piles, fistulas and rupture, all permanently cured. Staff of twelve expert specialists in constant attendance, constituting the most complete organization of medical and surgical skill in America. Send history of case and address for illustrated pamphlet of particulars. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N.Y.

"Which do you like the best, Miss Florence, rowing or driving?" he asked as he gazed into her azure eyes. "Oh, driving, by all means." "Why?" "Because you have to use both hands to row." They won't driving.

Drowsiness in the Day-time unless caused by lack of sleep or from overeating, is a symptom of disease. If it be accompanied by general debility, headache, loss of appetite, coated tongue and sallow complexion, you may be sure you are suffering from biliousness and consequent derangement of the stomach and bowels. Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" are a sure cure for all ailments of this nature. They cleanse and purify the blood and relieve the digestive organs.

A Wisconsin man was reported as "murdered" when the word should have been "married," but the distinction was so slight that the proof-reader let it pass.

When all so-called remedies fail, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures.

When a girl is young she wants numerous dolls, but when she grows older her wants increase and she desires several dollars.

Latest from Detroit.

Many Americans spend the summer months in Canada, and being close observers, and ever on the alert for the best of everything, it is not surprising that the proprietors of that marvelous corn remedy, Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor should be in receipt of numerous letters of enquiry from the other side of the line. Mrs. W. N. Strong, 71 Adams Ave., Detroit, had used Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor with the most satisfactory results, and March 30th, 1883, writes:—"Kindly give price per dozen, as we want to get some." Hundreds of similar letters support our contention that for a sure, safe, painless, and never disappointing remedy, Putnam's Corn Extractor stands without a rival. N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, propr's.

The smoker who has not yet tried the "Myrtle Navy" tobacco has a new pleasure before him in the use of "the weed." An investment of twenty-five cents will furnish him with the means of giving it a fair test. Let us advise him to make the experiment; he will find the tobacco to be all that its thousands of friends claim for it, and they are far from stingy in their praise.

On life's journey, without a destination, the traveler is sure to get lost in the woods.

Have You Thought About It?

Why suffer a single moment when you can get immediate relief from all internal or external pains by the use of Polson's Nerviline, the great pain cure. Nerviline has never been known to fail in a single case; it cannot fail, for it is a combination of the most powerful pain subduing remedies known. Try a 10 cent sample bottle of Nerviline. You will find Nerviline a sure cure for neuralgia, toothache, headache. Buy and try. Large bottles 25 cents, by all druggists.

ALBERT COLLEGE, (IN AFFILIATION WITH VICTORIA UNIVERSITY, COBOURG,) BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO.
This College, founded in 1854, has had in attendance over 3,000 different students. It offers unsurpassed facilities for "general culture" and for matriculation in Arts, Law, etc., at a moderate cost. The Collegiate Course embraces both "matriculation work" and selected studies in Science and Philosophy. The Conservatory of Music has awarded 26 diplomas of graduation in three years. It was never so popular as now. The Business College is under the direction of a practical accountant. Ornamental penmanship a specialty. The School of Art is in affiliation with the Ontario School of Art, and teaches its courses.
A special course of lectures for conference students of the Methodist Church, in which the Rev. Dr. Carman, Jeffers, the Rev. J. B. Clarkson, M.A., and others take part, will be given during the winter months.
A reduction in fees of 10 per cent. (instead of a definite sum as formerly) is granted to students taking two or more Departments. Both ladies and gentlemen admitted.

A TALE OF SHIPWRECK.

Confined for Three Days in the Hull of a Capsized Ship.

The story of a poor woman who, with her three children, was imprisoned for seventeen hours under a capsized boat, has recalled to one of our correspondents a similar case of suffering which he thus describes. The brig Nerina, of Dunkerque, sailed from that place on Saturday, October 31, 1840, under the command of Capt. Pierre Everact, with a cargo of oil and canvas for Marseilles. Her burden was about 114 tons. The crew consisted of seven persons, including the captain and his nephew—a boy fourteen years old. At three o'clock in the afternoon of Monday, November 16th, they were forced to heave-to in a gale of wind, at about ten or twelve leagues southwest of the Scilly Isles. At seven o'clock of the same evening a heavy sea struck the vessel, and she suddenly capsized, turning bottom upward. The only man on the deck at the time was thrown into the sea and drowned.

In the forecastle were three seamen—Vincent, Vantaure and Jean Marie. The two former succeeded in getting up close to the keelson, and so kept their heads above water. Jean Marie was not so fortunate; he must have been in some measure entangled, for after convulsively grasping the heel of Vantaure for a few seconds, he let go his hold and was drowned. The other two, finding that the shock of the upset had started the bulkhead between the forecastle and the hold, and that the cargo itself had fallen down on the deck, contrived to draw themselves alongside the keelson toward the stern of the ship, whence they thought they heard some voices. At the time of the accident the captain, the mate, John Gallo, and the boy Nicolas Nissen, were in the cabin. The captain caught the boy in his arms, under the impression that their last moment had arrived. The mate succeeded in wrenching open the trap hatch in the cabin deck, and clearing out some casks that were jammed in the lazarette, a sort of small triangle space between the cabin floor and the keelson, where stores are generally stowed away. Having done this, he scrambled up into the vacant space and took the boy from the hand of the captain. In about an hour they were joined by Vincent and Vantaure from the forecastle. There were then five persons closely cooped together.

As they sat they were obliged to bend their bodies, for want of height above them while the water reached as high as their chests, from which irksome position one at a time obtained some relief by stretching at full length on the barrels in the hold, squeezing himself up close to the keelson. They were able to distinguish between day and night by the light striking from above into the hold and being reflected up through the cabin skylight and then into the lazarette through the trap hatch in the cabin-floor. The day and night of Tuesday, November 17th, and the day following, passed without food, without fire, almost without hope; but still each encouraged the others, endeavoring to assuage the pangs of hunger by chewing the bark stripped from the hoops of the casks. Want of fresh air threatening them with death by suffocation, the mate worked almost incessantly for two days and one night endeavoring with his knife to cut a hole through the hull. Happily the knife broke before he had succeeded in accomplishing his object, the result of which must have proved fatal, as the confined air alone preserved the vessel in a sufficiently buoyant state. In the dead of the night of Wednesday, the 18th the vessel suddenly struck heavily; on the third blow the stern dropped so much that all hands were forced to make the best their way forward toward the bows; attempting which poor Vincent was drowned. After the lapse of an hour or two, finding the water subbing, Gallo got down into the cabin, while seeking for the hatchet which was usually kept there, was forced to rush up on deck for shelter to avoid being drowned; the sea rising on him rapidly. Another hour more of suffering succeeded, and then they rejoiced to see by the dawning of the day of Thursday, the 19th, that the vessel was fast on the rocks, one of which protruded through the skylight.

The captain then went down into the cabin and found that the quarter of the ship had stove in, and looking through the opening called out to his companions, "Thank God we are saved; I see a man on the beach." Immediately after this the man approached and put in his hand, which the captain hailed, almost as much to the terror of the man as to the delight of the captain. The people of the neighborhood were soon assembled; the side of the ship was cut open and the four poor fellows were liberated after an imprisonment of three days and three nights. The spot where the vessel struck is called Ballick, in the the Island of St. Mary's, Scilly. She must have been driven on the rocks soon after midnight, at about the period of high water, and was discovered at about 7 o'clock on Thursday morning by a boat accidentally passing along the cliffs. In another half hour the returning tide would have sealed their fate. The body of Vincent was thrown on the rocks a short distance from the wreck and was interred in the burying-ground of St. Mary's.

The least remarkable part of the story is that in the afternoon of Wednesday, the 18th, the wreck, floating bottom upward was fallen in with about a league and a half distance from the islands by two pilot boats, which took her in tow for about an hour; but their tow ropes breaking and night approaching, with a heavy sea running and every appearance of bad weather, they abandoned her, having no suspicion, of course, that there were human beings alive in the hold of the vessel, which was floating with little more than her keel out of water. Had the vessel not been so taken in tow the set of the current would have drifted her clear of the isles into the vast Atlantic.

A RUSSIAN REVIEW.

A Grand Military Display Ending with a Peculiar Rendition of a Prayer.

We rode at least a mile and a half, says Gen. Higginson in Blackwood's, past the line of tents, and must have seen 50,000 men. The ground is prettily accidente, and altogether well suited for camp purposes. At the end we came upon the guard regiments and the Preobrajensky regiment, with whom finished the inspection; and here were assembled all the bands and drums, to the number of 800, in one compact mass facing the empress's pavilion or tent, at the door of which she and her ladies alighted, and were joined by the emperor and grand dukes. We all dismounted and came inside the square, of which the royalty and staff formed one side, the musicians the opposite side, the other two sides being composed of officers of the various corps who had hurried to the spot. In the centre, on a mound, stood the conductor of the united bands of music, and near him one drummer-boy, or perhaps a lad of 20. We—the foreign missions—stood in line, and the emperor came down from the pavilion and spoke to each of the generals. He was very gracious to me, and inquired about my service and the commands I had held. This over, he stood alone in the centre, and a detachment of sergeants in full marching order passed him one by one, each sergeant giving the evening report of his picket and of the usual "watch-setting" in a loud voice, the czar thus fulfilling for the moment the role of camp commandant. We (generals only) were then taken up, one by one, to the empress, who talked to me about the Princess of Wales, Cowes, Osborne, etc., and was altogether gracious and charming. Then tea was handed round, and the crowd of officers and of the troops generally kept closing round the square as the hour for "the retreat," or zaria drew nigh. Meanwhile heavy clouds had gathered in the horizon, and a storm seemed to threaten us, though the view down the slope and over the valley to Krasnoe distant about a mile, was not rendered less beautiful by the combination of waning sunlight and threatening clouds. Eight o'clock sounds; each field battery fires an evening gun, three rockets shoot into the air, and the drums and bands roll out, with a solemnity and volume of sound not easily forgotten, the evening hymn. As the last notes die off the drummer-boy steps forward, the band-master descends, and the little drummer, sole occupant of the square, repeats slowly but with perfect distinctness the Lord's prayer. Every head is uncovered and bows, from the emperor to the furthermost spectator; and I should in my heart pity the man who, as the little lad's "Amen" went up in its solitary simplicity, could scoff at or even be unimpressed by the silence which followed. There was a total absence of all exaggeration or straining for increased effect. The bands then burst forth with the Russians national air so well known to all of us, and the scene closed as night fell.

A Fortune.

Thomas J. Malby has resigned his position as superintendent of North End Industrial School, and will go to Newfoundland and then to England to secure the Churchill estate of $35,000,000. Over 100 years ago Nicholas Churchill came to Newfoundland and engaged in the seal and cod fisheries. He was very prosperous and invested his surplus earnings in real estate in England and Newfoundland. At his death about thirty years later, he left some $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 to his daughter, Elizabeth Churchill, a whimsical lady living in England. Elizabeth died without marrying. She was a good business woman, and added much to the property. She died in 1876, at the age of one hundred and four years.

She left no will, and as she was supposed to be without living relatives it was thought that the vast property would revert to the Crown. After several years an advertisement came to Mr. Malby, and he at once began to make investigation. It took some time to establish the proofs, but he thinks he now has made it out a clear case. Mrs Malby, the mother of the claimant, was a niece of Nicholas Churchill and cousin to Elizabeth. Church records have been searched and dates and names copied and arranged so that the American family have little doubt of success. In this belief they are supported by several lawyers in New York. There are eight relatives of the ancient fisherman living in this country and they have delegated Mr. Malby to look after their joint interests.

One of the claimants to this immense fortune is a modest unassuming carpenter living in Toronto.

PEARLS OF TRUTH.

Railing among lovers is the next neighbor to forgiveness.

Pitch upon the best course in life, and custom will render it the most easy.

That which seemeth most casual and subject to fortune is yet dispensed by the ordinance of God.

Praise is sometimes as hurtful as censure. It is as bad to be blown into the air as to be cast into a pit.

Any man who puts his life in peril in a cause which is esteemed, becomes the darling of all men.

In the man whose childhood has known caresses there is always a fibre of memory that can be touched to gentle issues.

There is no real growth of character except by a conquest over opposing difficulties—the doing right when it is against our inclinations and prejudices.

Those, though in highest places, who slight and disoblige their friends, shall infallibly come to know the value of them, by having none when they shall most need them.

It does us good to admire what is good and beautiful; but it does us infinitely more good to love it. We grow like what we admire; but we become one with what we love.

One great reason why many children abandon themselves wholly to silly sports, and trifle away all their time insipidly, is because they have found their curiosity balked.

Every scholar should acquaint himself with a superficial scheme of all the sciences. Yet there is no necessity for every man of learning to enter into their difficulties and deep recesses.

Do you think of one falsity as harmless, and another as slight, and another as unintended? Cast them all aside; they may be slight and accidental, but they are ugly soot from the smoke for all that.

We should do nothing inconsistent with the spirit and genius of our institutions. We should do nothing for revenge, but everything for security; nothing for the past, everything for the present and the future.

There is as much wisdom in bearing with other people's defects as in being sensible of their good qualities; and we should make the follies of others rather a warning and an instruction to ourselves than a subject of mirth and mockery of those who commit them.

Nature is a careful economist, who permits only those faculties or muscles to develop which are used; and, as every faculty and muscle has a use, it follows that that condition is nearest perfect where all are employed, and, per contra, that inactivity leads to decay.

Everything yields before the strong and earnest will. It grows by exercise; it excites confidence in others, while it takes the lead to itself. Difficulties before which mere cleverness fails, and which leaves the irresolute prostrate and helpless, vanish before it. They not only do not impede its progress, but it often makes of them stepping stones to a higher and more enduring triumph.

Our true knowledge is to know our own ignorance. Our true strength is to know our own weakness. Our true dignity is to confess that we have no dignity, and are nobody and nothing in ourselves, and to cast ourselves down before the dignity of God, under the shadow of whose wings, and in the shadow of whose countenance alone is any created being safe.

One means of confirming and establishing one's affections is by serving the loved. Nothing endears one person to another so much as aiding and serving him, especially if self-sacrifice is involved. Giving what is valued always increases affection to the recipients, even if it be only material benefits that are conferred, much more when it is our time, our labours, and ourselves.

The Russian Army.

A company of Russian infantry of the line consists of 215 officers, non-commissioned officers and men. A battalion is composed of four companies, and three battalions form a regiment. A squadron of regular cavalry consists of 210 officers, non-commissioned officers and men, and 176 horses. The squadron is divided into four sections; two squadrons form a division; and four field squadrons and one reserve squadron form a regiment. A battery of artillery contains eight guns. A 4-pounder field-battery has 261 officers and men, 160 horses, and 24 waggons. A 9-pounder field-battery has 332 officers and men, 214 horses, and 33 waggons. A 3-pounder mountain-battery has 328 officers and men, 194 horses, and 112 ammunition boxes, which are carried on pack animals A 4-pounder horse-battery has 337 officers and men, 324 horses, and 24 waggons. A mitrailleuse-battery has 221 officers and men, 140 horses, and 16 waggons. The battery is divided into two half batteries and the half-battery into two sections.

A Kentucky girl was struck by lightning while dressing for her wedding. Without turning round or taking the hairpins out of her mouth, she simply remarked: "You girls had better stop flinging your shoes till we get started."

FOREIGN NOTES.

The recent Bach festival at Albert Hall, London, resulted in a loss of $3,500, which will have to be paid by the guarantors.

Oko Jumbo, a West African chief, visited the Tower of London the other day with his son. Both speak English, and wore white plug hats and trousers.

Lord Salisbury, it is said, will allow Egypt to be occupied by Turkish troops, and allow them to be paid out of the Egyptian treasury. France may not be so willing.

Over $60,000 is to be spent on the Stratford Church in which the bones of Shakespeare lie. The ancient doorway near his tomb will be opened to give access to the new vestry.

The duke of Schleswig-Houltein-Augustenburg is a suitor for the hand of the Princess Louise of Wales. He is a nephew of Prince Christian, and came of age last February.

Mr. Herbert Gladstone, while speaking at Leeds, made the remark, "I know very little of Ireland," when Mr. Biggar jumped up and said: "Be jabers, but your father knows less."

The re-election of Lord Randolph Churchill to Parliament is generally conceded to have been the result of the earnest work of his Yankee wife, Jennie, daughter of Leonard Jerome.

Ellen Terry's first husband, the artist Watts, has declined the baronetcy offered him by the Queen. If Ellen had stuck to Watts she would have had a handle to her name; but Watts in a name?

For some unaccountable reason English trout this year refuse to rise to the May-fly, and curiously enough with the refusal of the trout the May fly itself has disappeared. This is the bait that is most imitated.

According to the Daily Telegraph a railroad in India has declined to carry 10,000 monkeys—sacred monkeys at that—which the Brahmins were anxious to transport from Benares, the City of the Gods, to some distant spot.

The Welsh language is dying out. Fifteen years ago 34 per cent. of the population spoke English, 45 English and Welsh, and 21 only Welsh. It is believed that within twenty-five years English will be universally spoken.

The orchestra at the coming bicentenary of Handel at the Crystal Palace, London, will number 469 performers. Two hundred and two violins (102 seconds), 61 violas, 60 cellos and 53 basses, making 376 strings. There will be 2,782 voices in the chorus.

"Might I venture," says Truth, "to remind the ladies who attend Sandown that they wear their dresses so short in front they would do well to exercise a little care in sitting down, more especially as the appendages at the back of their costumes seem to necessitate their balancing themselves on the extreme front edge of their chairs."

The Art of Keeping Cool.

It may seem surprising, yet it is none the less true, that the art of keeping cool is understood in Cuba a hundred times better than here. The very first thing that strikes us when we get to Cuba is that all humanity seems to be bent upon keeping cool, and everything is directed to that end. We strangers in our cloth garments are the only ones who are hot there. The natives look as cool as they feel. They look picturesquely cool They wear suits of linen, of thin silk, of light-weight, duck or drill, with light, low-cut shoes, silk or Lisle thread hose and under-garments; hats made of fine straw or grass, that do not appear to weigh an ounce. I cannot give to a gentleman a clearer idea of how cool they must feel than by saying that there is not such a thing to be had in Cuba as a shirt with a separate collar. You say that such suits of clothing as I describe when we see them, look unshapely, and even unsightly. So they do; because our tailors do not seem to know how to make them, and our laundresses starch them too stiff. Experience and practice would overcome that. Havana is a very dressy and fashion-fearing city. The tailors make those thin garments as stylishly and as shapely as our suits. The women there do not dress so very unlike our own women; that is to say that Canadian ladies dress more sensibly in Summer than Canadian men do. In both countries the result is reached by lessening the number and weight of under-garments and donning Summer silks or other almost gossamer goods for outer wear.

Cholera Mixture.

The following recipe has been in use for more than forty years, and is said to be "the best remedy for looseness of the bowels ever devised." If this remedy is taken in time, cholera need not be feared. Take equal parts of tincture of opium, red pepper, rhubarb, peppermint and camphor, and mix them for use. In case of diarrhœa, take a dose of ten or twenty drops in two or three tablespoonfuls of water. As the dose is so small the mixture can be carried in a tiny vial in the waistcoat pocket, and be always at hand.

Health and Ability to Work.

This is a working age. The merciless law of the survival of the fittest is driving the weak and incapable to the wall. The strong body and the strong brain are uppermost, and in this enlightened time no one is so dull as to deny that a sane mind is surest to dwell in a sane body. Sane bodies—that is, strong and healthy bodies—are the sine qua non of success in work. It is fashionable to work. Even many of the rich and lazy are being driven by the sheer force of public opinion into some sort of work. The vast and complex systems of charities now in vogue; the innumerable classes of students who are meeting every winter in our finest houses to study art, literature, language, science; the enormous amount of fine embroidery in every parlor, largely the work of the ladies of the household—these and a score of other signs point to the fact that we are living in a country and period where activity is the rule and sloth the exception. The competition in all sorts of labor and traffic is enormous. The strength demanded to excel in any trade or profession is very great.

Women who have their livings to earn must enter this severe competition, and they will never receive consideration because they are women. They must excel in order to be successful. Excellence implies strength—not the spasmodic, nervous strength which makes an effort once in awhile under extraordinary pressure, but the strength which can turn off daily work without excessive fatigue—the strength which leaves the eye still bright and the step elastic after a long day behind the counter, over the sewing-machine, at the desk, at the easel, in the kitchen, in the school-room. Such strength as this does not go with a small waist. From the nature of things, it can never—unless, as has been pointed out, in exceptional cases—be found in women with small waists. Strong back and abdominal muscles—muscles which can do their work without the deadly props of steel and whalebone now so universally worn—a large digestive capacity, a rapid and utterly unobstructed flow of the blood in the veins and the arteries—these are some of the requirements of health and strength. And these things take up room. In most woman God has given room for these organs and their processes, but it is reduced and contracted in order to make the waist appear small. In the name of honorable labor; of healthy and happy infancy and childhood; of intelligent, high-minded womanhood; of everything that is beautiful and worth having for women in this world, we plead for the scorned, maligned, the condemned large waist. Give your body room. It is a sin against humanity and its Maker to compress your waist.

Eating Before Sleeping.

It is a common impression that to take food immediately before going to bed and to sleep is unwise. Such a suggestion is answered by a reminder that the instinct of animals prompts them to sleep as soon as they have eaten; and in summer an after-dinner nap, especially when that meal is taken at midday, is a luxury indulged in by many. If the ordinary hour of the evening meal is 6 or 7 o'clock, and of the first morning meal 7 or 8 o'clock, an interval of twelve hours or more elapses without food, and for persons whose nutrition is at fault this is altogether too long a period for fasting. That such an interval without food is permitted explains many a restless night, and much of the head and back ache, and the languid, half-rested condition on rising, which is accompanied by no appetite for breakfast. This meal itself often dissipates these sensations. It is, therefore, desirable, if not essential, when nutriment is to be crowded, that the last thing before going to bed should be the taking of food. Sleeplessness is often caused by starvation, and a tumbler of milk, if drank in the middle of the night, will often put people to sleep when hypnotics would fail of their purpose. Food before rising is an equally important expedient. It supplies strength for bathing and dressing, laborious and wearisome tasks for the underfed, and is a better morning "pick me-up" than any "tonic."

A $400,000 Fraud.

A matrimonial agent lately appeared like a meteor and disappeared in Paris, taking off $2,000 with her. She hired a room and inserted an advertisement to the effect that a rich heiress, the owner of $400,000, was anxious to find a husband who would be willing to overlook an error committed in early youth. On the day after this advertisement appeared twenty eligible suitors applied quite prepared to be indulgent for the bygone error in consideration of the handsome fortune. The matrimonial agent received them separately, told them all that she could not give the name or address of the heiress unless $100 were paid down in advance. Apparently there was not a wise man among the twenty applicants, for they all paid the commission and were sent to various towns in France with false addresses and on a fool's errand. Nineteen of the twenty victims lacked the courage to communicate with the police, but one of them braved ridicule in order to be revenged, and the lady who obtained $2,000 so easily is being actively inquired after.

The Standard.

MARKDALE JULY 23, 1885.

COUNTRY NEWSPAPERS.

The Flesherton Advance had a sensible article recently on the size of country newspapers. Each publisher appears to vie with his neighbors for who will issue the largest sheet regardless of cost. We have erred in this matter ourselves in more than one way. We first enlarged the paper, and then followed this grand mistake with another equally absurd, that of decreasing the subscription from $1.25 per annum to $1. Since then the advertising patronage has dwindled down to such degree that the paper is scarcely self sustaining. When we compare our prices and size of paper with those of a similar character across the lines, we find they have from $1.50 to $2 subscription while ours is the even $1. Then we have another serious matter to contend with, and no doubt all are to a great extent on a par in this respect, that is, the untold difficulty and annoyance experienced in making collections, for job work as well as for subscriptions, when accounts amounting to, say $500 are due from five hundred individuals scattered over a radius of twenty miles, you can form a faint idea of how we may depend on collecting a paper and wages account of $50 per month. Then it becomes the members of the fourth estate who wish to pay their debts with 100 cents on the $ to live within their means, or, in other words, either reduce the size of their paper or raise the subscription price. There are now twelve papers published in Grey County, and we are strongly of opinion that the country ones at least, should reduce the size to that of D. D. paper. What say the brethern? Our neighbor, Mr. Fawcett, has declared his intention of adopting this wise course and we are thinking seriously of following suit.

RETURN OF THE TROOPS.

On Sunday last the Midland Battalion passed through here about half past one p. m. The train halted to take water when several hundred of our citizens gave them a good harty cheer and welcome home while our brass band played the "Red, White and Blue," and other patriotic tunes. The Quebec contingent followed at half past five when the crowd had swelled to about 500, the ladies had by this time replenished their stock of bouquets and the band was again in position, on a carload of lumber, and all joined in one outburst of welcome to the returning brave boys who were in excellent health and spirits, though thoroughly tanned with the scorching sun of the prairie province. Col. Amyot wishes to thank the people of Markdale for their presence at the station and hearty welcome, the band for their attendance and excellent music, and the ladies for their numerous bouquets.

RIEL ESCAPED,

AND CAPTURED NEAR BERKELEY.

A week ago, the Toronto News hinted that there was a feeling in some quarters that Riel would in some manner be spirited away across the lines and thus escape the gallows, which he so richly merits. On Tuesday evening last an object was seen descend on the farm of Joseph Sanderson, near Berkeley, Holland township. Is it Riel in a baloon? Can it be any flying thing? Would it be safe to go near where it descended? were some of the questions asked by the affrighted neighbors. One lady volunteered to go, however, being more brave than the most of men, and investigate the unnatural visitor, and was accompanied by others, together with dogs, pitch-forks and other such munitions of war, and soon made the capture and secured the prisoner. It was a large baloon about the size of a barrel supposed to have been sent up the day previous at some neighboring 13th of July celebration.

THE "SALARY GRAB."

The Supplementary estimates past last week in the Dominion Parliament in which provision is made for an additional sessional allowance of $500 each to members, or over $40,000 in all, is justly condemned by ratepayers of all shades of politics. The regular allowance of $1,000 for the session was expected to induce all members to be industrious while at Ottawa, but when the recent dily-dalying mode of proceedure is rewarded in the above manner, what may we expect in future.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

Berkeley, July 17th, 1885.

In reference to a suit at the last Division Court at Chatsworth, a report of which appeared in the STANDARD of this week, clipped from the Chatsworth News, I beg to make the following correct statement: On the 3rd day of last April Mr. Benjamin Coleman came to my place and gave me a wrong statement of the number of miles I was to draw the milk, which fact I afterwards found out; this I proved at court, and I have a witness to prove the same if his Lordship had examined him. So far as my ability to write, or read writing, is concerned, there are several men in this neighborhood who know I have to depend on others to do my writing, Mr. Coleman did not let the drawing of the milk by public auction, but kept it back until the time to start hauling, then let it privately to his brother-in-law, Mr. H. Hamilton, for $200, who drew for 11 days, for which he was paid $30, which he proved to, and $10 that I hear he has since given him. However, they sued poor Boyd for $40 and any other damages, and the day after I was sued they offered to take $5 and costs, which I refused. My plea against the charge is fraud, and it not being an incorporated association. When Mr. Coleman was cross-examined he refused to prove whether the association was under seal or not. His Lordship requested him to produce the agreements, but he did not produce them; the case was then left to the 1st August next to be decided by the Judge, when he would have learned whether the society was under seal or not.

Yours truly,
CHARLES BOYD.

HE ACTED WISELY.

"I am so weak I can hardly move, all run down with a Chronic Summer Complaint," said one gentleman to another on our street the other day. "Now, take my advice," replied his friend, "go to your Druggist and get a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. I never have known it to fail in curing any kind of Summer Complaints."

Feversham!

Haying is commenced and will be below the average crop. Other crops look very promising just now.

R. Brown has erected a fine waggon shop which will soon be completed.

Dr. Campbell, the phrenologist, is taking a month's stay in this village, for his health, and is making himself very popular by delivering lectures, feeling their bumps, and telling them things they never knew before and some things worth knowing.

F. Whewill, 10th con., town line, had a barn raising to-day, bank barn, 40 x 60, and a "hoe down" at night.

The twelfth passed off very quietly in this township. No gatherings, no drunks, and no riots.

Mr. Miller, Maxwell, has not gone to Alpena yet. He plowed his garden last week in preparation for a root crop.

Mr. Curts, of this place, has made an assignment.

Walters Falls.

CELEBRATION OF THE TWELFTH.

The 195th anniversary of the ever memorable day when "William crossed Boyne Water," was celebrated here in a very spirited and becoming manner. Preparations on a magnificent scale, had been made the previous Saturday evening, for the great forthcoming event, by the erection of two grand triumphal arches that spanned the main street, one extending from Bonnell's store to the Queen's Hotel, the other from the place of business of Mr. T. B. Home, merchant tailor, to the blacksmith shop of J. Mower. It was Dr. McLellan's intention also to put up an arch, but he was prevented from doing so, by a sudden attack of hereditary indisposition, which quite unnerved him, and to which unfortunately, he is at times subject. The morning of the 13th was lowering but soon the clouds dispersed and about 8 o'clock the sun burst forth in all its splendor, giving the probable assurance of a perfect day. As the morning wore on, vehicles of every description began to arrive, loaded with gaily dressed visitors of both sex, bent on seeing the sights, and having a day of unusual enjoyment. A continuous stream of purchasers poured in and out of Bonnell Bro's store, so great that it was very difficult to gain an entrance. The hotel opposite (Mr. Tuck, proprietor) presented a lively appearance and busy in preparations, as dinner for 300 had been ordered. Between 10 and 11 o'clock the sky became overcast to the south-west, and predictions were rife that rain was soon coming. Hopes, however, were entertained of its passing over. The crowd on the main street was now becoming rather impatient for the arrival of the country lodges and a hushed expectancy pervaded the vast concourse; suddenly it was broken by the welcome and cheering sound of fife and drum, those inspiriting and martial strains that have kept alive in the breasts of Britons the fire of civil and religious liberty which else might have only smouldered for a time and at last have entirely died out. The brethren of 10th line and Bognor lodges then filed in procession into the village with drums beating and flags flying, a most animated spectacle, when after parading round town they at last drew up in front of Mr. Tuck's hotel and commenced the anteprandial and salutatory tone, which, however, was cut short by the rain that had now come in earnest, and all at once descended in torrents. The flags were furled in double-quick time and a hasty entrance made. Doubtless the brethren must have considered themselves extremely fortunate in so narrowly escaping the storm and getting into such comfortable quarters where all sorts of refreshments and an excellent dinner awaited them. Rain continued to descend for some hours which effectually prevented the brethren from again forming in procession after dinner, and proceeding in that manner to hear the usual speechifying on the occasion. It was well on in the afternoon before the rain subsided sufficiently to permit going out of doors, and then numbers wended their way to the Methodist church, where the meeting was held, the wet day hindering them from assembling in the grove, as in other years. A good many remained to enjoy the pleasure of dancing, the ballroom being well filled with lasses blith, and lads so gay, who tripped it on the heavy fantastic toe, to the lovely music, apparently with the greatest zest. When the different parties returned from the meeting house, the speeches they had heard seemed to have been very dry ones, as they immediately began to "gie the barrels and jugs a twist that day;" indeed the waiters found it nearly impossible to supply soon enough the extraordinary demand, so that those less thirsty had to postpone their drink for an indefinite period. Amongst the gay revellers some seemed to be more enthusiastic in the celebration of the day than Mr. Thos. Campbell and Mr. Wickham, thus proving themselves to be worthy descendants of heroic ancestors, by their devotion to its commemoration. Between 7 and 8 in the evening, the brethren having by that time been thoroughly refreshed, began to make preparations for departure, and having formed in line and unfurled the flags, the music struck up, and under the inspiriting notes of the "Protestant Boys" and "Croppies lie down," left the village in safety-bound for their respective homes; and thus ended the celebration here of the twelfth, which, but for the rain, was all that could have been expected. Too great praise cannot be accorded Mr. T. B. Home, merchant tailor, for his indefatigable exertions in forwarding the preparations for the celebration, although suffering severely at the time from mania a potu of weeks standing, he roused himself, it may be said, from a sick bed to take an active part in the proceedings. Yes, it was under his directions that by far the handsomest arch of the two, was formed across from his place. He it was who superintended the joining together of the red, white and blue, which resulted in those noble British flags, that floated so proudly and conspicuously in the breeze on Monday, from three different housetops. O, he is one in a thousand possessing from nature the rare gift, that no matter how great the emergency, he is endowed with capabilities that enable him to rise to the urgency of the occasion.

Charlie Campbell, a 10 year-old grandson of our Post Master, broke his leg recently. He was climbing up a pile oof lumber when some of the boards fell on him with above result.

On Monday last Mr. Peter Prior aneighboring farmer, had his arm, broken by being caught in the spokes of his wagon. Dr. McCullough attend both above cases, which are doing as well as could be expected.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

The Maxwell base ball club spent a very enjoyable time on Wednesday last at a pic-nic, got up by the people of the 3rd line. The gathering was large; and to make things more cheerful, they had secured the services of Gospel Army of Flesherton, which favored the gathering with some good music, and some interesting remarks, after which a match was played between Maxwell and the 3rd line clubs, the former winning the game. After this was over we started for home in our quick bus, which soon landed us at our destination; but two of our company got "mashed," and it was early the next morning when they arrived.

It was quite interesting to see a young man walking a picket fence the other evening in front of a residence, in order to draw the attention of a young lady residing within this place. He took to get her out, and he succeeded. She will come without his walking picket fences now.

Rev. Mr. Ward preached a very interesting sermon to the Orangemen of this locality on Sunday last.

On Monday, 13th inst., the Orangemen from here, together with other lodges, visited the village of Singhampton, and realized a good time, although the rain in the afternoon was rather a disappointment, yet everything passed off pleasantly.

While we were in Mr. Bell's hotel, the floor of the bar gave way and dropped about 6 inches.

About 10 reapers and mowers have just arrived for Mr. Colquet, our implement man, which are nearly all sold. This is business.

Mrs. Burnside, of Georgetown, is visiting friends in this place.

Mr. Duncan Heron's house looks well since being repaired.

The people of the English church will hold their annual pic-nic on Thursday of this week. On the same day a base ball match to be played between Maxwell and 3rd line clubs.

The Rev. Stephen A. Arkale preached an excellent sermon in the Church last Sabbath evening which was admired by his congregation.

A young lady about 16, residing on the 14th con., came to our town on Tuesday last to do some shopping, while she was here she forgot the way home, and went the opposite road for quite a distance, when she saw her mistake. This being only her second visit, we should excuse her.

Business is rather dull at present. Farmers are into their haying and every appearance of good crops this year. Just what we want.

Owen Sound.

(From an occasional correspondent.)

Weather very hot.

Business very brisk just now.

The excursion from Mt. Forest was a failure, and through some mismanagement there was no boat to take them for a ride on the bay as advertised. "Harry came hatless."

We were visited by two fires this week: one was an ice house—not very good fuel for flames—but the building around it was completely destroyed. On Sunday afternoon the stables belonging to Campbell's sash and door factory were almost destroyed. Nothing remains only a few beams. Loss about $300.

The ladies are very busy, making preparation for the volunteers.

We had the pleasure of seeing Mr. Dundas, of Markdale, in town on Saturday, on a trip up the lakes.

On Sunday morning about 5 o'clock when the sun was passing through a few black clouds that hung in the eastern sky, the people commenced to gather around to witness a sight that never before afforded them, and on this occasion, which was fully prepared, for the arch that was once draped with mourning for the late Col. Williams, was fixed over fresh, and much to the credit of the citizens of Owen Sound, which was no doubt the finest ever erected north of Toronto. No pains was spared to have this arch, as well as the station, handsomely dressed which was admired by volunteers on their arrival. All the public buildings as well as all the boats in the harbor, had their flags flying which added much to the appearance of everything. About 8 o'clock the steamer Alberta, with the troops, was seen over the horizon, and crowds flocked around the docks. The Citizens Band was in attendance, and as the boat got nearer, the larger the crowd got, which numbered about 3,000. When the steamer came in full view with flags flying and deck crowded with red coats, and when she pulled up to the dock, three cheers rang from the throats of thousands. The troops were got off and put in marching order on the platform, and after a short performance of drill, they were marched to the immigrant sheds, where they were waited on by the ladies of Owen Sound. Each was served with coffee, cake, lemonade and cigars. The volunteers exhibited a sample of their "Hard tack" which they exchanged with the ladies for bouquets; "the ladies got quite mashed on this" and got each one to write his name on the hard tack, which will be kept in remembrance of the pararie taned boys. After all had done justice to the lunch they were marched back to the platform and gave three cheers for the ladies of Owen Sound who had prepared for them such a refreshing lunch. The first train left at 12 o'clock, but through some accident to the engine of the second special, did not leave until four p. m. The Salvation Army was in attendance and played the volunteers a welcome home.

AN INVISIBLE FOE.

The poisonous germs of disease are lurking in the air we breathe and in the water we drink The system should be kept carefully purified and all the organs toned to proper action. This can best be done by the regulating, purifying and tonic powers of Burdock Blood Bitters.

Maxwell.

[We have received a batch of news from another Maxwell friend this week and as our own correspondent failed to write this week, we will publish this.—ED.]

On Wednesday morning of last week between the hours of 3 and 4 a. m., our village was aroused by some noisy critters, passing through here towards Singhampton. The alarm of "Fire" was sounded several times opposite the hotel, and also at Mr. A. Sharpe's store where they stopped and shouted Andy many times, but Andy was too fond of his bed to be drawn out by such mortals as they. The "Big Boot" man was also wakened, so you may bet they shouted aloud, for it almost takes an earthquake to waken him, but he seeing no flames, lay down again as though there had never been any fire at all; but the best of all, our gentlemanly hotel-keeper was running across the floor and stumbled over the cradle and, as he said, almost killed him; but he is not under the doctor's care, or yet has he any sign of being seriously injured. We would like if these "mohawks" would keep quiet in future when going through our quiet village.

The pic-nic held by the Church of England people on Thursday last was a success, and as John did not get away to Alpena as he intended, the young people enjoyed the raging on his hobby horses, and also considerable boating.

The base ball match on Thursday last between Maxwell and 3rd line clubs, was played on the Maxwell grounds. The home team came out victorious by a majority of 10 scores. We think they should be satisfied now, this being the second beat.

Mr. John Allison and wife are visiting at his brothers, Jas. Allison, of this place.

Mr. Johnson Little is building a fine picket fence around his garden.

Mr. Henry Field has built a nice frame stable which presents a good appearance to his place, he is also repairing a shed by a new roof—ahem.

The Scott Act question is being agitated, but no move has yet been made.

MAXWELL AGAIN TO THE FRONT.—On Saturday last a base ball match was played here between the Maxwell Tigers and the Singhampton Blue Caps, consisting of boys under 15. Nine innings each were played, and the result was the Tigers came out victorious by a majority of 21 scores. Master R. Preston was backstop, and we do not boast when we say he is one of the best in the County. On the last innings the ball struck him in the eye which caused great pain for some time, but the little fellow was full of grit and hung out till the last. Good boy, "Dick."

A Singhampton nobb was standing on the top of a stone wall gazing at the match, accidentally the wall gave way and down came Joe, but as fortune would have it, no bones were broken.

As Riel's trial commenced on the Tuesday people around have been wondering what will be done with him. J. A. says take him to the gallows. A. S. he should be tied to the top of a strong saplin and swung in the air a few times; an sure-en says David Madill, hangin's too good for the scoundrell, he should be tied to a cedar tree and burnt to death. Buff says if he would go to the big boot some dark night he would fall down through the platform and break his neck; but George H. steps in, I would feed him what old John feeds his mules for one month and I think this would save hanging expenses. Never mind, Canada thistles are a scarce article around this town, and the mules are looking well on them. Any person having a quantity for sale would do well to see old John early.

Not only have we geese and chicken thieves, but we have a gang of cherry thieves and some loud talk passed between a couple of our citizens last Sabbath evening on the matter. We might also say in connection we have egg thieves, and some of our villagers have recently sold their hens on that account. I think our people should be more civilized.

Rocklyn.

From a correspondent.

Monday, the 13th of July, was celebrated in Rocklyn, the 195th anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne, and a grand day it was for the Orangemen of the districts of Meaford, St. Vincent and Euphrasia, who were present. The clouds which had darkend the heavens early in the morning and threatening rain, at about seven cleared off and the sun shone forth in all it splendor and beauty. Shortly after nine o'clock the Rocklyn lodge formed into line and started out to meet their brother lodges from the fourth line and Epping lodges. Marching back to Rocklyn they proceeded westward to meet ninth and eleventh line lodges, again returning to meet the Meaford and St. Vincent lodges on the north, when all formed into line and marched through Rocklyn in right Royal style. By this time the crowd was somewhat immense, lining the streets in all directions; every available window was filled even the fences and vehicles that were near by were filled in order to secure a good position to view the procession as it wended its way along and passed under the magnificent arch and streamer which were located at the corner of Scott and Latton streets, the fife and drum bands playing tunes appropriate to the day with their magnificent banners wafting and glittering in the air. The scene was a splendid one and one long to be remembered by the people of Rocklyn and vicinity. On reaching the agricultural hall the procession broke up and each and every one departed for the Hotels where a sumptuous feast had been prepared for the men of Orange. Just at this time clouds darkend the heavens and rain began to fall in torrents which lasted some two or three hours, thus preventing any outdoor amusement; but the citizens of Rocklyn are never behind in securing some good amusement for visitors, the Town Hall being engaged for the day in which the public were at liberty to trip the light fantastic, two excellent musicians being engaged to furnish music. At two p. m. the brethern reassembled in the agricultural Hall where it was previously announced that addresses would be delivered. The meeting was called to order by Thos. Gilray, D. M. of Euphrasia, who, in behalf of the orange men of this district, welcomed the visiting lodges and friends and proposed Mr. T. Henry, W. C. M. to take the chair which appointment was read with loud cheers. Mr. Henry accepted the position and thanked those present for the honor conferred and after a few appropriate remarks announced the following gentlemen to address the assembly: Mr. Jas Bowes P. C. M.; Mr. David McCarm, P. C. M.; Robt. Kerr, County Treasurer; Rev. Bro. Rainey and the Rev. J. F. McLaren, County Chaplain. After the addresses the meeting was brought to a close by three cheers for Queen Victoria.

THE BEST YET.

There is no preparation before the people to-day that commends their confidence more, or meets with a better sale than does Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry—the infallible remedy for all forms of Summer Complaints.

Kimberly.

From our own correspondent.

Messrs. Cornwall & Large of Markdale have completed the work on the Methodist church, which will be dedicated the 1st Sunday in August.

There is considerable smut in the fall wheat in this neighborhood this season. Hay is light and apples about half a crop.

S. Gouden, our school teacher, has been to Owen Sound in order to have his certificate renewed. It is hoped he will be successful as he is a good teacher.

Mr. Thos. Wiggins has commenced the erection of a cottage. The stone foundation is now complete and we may expect a handsome and substantial job throughout, as Mr. W. is a man of good taste as his place always shows.

Wm. Stuart has been appointed a J. P. and it is believed he will make a just and fearless one.

A FREQUENT ANNOYANCE.

Many people suffer from distressing sick headaches and bilious attacks of frequent occurrance which a bottle or two of Burdock Blood Bitters would entirely remove. It regulates the Stomach, Liver, Bowels and Blood to a healthy action.

THE SILVER THREAD.

The winter day was like a diamond, clear cut and shining, with a kind of interior radiance that gave one the impression of a transparent phantom-like quality to all material things, that served scarcely to be the real living substance of spirit.

Nature's soft, sensuous season of beauty had faded as the leaf which the sword of of death had sharply pruned away, and the gray skeleton branches in forest and field gleamed with a silvery light against its crystal sky, casting hardly the flicker of a shadow on the unbroken whiteness on the freshly fallen snow.

"It is a pretty day, mother," said Father Sanborn, resting on his eldow on the bare table beside him and looking out of the low south window in the little old brown house, alling with himself into slow, quiet decay.

"Aye—so," responded the old wife, drawing a little closer to the window and spreading her thin hands to the warmth of the sun flowing shadowless through the crumbling sash. "I think I smell spring violets," she added, with a dreamy, far-off look.

"No, Mother, I guess not yet," said the old man, smiling a little at the odd conceit, but remembering that Mother was not feeling right well to-day.

All the time he was picking with nervous fingers at a small rent in his worn vest-front, after an unconcious habit that he had when a thread-bare place appeared in his faded but clean old garments—a habit which had prompted the thrifty housewife to mend until the combination of pieces in the Father's apparel would have served as a model for the young lady's scheme in crazy patch-work.

"How did you get that tear, David?" she asked, adjusting her spectacles and bending forward to inspect it.

"Well you know, I was pullin' an old board off the garden fence—for a little kindlin,' ye know—and a rusty nail ketched in the thin spot," he apologized.

"Yes, yes," assented the listener. "Has it come to the garden fence, Father?" she queried, cheerfully, glancing at the little armful of wood that he had just laid by the rayless kitchen stove.

"Mebbe the 'Squire will let me pick round and chop off the dead branches in his wood-lot next week," returned the old husband, with hopeful evasion of the question.

"Well, well!" said the old lady, pleasantly ignoring the subject of wood. "Now, you jest take off the jacket and let me mend it, Father."

"But—but ye know the thread is all used up, Dorothy," objected Father Sanborn, fumbling uncertainly among the empty spools in the little box of sewing implements on the window-sill

Times were very close just now. Nobody but themselves knew to what straits they had come since David had grown so feeble and unable to work. But they uttered no complaint, even to each other.

"Well, you just take off the jacket, David, I'll contrive some thread somehow," replied the old lady, with a confidence in which the husband had long reposed. She was full of expedients that were like the miracles of Providence to him.

She went out and came back presently with a garment past use, from the seams of of which she began carefully to pick the thread, but it proved too worn and worthless for re-sewing, and she abandoned the effort with a suddenly brightening thought.

"There's a great many ways," said she, pulling the little back-comb out of her hair and letting its still heavy and luxuriant length untwist and fall in silver ripples upon her bowed shoulders. Sitting there in the sunshine, she seemed suddenly enveloped in the shining aureole of a saint.

"Old David Sanborn leaned forward and let his hand glide softly over the snow-white waves with a tenderness and reverence of touch that expressed far more than the passionate and poetic praise of a younger lover.

Then pulling out a long, glistening thread, the dear old lady held up her needle to the light and endeavored to pierce its eye with the silken hair. But her glasses, she was sure, did not serve her as well as usual, and, after struggling with the old bows for a more accurate adjustment, she took them off and wiped dantily, with her clean silk handkerchief, the speckless lens.

"Let me try, mother," said the watchful, sympathetic husband, taking the needle in his clumsy fingers, striving to pick up the shining thread, and in his effort dropping both upon the floor.

So, while he went down on his old knees to search for the lost bit of steel, Madam Dorothy, with a little laugh, drew from her needle-book another with a larger eye and miraculously threaded it at the first trial.

"Now, then!" She said, triumphantly taking the garment in hand and beginning her fine darning, finding with delight that her new brand of silk worked marvelously.

It was a slow, patient performance, requiring several difficult needle threadings, but it was accomplished with great interest to the old people and amid pleasant little jests about the loss in trade to thread dealers who could no longer depend on their custom amounting, they guessed, to "two spools a year."

They found pleasure in recalling the time when their thread bill had been quite extravagant—When Amanda and James and Helen and William had kept the family needle busily plying through endless rounds of seam and yearly succession of patches.

Without effort of memory, long processions of roundabouts, trousers, pinafores, frocks, caps, and sunbonnets in various patterns, passed before the old mother's vision, but faded in the shadow of the churchyard-pines, under which the wearers had for many years slept quietly with no need of anything her hand could do. Only Jack was left. But where in the wide world was poor Jack? He had been a sad, wild boy, and had wandered away, no one knew whither. It would be "fifteen years, come March," since they had heard from him.

His memory was a deep sore in their old hearts, and while they talked often, with a kind of comfort, of the dear children in "the better land," they rarely mentioned Jack.

The winter sun was falling low when the facinating work was done, and old David had resumed the vest with the wonderful darning pressed warm against his heart. By that time they began to feel the need of their evening meal, and while the husband brightened up the fire with a few choice bits of wood and set the filled tea-kettle over the inspiring blaze, Dame Dorothy drew up the table spread with its clean, white cloth, and set thereon the old-fashioned plates with blue landscapes and the gay flowered tea-cups and saucers, which her hands had polished for forty years. Then she brought out some fragments of dry bread and a small dish of stewed apples, over which, as an extra relish, she carefully sifted the slightest dust of sugar over the nearly empty bowl matching the cheerful cups, and, with the addition of the horn-handled knives, two-tined forks, and quaint silver spoons bearing her maiden name, she sat down to wait the pleasant murmur of the boiling tea-kettle. When this was heard, she poured a steaming stream into the warmed and waiting little earthen tea-pot, shook over it an ancient tea-caddy (from which nothing appeared to flow) and set the pot to steep. To be sure, the caddy had not smelled a dust of Hyson for the last month, but the ceremony of using it at every meal was a kind of balm to the pride of the thrifty old housewife and showed no falling off of domestic comforts.

If any one had happened in at that or any other hour, there would have been no hint of want, and the visitor would have gone away with the impression of abounding plenty in the little household, judging the scanty "spread" the choice of different appetite, as the old people would, most likely, have said that, not feeling very hungry, they had, "just picked up a little bit."

Indeed, they had covered their poverty with this proud front until between themselves there was no acknowledgment of failing supplies, but only a cheerful acceptance of the best that they could provide.

On this evening, however, the old lady, who felt strangely weak and tired, experienced, as she poured the colorless liquid in the cups, a secret craving for the stimulating beverage to which she had been so long accustomed, and by the magic sympathy of love the old husband sensed, with pity, her unspoken need.

"Hadn't I better borrow a drawin,'" he began—but a quick, rebuking look from the old madam's pale eyes checked the weak proposition.

"Perhaps a trial of that handful of sage that we saved from the sale might give color and cheer you up a little, Dorothy," he concluded suggestively.

But Dorothy sat a little more erect in her old splint-bottomed chair. "Iv'e been a feelin' for some time," said she, "that tea doesn't agree with me, Father, and I was readin' a long piece in the paper that Bessie Wood brought in the other day about the virtue of drinking hot water, and I think it will be better for both of us, David, to try it for awhile, just for our health."

The old man assented smilingly to the novel experiment, and poured out the new elixir in his saucer, and sipped it hopefully.

When this last event of the day was over, the cups and plates washed, the table cleared away, a few fragments of the garden fence brought in, and the hearth swept clean with the long used turkey's wing, the old couple sat down to the repose of the winter evening, with a sigh of relief in the sense of another day's provisions made, leaving with God the morrow. The oil in the little kerosene lamp had already burned too low for further use, unless some emergency should arise in which its illumination should be required, but the full moon was flooding the eastern sky with a soft silver radiance, more beautiful even than the golden light of the sun, and the earth, gleaming in still, white splendor, seemed to have come a degree nearer to that interior mystery of being forever haunting the soul with vague prescience of dawning revelation.

The pale glory streaming through the low kitchen window touched with shining lustre the gray heads of the old pair, sitting silent as they watched the flickering blaze in the stove, the front doors of which they had opened with economical view to lessen the consumption of fuel as well as to afford a weird domestic light. Their thoughts were flickering, fitfully as the blaze at which they gazed, through the sad and pleasant happenings of their sober-hued past, and had either spoken of any incident, the other would have said as usual, after such silences, "Why I was just thinking of that,"—so closely had long association interwoven the mental fibre of their lives.

Into the midst of their meditations this evening sudddenly burst the glad peals of the musical bell from the village church on the hill, and all at once they remembered that it was the wedding day of 'Squire Wood's daughter Bessie, and their slow pulses thrilled with a quick throb of interest and sympathy.

"Jimmy Grover is gettin' a proper nice wife," said the old gentleman, with satisfaction.

"Yes," assented the dame, dreamily—"I used to kind of hope when the child was so good and sweet to our Jack, that some day—ah me!—well—well!"

"Well, well!" echoed the old father with a sigh.

Again the bell pealed forth joyously from the hill, touching their hearts like the earliest song of Robins in the springtime; and the old man lavishly cast on two pieces of wood, and in the rekindled blaze saw reflected the morning glory of his own wedding day, that seemed no farther away than yesterday.

"You looked like an angel, Dorothy, that evening we was married," he said, with the fervor of the youthful bridegroom, while the bell still swung its glad wedding call down from the hill. "Though," he added, gently, "you're just as beautiful now, dear. But that was a pretty gown, I thought. What ever became of that wedding gown, Dorothy?"

"Oh! don't you remember? I made it into baby dresses, and little Dolly—she was buried in one of them," was the soft answer, followed by a tender hush as the vision of little Dolly, lying in strange white stillness, floated like a mist between them and the sunshine of the wedding memory.

The dear old lady pressed her hand over the sharp dart of pain that had flashed through her heart again and again that night; but the old husband's talk wandered back to the spring-days of love once more, and reveled in delightful memories of the courtship which came out like stars in the still, quiet evening of his life.

But the wife's response grew fainter and farther between, and, though the ashen pallor of her face and the pressure of a hand upon her side was not noted in the dim light by the old lover, absorbed in many recollections, he began to sense a failure of sympathy, and paused with doubtful look.

"What is it, Dorothy?" he asked, with sudden dread.

"I—I'm not feelin' quite well, David. I—think—I'll—lie down," she said, brokenly, rising and tottering with the old man's help into the inner room

There had been roubled action of the heart with Dame Dorothy, which had long given warning of a swift, fatal pause in the wheels of life some day, and, shaking with foreboding of dreaded ill, old David placed her on the bed, and hastened with blundering hands to find the few carefully preserved matches, striving with ineffectual effort to light the lamp, but letting the feeble blaze flicker out and finally losing his trembling grasp of the frail glass chimney, which fell with a tinkling crash upon the floor.

"David—the—time—has come."

He heard the faint voice gasping his name and hurrying back to the bedside, the poor man saw with unutterable anguish in the full flood of moonlight the terrible death agony in the wan face on the pillow.

Wild with the feeling that he must avert the blow, he rushed out of the house with hoarse, incoherent cry for help, plunging he knew not whither, until his trembling old limbs failed him and his white head was dashed against the snow.

When he could gather strength, he rose and crept back to the bed and fell down on his knees beside it.

The dear face in the still moonlight was very peaceful now, and more beautiful even than he numbered it in his youth.

He kissed the thin, worn hand that the passing spirit still gave power to clasp faintly upon his own, and whispered a few low, tender words as if the dulled ear could be gladdened by the sympathetic voice of love.

A strange tranquility came over him. He felt as uphorne by invisible arms. A warm, fragrant atmosphere, tinged with roseate colors, seemed to enfold him, shutting out from his sense the cheerless, desolate surroundings of his material life. If Dorothy was dead he did not know.

When, next morning, the plain little housemaid from 'Squire Wood's came over with some fragments of the wedding feast in the basket on her arm, she marked with wonder the print of desperate feet and the plunge of a fallen body in the snow below the little cottage. But she went up the steps and tapped at the half-open door, smiling as she eased the weight of her basket, with the thought that this time she carried something which the proud old lady could not say she possessed in abundance, thank ye—for certainly no wedding-loaf had ever been broken in her house.

No response came to the girl's rap, she ventured to push open the door and stepin. All was cheerless and cold. Could the old people be still sleeping?

There was a shuffling step in the inner room, and the bowed, hollow-eyed old man appeared at the door, nodding to his guest, but with no more sign of recognition than if she had come from another world.

"What is it, Father Sanborn? Aren't you well?" she questioned, in alarm.

"Well?—well?" responded the old Father, smilingly, but seeming not to sense the inquiry.

"And the old lady?" queried the visitor, with increasing apprehension.

"Mother?" he said, smiling and gazing beyond the girl, as though he saw a beautiful vision that intercepted his response to an interrogation not quite clear to his mind.

The swaying of his figure in the door revealed to the astonished maid the straight, still form on the bed within, and she started back with nervous fear. Had the old man gone crazy and murdered his wife in her bed? In a panic of fright, she dropped her basket on the floor and darted out, pursued by the phantom of her imagination and fleeing with winged steps to the nearest house, a quarter of a mile distant, where her wild report soon rallied a neighborly force to the little brown cot.

And so Dame Dorothy's body was taken in charge by friendly and charitable hands that at last unveiled the poverty she had so long and patiently striven to conceal. Old David showed small interest in the preparations going on about him for the last offices to the dead. He responded absently; often incoherently, to all remarks and questions, sitting by himself and sometimes whispering and gesticulating softly as to one who understood and sympathized as none others could do. There was a gentle acquiescence on his part to every plan and provision made by his neighbors. Only when an attempt was made to replace his old clothes with a suit deemed more respectable for the occasion, he clung obstinately, yet gently, to the vest mended on that last precious afternoon of the dear one's life, with the threads of her silver hair.

"Poor old man!" they said, yielding their vain persuasions, "he has quite lost his mind, and it isn't worth while to oppose him."

After the quiet sleeper, with the look of infinite content on her sweet old face, was laid decently to rest, the event to which she had looked forward with mortal dread, yet with a stern sense of justice, came naturally to the culmination that had been charitably delayed. It seemed to Squire Wood's legal mind no longer a reason for deferring the foreclosure of the mortgage which he held on the old home for debts incurred by Jack in his wild days and which the proud old people had sacrificed every comfort in the effort to pay. The town poor-house, with its fair share of decencies, seemed the best place for old David Sanborn to end his days, since it provided both the care and companionship that no individual interest could give.

The meek old man accepts the provision cheerfully, performing any little service in his power "toward paying his way," as he expresses it, but loving best to sit or walk apart "whispering to himself," as his companions say, with a strange, wrapt look of happiness shining on his face. And nothing will persuade him to part with the old vest, which he continues to wear, only taking it carefully off at night, sometimes tenderly kissing the embroidery of silver thread and always laying it under his pillow when he goes to sleep.—Chambers' Journal.

TREES AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

We have received the following on the above subject from R. W. Phipps, Esq., Ontario Forest Conservator, who is, we are glad to observe, using every means to disseminate such information as may assist in rendering tree-planting more general throughout the country. We have cut down too many trees. Large forests have been cleared where no adequate results have been obtained—the land being poor or rough, such, in fact, as had, for many reasons, better have staid in forest. The only remedy is to plant now, and, in view of the rapid decrease of timber for fencing, barn-building, everything, indeed, the sooner the better. Those who intend to do so will find some excellent hints in what follows:—

TREES GROWN EASILY.

MAPLES.—Native Hard, Silver Leaf, Scarlet or Soft, Norway, Ash-leaved.

ELMS.—American or White, Cork-barked or Winged, Scottish or Witch.

LINDENS.—European, American or Basswood.

ASH.—Native, European.

POPLAR.—Lombardy, Balm of Gilead or Cotton, Silver-leaved.

CHESTNUT.—Horse, Sweet.

The foregoing list of trees have naturally fibrous roots, rendering them easy to transplant. Their planting season is in the fall from the 20th October till the ground freezes too hard for digging; and in the spring from the time the frost leaves till May 15th. They can be planted later in the summer, but much more care is then needed in keeping the roots from exposure, and in watering afterwards; also, in cutting back the tops.

Those trees which, like the oak, hickory beech or walnut, have few roots, can be planted at the same season, but need, when young, frequent transplanting to grow numbers of roots. Naturally, as when found in the bush, they have but few, and are then, before when of age to be set out, difficult of growth. To take them thence when very small, or to grow them from seed, transplanting when small, and again when large enough, gives them roots sufficient. There is another way—that is go to the bush in June or even July,—June is the best—cut a circle around young trees, and cut up roots a foot deep—then by fall these will have thrown out many small roots, and give a much better chance of planting.

A tree—of a kind of its own—neither evergreen nor deciduous, but which may be called a deciduous evergreen—is the Larch, Scottish or Native. It makes excellect and beautiful windbreaks in rows, and is good in plantations. It succeeds best when planted late in the fall or first thing in spring, as it commences to grow with the first warm rays of the sun, and is uncertain unless great care is taken to keep it damp. This is in case of trees five to seven feet high; small plants grow much easier. The tamarac is our native variety of this tree. I have, however, known rows of these native die out, without apparent cause, in twenty years.

We will next speak of evergreens. Those of the spruce and cedar family are grow more easily than pines or junipers, from having a greater quantity of fine roots. This class comprises SPRUCE.—White or Native, Norway, Balsam Spruce or Fir proper, Hemlock, White Cedar.

PINES.—White, Weymouth, Norway, Austrian, Scottish.

The pines, unless transplanted several times when young, do not throw out many roots, and these are fine, long, and easily disbarked if great pains be not taken in removing from the soil. The planting season for these evergreens is from May 15th to June 15th, or just as the buds are commencing to burst. But, if we wait till the summer growth is over, they can be planted the last week in July or the first in August. No one need be discouraged from attempting to transplant pines; all that is needed is care. The roots must be kept from the sun; the resin hardens otherwise and kills them; they must be planted at once and cared for; choose small trees; and with these precautions I have known many fine plantations and windbreaks taken straight from the bush and succeed well. But, if haste be no object, it is more sure to plant say a thousand very small pines in your garden, and transplant in two years.

As to soil, all trees thrive in a well-drained soil, varying from a sandy loam to a clay, not too stiff. A clay loam suits them all. Let the lower branches of such trees as cedar grow; it shades the soil, and gives the cool surface loved by that class of tree. Wet soils are not good, however. A drained soil gives water in transmission, which is healthy; a wet one in permanency, which is unhealthy.

It is well, when planting, to dip the roots in a thin mud—termed grouting. When finally planted, be sure to mulch round the trees on the top of soil with old manure, or other good material, such as spent hops, leaves, chaff or straw—never with tan-bark, fine sawdust or substances detrimental to growth. It must be remarked that some good planters never mulch, keeping, instead, the earth stirred for a few seasons with cultivator or hoe. Either plan will answer.

When transplanting in fall, be careful to strip all the leaves off, as the sap remaining soon evaporates by the leaves, causing the tree to shrivel and often to die. Walnuts are best planted in the nut where the tree is to grow. They should be planted by the acre in all suitable localities.

The foregoing may be of service to those who intend to plant. It is most important, in Ontario, that this should be largely done. On all sides complaints are being made of injury to climate and agriculture by the continual thinning out of the few remains of forest yet standing of the rich and valuable growth—often more valuable than the crops which have followed it—which once covered the land. The present year is a good seed year. If seeds of maple, beech, ash, oak, walnut, and many other trees be largely gathered and sown this fall and next spring, the foundation of future forests is laid. We do not yet feel the great need; there are yet a few years before the wood-famine which is surely coming; let us use them in planting.

Victoria's Wars.

The wars which have been waged by Great Britain since Queen Victoria ascended the throne, number twenty-five, which took place in the following order:—

1839 Afghan War.	1860 New Zealand War.
1839 Aden Rebellion.	1865 New Zealand War.
1840 Syrian War.	1867 Abyssinian War.
1841 China War.	1868 Ashantee War.
1841 Kabool Insurrection	1873 Ashantee War.
1843 Scinde war.	1879 Zulu War.
1845 Sikh War.	1879 Afghan War.
1847 Second Sikh War.	1881 Transvaal War.
1850 Kaffir War.	1882 Egyptian War.
1851 Burmese War.	1884 Soudan War.
1854 Crimean War.
1856 China War.
1857 Persian War.
1857 Indian Mutiny
1860 China War.

STORM AND SUNSHINE.

CHAPTER I.—(CONTINUED.)

"It was a very sad thing, Lisle, and nothing to make anybody laugh," aunt Anna says severely.

"I am only laughing at the idea that he couldn't get another wife, aunt Anna."

"I dare say he could find plenty of girls very willing to marry him—I never said he could not. But nobody thinks he will ever marry again."

"And Mr. Erroll—what is he like?"

"Very handsome, but not so steady as his brother—or at least he used not to be, though I hear he has improved very much since he went to China. He is at Velfry now, his mother tells me. She seems delighted to have him back, poor woman—Erroll was always her favorite child."

"I think the scamps are always the favorites, aunt Emily."

To this unorthodox opinion aunt Emily does not see her way to agree probably, for she pretends not to hear it, snipping away at her dead leaves.

"We must take you to return Mrs. Rutherfurd's visit very soon, Lisle," aunt Anna says, putting on her spectacles again. "You will like to see Velfry; it is one of the finest places in the neighbourhood. And Mrs. Rutherfurd spoke of having you to stay there for a day or two. That would be an amusement for you, now that Erroll Rutherfurd is at home."

I suppose it will be an amusement, but, never having met Mr. Erroll Rutherfurd, it does not fill me with any particular elation. Of all the people whose names I have yet heard I feel most interested in this clever, cynical Judith Irving, who took the trouble to carry broth to nourish the decrepit body of old Mollie, whose wicked old tongue cannot say a word for her in return. I will make this girl's acquaintance, whether my aunts like it or not. I want to know what the new-fangled notions are of which Longhurst does not approve. Everything is not wrong to which my aunts object; old people always look askance at any novelty, and my aunts seem to me to be particularly sensitive on this subject.

It was only last night that aunt Achoretta took me to task for saying something was "awfully" pleasant. But if I am not to say "awful" I do not know what is to become of me. It seems to be on the tip of my tongue every moment; I never knew till now how essential it was to anything like fluency in conversation.

CHAPTER II.

"I want something to read aunt Anchoretta."

I am standing in the doorway of her room, having found the door ajar as I passed down stairs. Aunt Anchoretta is standing in the middle of the floor, with a bundle of what look like magazines in her hand; her wardrobe stands wide open, and the upper shelf seems to be stuffed full of periodicals in covers of every colour in the rainbow.

"I am afraid I have nothing here that you would care to read, my dear."

"Oh, one of those numbers in your hand will do as well as anything else!"

"But these are Reports of the Church Missionary Society for 1870. I don't think you would care to study them!"

"Oh, no, thanks!" I exclaim hurriedly. "But there are others up there—I think I see some numbers of Temple Bar—in the pale violet covers."

"Temple Bar?" aunt Anchoretta repeats. "I never knew there was a periodical called Temple Bar! Those are reports too—'Among the Jews,' or the Soldiers and Sailors. Very interesting reading, my dear, if you don't mind their being rather out of date."

"Thanks. I dont think I shall mind. But what do you keep them for aunt Anchoretta?"

"Keep them, Lisle! The annual Reports of our societies!"

"But they are only rubbish. One might well keep a lot of old almanacs."

"I have almanacs there forty years old," aunt Anchoretta says, glancing up at the shelf with a curious kind of obstinate satisfaction. "Your aunt Theodosia is always begging me to burn them, or to sell them as waste paper and give the money to one or other of the societies; but that I shall never do. When I am dead they may dispose of them for that purpose; but as long as I live shall never be done. If you want something to read, why do not you go down to the parochial library? It is open every Thursday—in the school-house—and you can choose any volume you like there, only you must put down its number and your own name in the book they keep for the purpose."

This is rather a good idea, and I carry it out forthwith. It will be more amusing to scramble down to the village than to sit in the quiet sunny drawing-room, with its ancient furniture and china and faint smell of dried rose-leaves, all alone, as I have been sitting since breakfast. I put on my pretty gray frock with its big bows of ribbon, and the gray hat lined with blue which I have been told is so becoming to me, though I am afraid I shall meet no one to admire me in it, and sally out into the dusty road and the flickering shadow of the small young leaves.

As I pass the entrance to the lane leading to old Mollie's cottage it strikes me that I may as well pay her a visit. The afternoon is all before me to while away as I may; and I am all curious to hear more about Miss Irving.

The lane is green with leaf-shadow—great bushes of velvety honeysuckle and privet and hawthorn shut it in from the fields of springing corn and the pastures where the lambs are playing; there is no sound in all the air but the bleating of the lambs and the humming of the bees, except it may be the double note of the cuckoo now and then, coming sweet and dreamy from the Velfry woods—these and my own footsteps, as I walk leisurely up to Mollie's gate, and, pushing it open, find myself in the sunny, sweetbriar-scented precincts of her neat little garden.

Here another sound greets my ears—the music of a girl's laugh, sweet and clear. At the same moment somebody comes to the door of Mollie's cottage—a girl with her head turned back to speak—to the old woman presumably, since I hear these words, spoken slowly and distinctly—

"Whenever I want to hear a catalogue of my shortcomings, Mollie, I shall certainly pay you a visit!"

Then she looks round and sees me, and I see her, a tall dark girl with a laughing face—or it is laughing now—and a pair of great, beautiful, golden brown eyes which open very wide at sight of me.

We gaze at each other for a moment without speaking; and then Mollie who has followed her visitor to the door, seems to feel it incumbent upon her to go through some form of introduction.

"Miss Lisle, this is Miss Irving, our Vicar's daughter. But 'tis a queer thing the pair of ye should meet first in my little garden!"

"I have often heard of you," Miss Irving says, taking the initiative as she looks at me.

"And I have heard of you," I answer, smiling.

"Not from Mollie, I hope?" Miss Irving laughs, shrugging her shoulders. "Mollie and I are great friends, but I know she abuses me like anything behind my back."

"And to your face too, Miss Judith, when you do foolish things."

"As if I ever did foolish things! I must apologise for not having called upon you before now, Miss Warburton; but the fact is my father keeps me so busy copying his manuscripts, and brushing his clothes, and paying duty visits for him all over the parish, that I sometimes have not an hour in the day that I can call my own."

"I envy you!" I laugh, looking at her. "The days at Osierbrook are so long that sometimes I fancy they will never come to an end."

"You must find it rather dull at Osierbrook!"

"Dull! I think it is the dullest place in England! How my aunts have managed to exist there for the last half-century or so is more than I can comprehend."

"I should scarcely call it existence," Miss Irving says, looking rather curiously at me, or at my candour.

"But they think it is the only life worth living; that is what amuses me!"

"They have never known anything better, poor old ladies!"

"I suppose that accounts for it; but I am very glad I have met you, Miss Irving, for I was just beginning to feel Osierbrook intolerable! What do you think aunt Anchoretta offered me by way of some light reading, just now?"

"I don't know!" she answers, with the same curious, amused look.

"A Report of some Jewish mission, about twenty years old."

"Wretched girl!"—raising her dark eyebrows.

"Then she suggested that I should go down to the library in the village and borrow a book, and I was on my way there when I thought I would just turn down the lane to pay Mollie a visit."

"It is fortunate you did, as I have the key of the library in my hand at this moment; if you had gone there you would have found everything locked up. You must know that I have the pleasure of presiding over the distribution of the said books for two hours every Thursday afternoon—from half-past three to half-past five."

"Then we can walk down together."

"Very well; but I must go now; it is more than half-past three already."

"I am quite ready; I can come and see Mollie another day."

We turn up the lane, laughing and talking, old Mollie, standing in her doorway, looking after us.

"I have wanted so much to make your acquaintance," I say, as we reach the road. "It seemed so odd that there should be two girls living so near each other in a place like this without being acquainted with each other!"

"It does rather; but I don't suppose your aunts will like you to care for any society but their own."

"Their own!" I repeat, laughing. "They can scarcely suppose that I should care for their society!"

"Do you expect to remain long at Osierbrook?"

"I shall remain there always now."

"It is to be hoped not!" Miss Irving laughs, looking at me. "Four maiden ladies of the name of Warburton are enough in any one parish!"

"I assure you I have no particular fancy for being the fifth; but even old Mollie seems to think it is inevitable."

"There are so few bachelors here?"

"I suppose she means that."

"But you have not really come to live at Osierbrook?"

"If you can call it living. You said just now that you scarcely could."

"Perhaps if I were eighty years old I might not care for any other kind of life; but you—you don't look sixteen."

"I was eighteen in April."

"You are so fair," she remarks, looking at me. "I have always wished to be fair."

"Because fair people look young?"

"Oh, not that exactly! But how old should you take me to be?"

"About twenty-four," I answer, looking round into a smiling, careless dark face.

"I am only nineteen."

"Is that all? And don't you feel lonely too, sometimes, in that old Vicarage?"

"A little lonely, perhaps; but still I would rather live there than anywhere else in the world."

"Would you really?"—"Certainly I would."

"But do you like the people?" I ask remembering things Mollie had said of what people thought of her.

"I don't bother my head about them. I am one of those people who never feel less alone than when alone."

"I wish I could feel like that," I sigh. "But I have always depended upon other people for happiness, ever since I was a child. I was always devoted to one or other of my schoolfellows, and liked to be petted and made much of."

"Perhaps it is the happiest kind of temperament."

"I don't know about that. The other must be so much more independent."

"Independence is a fine thing, but it is very lonely sometimes," Miss Irving says, looking straight before her. "And it is a very lonely thing to be an only child."

"I never minded that in the least," I laugh. "I alway thought if I had a sister I should be jealous of her, especially if she were prettier than I was, or more lovable."

"Are you of a jealous disposition?" she smiles, turning her head now to look at me.

"Of course I am; all women are."

"I am not."

"You would be if you cared for anybody."

"Do you care for anybody, that you know all about it so well?"

"Not for any body in the way you mean," I laugh—"only for my friends at school."

"Oh!" Miss Irving says, with a smile of indulgent scorn. "I do not think that the jealousies of men and women. One is the sting of a midge, the others the bite of a scorpion."

"I thought you knew nothing about it!"

"I can evolve some idea of what it might be out of my consciousness," she laughs, shrugging her shoulders. "But here we are at the school-house. I hope you admire our old village, Miss Warburton."

"Don't call me Miss Warburton; it reminds me of the teachers at school."

She does not ask me what she shall call me, as she opens the door and walks in.

There is nobody in the long schoolroom; nothing but empty forms and desks, a pair of dilapidated globes, a black-board with a sum upon it. The walls are covered with pictures of wild animals of hideous aspect, with descriptive letterpress underneath, with maps of the world and all the countries in the world. There is a large press at one end of the room; this Miss Irving unlocks, and then, having opened the doors of it wide enough to display the rows of books covered in gray holland within, and having laid another and a larger book open upon one of the high desks with inkstand and pen beside it, leans her elbow on the desk and her chin on her hands, and looks at me.

"I suppose your aunts will take you about a little; it will be a good thing to give those fat old ponies something to do!"

"They are sure to take you to Velfry. Mrs. Rutherfurd is everything their beau ideal of a 'gentle-woman' ought to be."

"I believe she is very nice?"

"She certainly is very nice. Have you never met her?"

"Not yet. She came to see me yesterday, but I was out. She is my godmother."

"Is she really?"—"So they told me yesterday."

"I should rather like her to be my godmother," Miss Irving says, laughing.

"Velfry is a very pleasant old house."

"Have you ever stayed there?"

"Not for a long time. I used to go there as a child; May Rutherfurd and I were exactly the same age, and she had nobody else to play with. She and I and Erroll grew up together. Ralph was more than ten years older than Erroll, and never condescended to take any notice of us."

"Was Mr. Ralph's wife as charming as my aunts describe her?"

"I don't know much about her. They went to Algiers soon after they were married, and I believe she died there; she was always delicate."

"My aunts think he will never marry again."

"Why do you laugh at that?"

"Because I think it so unlikely—a young man, with plenty of money and a fine old place."

"He was very fond of his wife," Miss Irving says, looking at me.

"Oh, so he might be! But other men who were fond of their wives have married again."

"I am afraid you are very cynical."

"No; but I can't help laughing when people say things like that."

"Don't you believe people could care so much for each other that nothing could make them forget?"

"Scarcely."

"Oh, well, I do!" Miss Irving declares, looking straight before her at the young elm-leaves outside the window.

I study her face, lounging on the form opposite. It is rather a long face, or it looks so under her sailor hat of black straw, with a broad crimson ribbon round the crown. It is also rather a pale face—a clear dusky pallor which has nothing unhealthy about it, and which contrasts rather oddly with the crimson of her soft curved lips. Her features are not remarkable one way or the other; her nose may be a little large, her mouth a trifle wide, but if they are I do not notice it. I can only think that in all my life I never saw a more fascinating face, or a pair of more wonderful, golden-brown, laughing, languishing, velvety eyes.

"Won't you come to Osierbrook sometimes, now that we have made each other's acquaintance?" I ask at last.—"Perhaps."

"And mayn't I come to see you at the Vicarage?"

"If your aunts will allow you."

"My aunts!" I repeat, laughing. "I shall not consult my aunts."

"But I would much rather you did."

"But they can't possibly have any objection to my going to the Vicarage, or to your coming to Osierbrook."

"I don't know about that. I fancy the good ladies look upon me as rather a black sheep."

"What nonsense! Those are only old Mollie's stories. I never heard my aunts say one word against you."

"Have you ever heard them say one word about me, good or bad?"

I cannot remember that I have, just at the moment.

"But what can they possibly know about you?"

"Oh, everybody knows everything about everybody else in a place like this!" Miss Irving says carelessly.

"If people say anything against you it must be because they are jealous of you," I exclaim warmly.

"I dare say there is a good deal in that. Well, don't you want a book? I don't think anybody else in the village does to-day."

I approach the press reluctantly. When I have chosen a book I shall have no further excuse for trespassing upon Miss Irving's time.

"I don't suppose you will care much for any of them," she laughs, shrugging her shoulders in her negligent way. "They are only fit for parish school-children. If you really want a book I dare say I can lend you something more amusing than anything you will find there."

"Oh, thank you!" I exclaim, turning round. "May I go with you for it now

"If you like. There is no use in my staying here any longer."

But, three or four young girls coming in just as she speaks, together with two of the servants from Velfry, Miss Irving waits while they put back the volumes they brought with them, choose fresh ones, and make an entry in the book on the table. Then she locks the press, and we follow them out into the May sunshine and the cool delicious freshness of the afternoon air.

"Is it far to the Vicarage?"—"Not very far."

"Not that I mind what distance it is. I am back to dinner at six."

"Oh, you can certainly be back long before six!"

We walk on through the village together and Miss Irving tells me who lives in each cottage, and describes some of the "characters" which seem to abound in the place in a clever good-natured way, at which it appears to me, nobody could take exception, not even the individuals themselves.

Her manner is very gay and sprightly and she can make herself very amusing but at the same time she is exceedingly quiet—at least her voice is quiet, and remarkably clear and sweet. Her dress is also quiet enough—a simple chintz with a black ground strewn with tiny red rosebuds, and a knot of crimson ribbons here and there. I had thought from Mollie's description, that Miss Irving might be perhaps a little "fast." But nothing could be farther removed from "fastness"—in appearance, at least—than this tall girl in her simple calico gown and black straw hat, with the key of the parochial "library" dangling from the finger of her chamois glove.

The bow that the girl of the period selects to reign in her heart is apt to be like the other rainbow—a bow of promise.

Frightening Children.

With painful frequency we hear of cruel "practical jokes" perpetrated upon little children. Again and again comes to us the old story of a child frightened into convulsions by a playfellow who "only wanted to have a little fun." One would think that incidents like this had been enacted and told with ghastly iteration often enough from generation to generation to warn off the most incorrigible fun-lovers and fools from the dangerous ground. The progress of the witless plot is generally the same up to a certain point. There is neither originality nor variety in the favourite mode of execution. It soundstrike in telling. A figure wrapped in the conventional sheet lurking in the dark corner; a spring upon the unsuspected victim, selected because he is the most timorous or delicate of the family or school; dismay, shrieks of anguish blent with goblin laughter—then a difference in the ending. Sometimes no apparent harm is done, unless that one child is made more timid, another more cruel. Again, the nervous system is unbalanced so far that a swoon, or, as in the case before us, convulsions ensue. Once in a while the innocent subject of the practical joke pays for his tormentor's prank with his reason or his life. In a less flagrant manner incalculable mischief is done in many nurseries by tales of ghosts, bogies, the black man who comes down the chimney to catch children who will not go to sleep quietly, etc. The mother is culpable who, when she finds her child unduly timid, does not watch narrowly for indications that the nervous organism of her offspring has been tampered with, and who, should her suspicions be confirmed, does not follow the clue to its source and banish the criminals from the household.

Indian Graves to Order.

So determined, indeed, are some of the fabricators of frauds that the following incident is worthy of being published to show the ingenuity they exercise in their peculiar calling. To discover an Indian grave is, of course, a red-letter day for the archæologist. Now, Indian graves are manufactured to order, it would appear. At least, the following recently occurred in New Jersey. A Philadelphia Flint Jack secured a half-decayed skeleton from a potter's field in the vicinity, and placed it in a shallow excavation on the wasting bank of a creek in New Jersey, where Indian relics were frequently found. With it he placed a steatite tobacco pipe of his own make, a steatite carving of an eagle's head, and beads. With these were thrown numbers of genuine arrow-heads and fragments of pottery. The earth was blackened with powdered charcoal. This "plant" was made in November, and in the following March, during the prevalence of high waters and local freshets, he announced to a enthusiastic collector that he knew the location of an Indian grave, and offered to take him thither for $50, the money to be paid if the search proved successful, which of course it did. The cranium of that Philadelphia pauper passed through several cranioligists' hands and was gravely remarked upon as of unusual interest, as it was a marked dolichocephalic skull, whereas the Delaware Indians were brachycephalic.

Labrador Indians Starving.

A correspondent writing from Bersimqis, on the north shore of the St Lawrence, relates the most harrowing distress among the Indians there, and says the reindeer, which has been most plentiful in the large domain of the Montagnais Indians of Labrador is almost extinct. The result of this, coupled with the unusual severity of last winter, was that some of the Bersimis Indians on their inland hunts, to avoid starvation, were obliged to eat their furs, and that in one camp three died of hunger, and that there are dark rumors of their having committed cannibalism are succumbing to their terrible fate. In addition, bad luck of the direst kind attended the efforts of the hunters to secure furs, and out of more than a 100 who started out from Bersimis not ten on their return were able to pay their debts. In view of this deplorable state of affairs, the new grand chief, Moise Bacon, and a delegation of the leading men of his tribe, are about to proceed to Ottawa to interview the Department of Indian Affairs.

Money in a Fish's Stomach.

John Roberts, a fish dealer of Tennessee received a channel catfish, recently, weighing 114 pounds. The monster measured fourteen inches across the head and came alive and kicking. Roberts called in many customers to see the monster, and proceeded to skin, dissect, etc., in the presence of a reporter and others. The reporter states the facts thus: "I saw him cut the fish open, take out the entrails and open the masticating sack, from which was taken a piece of candle, a bunch of six keys, and rag carefully rolled up and securely tied, in which was found two $20 gold pieces, two $5 gold pieces and $5.50 in silver, making $55.50, and I tell you, sir, I never would have believed it if I had not seen it with my own eyes."

It seems to be settled that the proceeds of the sale of Gen. Grant's "Memoirs" will yield nearer $2,000,000 than $1,000,000. The popularity of this book with the American people has never been surpassed except, perhaps, in the case of "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Mr. John Hazard, an old and well known resident of Artemesia, arrived safely in England on the first of this month, where he has gone to visit relatives after an absence of thirty-three years. That he may have a pleasant time and a safe return is the wish of his friends in this Township.--Advance.

PIC-NIC.—A grand pic nic under the auspices of the Markdale, Flesherton and Priceville A. O. U. W. will be held at Eugenia Falls, on Wednesday the 5th August. The public are cordially invited to attend in general pic-nic style, and we hope to see a large gathering from the country and surrounding villages.

RECOVERING.—We are glad to notice that our friend Mr. Stokes is recovering from the effects of the illness brought on by the bite of a dog at Flesherton Station Spring Fair. Mr. Stokes had a long illness, and his many friends through this section of country will be pleased to hear that he is recovering, though still obliged to wear his arm in a sling.—Dundalk Herald.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says; "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold by A. Turner & Co. x

CIVIC HOLIDAY.—The business men of Markdale have almost unanimously signified their desire to have a civic holiday, and Wednesday next, 5th August, has been named as the day. All hands and the cook are going to Eugenia Falls, and the Brass Band is expected to accompany the crowd. Those who go are expected to bring along a bone to pick, and one for his friend.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by indigestion, Consumption, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold by A. Turner & Co. x

ANGRY WITHOUT A CAUSE.—The editor of the Chronicle throws out insults because a statement recently made in the Chronicle has been contradicted. As far as we are concerned no serious reflections were cast on the Chronicle for the report referred to; furthermore, we fail to see anything in Mr. Jenkins or his paper for any respectable journalist to envy. Our ambition is not in the crank line anyway.

FUSRATE.—Mr. F. Burton is a Yorkshire man and a wealthy farmer 8 miles north of Markdale, lives in a beautiful brick residence. He hinted to some of the band boys recently that they might drive out to his place some evening and give them in his neighborhood a musical treat. The band did go last Wednesday, 22nd, and were treated like Princes. A lunch was provided by Mrs. Burton which was rich, abundant and of endless variety; the boys say, the best they ever sat down to. Several of the neighbors gathered and all were delighted with the music of the band, while the boys were "almost tickled to death" with the kind treatment they received at the hands of Mr. Burton and family. Mr. B. also gave $5, to the band. Next.

LITIGATION.—The following cases were recently up before the magistrates court in Markdale, viz—Mrs. Caswell, for selling liquor without license, case dismissed; Caldwell, Hotel, for selling liquor on Sunday, fined $20 and costs; Hanbury, Wholesale Liquor Store, for selling by the glass, two cases fined $20 and costs for first; second referred to Solicitor for decision, and Benson, Wholesale Liquor Store, for selling by glass, fined $20 and costs.

WE will esteem it a favor if some person connected with the various churches and societies would keep us posted from time to time with such items of news as will be interesting to the public. We are sometimes asked, why we did not make a note of so and so? Of course we have to ask the question in return, why they did not let as know? We cannot publish what we do not know except others inform us.

BRUCE county has passed a by-law which provides that the day for nomination of candidates for reeves, deputy reeves and councillors in townships in the county shall be upon the last Monday but one in December. We hope our county will "go and do likewise." In rural districts it is almost impossible for Tp. Clerks to get the ballots printed and delivered to the various poll clerks in the specified time, especially when the roads are badly blocked with snow as is often the case that particular season of the year. The above change would give an extra week which would remove that great difficulty.

OUR Village Police, Messrs. Brown, Grant and Mathews, have taken a great deal of pains this season in the improvement of our streets and sidewalks which are now in good condition with very few exceptions. We would suggest, however, that they should not exhaust their treasury entirely as the sidewalks should be gone over and repaired every month at least in order to nail down boards that will become loose and broken in the meantime. It is very important to keep the planks well fastened, as a loose one is liable at any time to cause a serious accident and to keep them fast it would not be a bad idea to have a man go over the entire ground once a week and spike down any loose plank, and thus keep the sidewalks always in good repair, the cost of this would be trifling.

GRAND EXCURSION to Owen Sound and Wiarton, will be given under the auspices of Shelburne Lodge Ancient Order of United Workmen, on Tuesday, August 11th. The trip will be made via. C. P. R. to Owen Sound, thence by the new and commodious steamer Pacific to Wiarton. The train reaches Markdale at 8:40 a. m. and Owen Sound at 10:00. At 10:30 the steamer leaves her wharf, arriving in Wiarton about 1 p. m., where a stay of some two hours and a half will be made, and an opportunity will be afforded excursionists and others of witnessing a grand lacrosse match between the Shelburne and Wiarton clubs. Owen Sound will be reached upon the return journey at 6 p. m., but here a stay of two hours will be made, the train not departing for home until 8 o'clock. Those who wish to return next day can do so by paying 30 cents extra. Good Brass and Quadrille Bands will enliven the trip. Meals served upon the steamer at 25 cents each. A grand time is expected. Tickets from Markdale for the round trip, only $1.25; children half price. Tickets to be obtained at the railway station and from members of the committee on board the train. For full particulars see posters.

THORNBURY and Clarksburg people are fitting up their cemetary in good shape.

THE Beaver Valley Times expects to be reduced in size shortly, and the Flesherton Advance comes out this week in its reduced size.

A GOOD FILTER.

Pure water is indispensable to health without it. The Liver filters the Blood. Regulate the Liver with Burdock Blood Bitters and make pure Blood.

The Queen's Influence.

When Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues were defeated in the House of Commons a few weeks ago, and decided to retire from office, the first thing the Prime Minister did was to tender to the Queen the resignations of all the members of the Cabinet. The Queen, who was at Balmoral, in Scotland, telegraphed her acceptance of the resignations, and summoned the leader of the opposition, the Marquis of Salisbury, to confer with him.

When the Marquis arrived, the Queen "commanded" him to form a new ministry, which he thereupon proceeded to do. But the Queen might have sent for and issued the same command to any other statesman of either party. She was not compelled to send for Lord Salisbury, but in doing so used her own discretion, while at the same time she followed the usual course in such cases.

Many people, who are well informed in most matters, labor under one or two entirely different mistakes as to the position of the Queen, or the sovereign, in the English political system.

Some persons are under the impression that she exercises a great deal of royal power, and in many ways actually directs the government of her realm. Others regard her as a mere puppet, a useless ornament, with no power whatever, and wholly subject to the will of her ministers.

Neither of these views is correct. The truth lies midway between them. Many of the powers and functions which the Queen apparently and nominally exercises, she really does not exercise at all. For instance: according to the laws of England, the sovereign has the power to declare war or conclude peace, to make treaties, to create peers, to expend the revenue, to summon and dissolve Parliament, and to veto bills.

But each and all these powers are really exercised by the ministry of the day. The Queen only does these things on paper. Her name is used and her signature given to all these acts. But she is obliged to act in regard to them as the ministers advise her. Should she undertake to do any of these things against the will of the ministers, she would probably provoke a revolution.

On the other hand, the Queen is far from being a nonentity in the English system. She has, indeed, no real, arbitrary power to direct the policy of her State; but, as Mr. Gladstone has pointed out in his "Gleanings of Past Years," she has a very great "influence." She reigns, but does not govern.

While she cannot really command, she can do much, by reason of her exalted place and social supremacy, to influence the course of political events.

The Queen is always informed of every step her ministers intend taking in public affairs. She discusses these steps, and gives her views upon, them and her views are always listened to with deferenc. Ministers will strive, if possible, to accede to her wishes. Though without power, the Queen thus has an important influence.

This influnce, too, is largely measured by the personal qualities and character of the sovereign. Her prudence, experience, zeal for the welfare of the people, and familiarity with public affairs, if such qualities she has, will greatly increase her influence. On the other hand, a weak, foolish, dissipated, capricious, or inexperienced sovereign would have much less weight in public affairs.

Queen Victoria has reigned so long, has shown such sensible and patriotic qualities, and is known to be so earnestly devoted to the well-being of her empire, that her opinions and wishes are an important factor in British policy. Should her successor fail in these traits, he would be far less influential than Victoria now is in the English realm.

A Sea Monster in Galway Bay.

A party of fishermen have captured with great difficulty a sea monster which was inspected by thousands of people. It is about nine feet and a half long, about five feet in girth, and weighs close on three cwt. The mouth is like that of a shark, the upper jaw protruding about six inches beyond the lower. In addition to this a long pig-shaped snout extends from the upper jaw about eight inches. The eyes are large, and resemble those of a cow. There are five rows of gills on each side, divided by a larger of grizzly flesh. There are two rows of teeth, each tooth is about two inches long and as thin as a wafer. Each tooth laps over its neighbour. The skin is of a silvery colour and underneath it is a number of spots known as buttons. These diminish in size as they near the tail. The tail is fan-shaped. There is no dorsal fin. The buttons are half-an inch in diameter at the head, and in the centre of each is a thorn a quarter of an inch long as sharp as a needle. The Dublin Science and Art Musuem have obtained possession of the head and tail of the monster, which proves to be a fine example of the spinious shark—one of the rarest Irish fishes. Only one other specimen of this extraordinary fish has been obtained.

A naturally selfish disposition may be continual, but gentle influence be brought to rejoice in another's happiness and to work for it, while a naturally generous heart may be coldness—be shut up from its own warm instincts.

QUEER FACTS.

A curiosity at Rockford, Ill., is a young negress with a luxuriant growth of auburn ringlets.

Three young bantam chickens belonging to Charles R. Hambright of York, Pa., lay eggs that are pure white on one side and a beautiful strawberry color on the other.

Mrs. John Wood, age 67, and the mother of twelve children, eloped from her home near Toledo, Ohio, with William Bradley, aged 21, and went to Detroit, where they were eventually obliged to go to the poor-house.

When Annie Leon left New York twenty-two years ago to attend her husband and son, who were mortally wounded at Gettysburg, she lost her two-year-old daughter. The girl has just been found in a blind asylum at Columbus, Ohio.

The son of the Scotch millionaire, who has become greatly interested in agriculture, has hired himself to an Illinois farmer for $15 a month so as to learn the American methods of farming. He agrees to labor two years at that rate of pay.

David Reedy, a colored man, living near Marietta, Ga., was struck while working by a whirlwind, and, as he said, "whisked into the air to a height that made the trees look like little brushes." His descent was so easy that he was not in the least harmed.

Frank Smilie, a drummer, was in Macon, Ga., recently and was handed a letter dated April 9, 1884, that had travelled thousands of miles in hundreds of mail bags while vainly pursuing him. A year ago he left Cincinnati without a certain perfumed letter that was expected, but he gave instructions to have it forwarded. It arrived the day after his departure, and was forwarded. It kept right behind him, and followed him into Georgia, Alabama, Florida, and Mississippi. All this time he wondered why "she did not write." About a month ago he read a marriage notice in which the writer of the misplaced letter figured as the bride.

A Sad Case of Poisoning is that of a man or woman afflicted with disease or derangement of the liver, resulting in posisonous accumulations in the blood, scrofulous affection, sick-headaches, and diseases of the kidneys, lung or heart. These troubles can be cured only by going to the primary cause, and putting the liver in a healthy condition. To accomplish this result speedily and effectually nothing has proved itself so efficacious as Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which has never failed to do the work claimed for it, and never will.

Feather-trimmed suits are very stylish and young chickens are discarding their overcoats for them.

What can be more disagreeable, more disgusting, than to sit in a room with a person who is troubled with catarrh, and has to keep coughing and clearing his or her throat of the mucus which drops into it? Such persons are always to be pitied if they try to cure themselves and fail. But if they get Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy there need be no no failure.

A Chinese girl is easily recognized by a double joint in the left knee.

There are ladies, and fashionable women, too, who utterly refuse to wear tinsel, high hats or bonnets, bustles or high coiffures, but they are the exception, not the rule.

Complain as we may

About our lot in life, we cannot deny that any are exempt by their position from the common lot of pain and suffering. The highest as well as the most humble must be ever on the alert to take advantage of such means as will relieve, when pain makes a relief a necessity to our comfort. In a letter from "Government House, Ottawa" asking for a supply of "Putnam's Corn Extractor" we are reminded of two things—the first, that corns are universal, and secondly, that Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor is recognized by all classes as the most certain, painless and non-poisonous remedy for corns. Beware of the article just as good, and use only Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor.

It is stated as a remarkable fact that fleshy people never commit suicide.

In the manufacture of tobacco from the leaf, sugar and molasses and gum of some kind are used. In the manufacture of the "Myrtle Navy" brand the sugar used is the finest white loaf, known in the trade as granulated. This is a sugar in which there is seldom any adulteration, but to guard against the possibility of it, all sugar used in the factory is submitted to careful tests of its purity. The gum used is the pure gum arabic.

Everyone loves power, even if they do not know what to do with it.

As if by Magic.

This is always the case when Polson's Nerviline is applied to any kind of pain; it is sure to disappear as if by magic. Stronger, more penetrating, and quicker in action than any other remedy in the world. Buy a bottle of Nerviline to-day, and try its wonderful power of relieving pain of every description Pain cannot stay where it is used. It is just the thing to have in a house to meet a sudden attack of illness. Only 25 cents a bottle. Sample bottles only 10 cents, at any drug store.

A French-Canadian Bride.

At one of the smaller landings, where the boat did not usually stop unless signaled, a girl was seen standing gesticulating wildly. The captain came forward and with an inquiring expression of countenance informed the passengers that he knew from the excitement in the individual was in that a wedding party was coming on board. And his prognostication was soon verified, for as soon as the boat touched the landing a motley procession came trooping down—old and young people, middle-aged, from the infant in arms to the aged couple, who, John Anderson like, were tottering down. The procession was headed by the bride and groom, the latter looking excessively uncomfortable and out of place in his "dressed up" condition; but the bride's pride presented a great contrast to her home-made lord; her self-satisfaction was supreme. As the captain remarked, "If you really want to witness happiness and contentment, you must see a French-Canadian bride from the rural districts. She has attained to the height of her ambition; she is at last decked out in bridal finery." She went straight for the saloon after coming on board, and looked round a little nervously at first, then sat frigidly down on the extreme edge of the nearest bench, and cast down her eyes, as was supposed, in blushing modesty. Oh no! it was not modesty; it was her shoes upon which her admiring glances were directed.

The rest of her costume was commonplace, consisting of a black dress of some cheap material, which one of the ladies designated as "alpaca." She wore a hat trimmed with a wreath of tawdry-looking pink and blue artificial flowers, while bows of yellow and green ribbon relieved the sombre hue of the dress. There it remained for the shoes to give the final bridal character to this somewhat remarkable toilet. They were of white kid, well cut, with huge rosettes on the instep. The pedal extremities, which were of rather liberal proportions, were augmented by fine-knit woollen stockings, which appeared just a trifle incongruous. Her husband soon joined her, and took a seat beside her, and as he sat speechless, with his wife's hand lying in his own, it was supposed he was lost in admiration and wonder at the beauty of the slippers. A half-hour later found them in the same position, with the bride still casting loving glances at her feet. When the newly wedded pair left the boat they were met by an old man and a young girl, who, by the way they embraced the bridegroom, were set down as his father and sister. The former took the bride gently by the hand, who received them with rigid coldness. The girl timidly ventured to kiss her newly made sister. The caress was tiredly permitted, not returned, and afterwards deliberately wiped off with a blue cotton pocket-handkerchief. The last seen of the kid shoes they were almost invisible as their owner trudged up a steep sandy hill in the hot August afternoon.

MAXIMS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

Let us respect gray hairs; but, above all, our own.

Love, when it visits old men, is like sunshine upon snow; it is more dazzling than warming.

We forget the origin of a parvenu if he remembers it; we remember it if he forgets it.

The first love that enters the heart is the last to leave the memory.

The truth about our merit lies midway between what people say of it to us out of politeness and what we say of it ourselves out of modesty.

Where the intellectual level is low charlatans rise to distinction. They are like those rocks on the seashore which only look high above low water.

Those whom experience does not render wiser are taught by it to seem so.

To endeavor to move by the same discourse persons who differ in age, sex, position and education is to attempt to open all locks with the same key.

The flavor of a detached thought depends upon the conciseness with which it is expressed. It is a grain of sugar that must be dissolved in a drop of water.

How to Ride a Horse.

He who rides should ride in a proper manner, and should be, as it were, a part of the animal he bestrides, accommodating himself to every motion of his horse, and not bobbing up and down like a 'teter-tailed snipe. Some like the French, like the American, some like the Indian, an ungainly wretch, but who appears graceful on horseback. Bumping in the saddle is English, and don't ride like an Englishman. Ride with a long stirrup, sit easily in the saddle, bridle slack and in the left hand, left hand, down on the pommel left leg rather very slightly advanced, the toes pointed straight to the front and resting easily in the stirrup, and only the toes in the stirrup, not the whole foot. Ride with whip and spurs if you like, but use neither unless absolutely necessary, as the horse knows, and you know, that you have the power to enforce obedience.

Another thing, the inhuman custom of cutting off the horse's tail; let it grow. The horse needs his tail if only to brush away the flies that torment him so furiously in summer.

Very Young Widow.

The following advertisement appeared in The Indian Social Reformer:

A widow of a Bengali, Brahmin caste, 11 years of age, lost her husband six months after marriage. Her father wishes to give her in marriage to a Bengali Brahmin on high clan.

A Bengali lady, of Brahmin caste, who became a widow when she was 11 years of age, and who possesses a fair complexion and long, beautiful hair, and whose moral character is most unexceptionable, is prepared to marry a gentleman of her own caste according to orthodox rites.

The guardians of a Khatri (caste) lad of Kapur clan, aged 17, who is the scion of a highly respectable family, and is receiving education in English and Persian, are willing to encourage the system of widow marriage by marrying him with a widow of the same caste.

Required, a match for a Bengali widow of Vaidya caste, aged 14, who had been married at her 11th, and lost her husband at her 13th. She is of "wheat" complexion, of good features, and can read and write Bengali tolerably well, knows the alphabet of English, and is very intelligent; knits comforters, stockings, etc., pretty well, and is very willing to work. The candidate must be a member of the Vaidya caste, and of respectable family. He must be well educated, and of good moral character.

Required, an educated widow, 13 to 15 years of age. She should be of good shape, feature, complexion, temper, and health, and not suffering from any hereditary disease, daughter of a well-to-do gentleman, and of respectable caste—for an enlightened young Bengali Zimindar (landlord) of respectable caste and family, accomplished, well built, and free from every present and idiopathic malady. He is prepared to meet agreeable demands, and in order to encourage widow marriage among the nobles and gentries he is desirous of presenting the bride at the wedding with jewels worth 10,000 rupees.

Waiting to be Swindled.

The people ready to be swindled are far more numerous than the swindlers. One man offers to furnish counterfeit currency at a low rate. A dozen tempted by their greed send forward their money and get back in due time their boxes filled with sawdust. One man pretends to have drawn a prize in a lottery. He will find a score quick to trust him with their cash in the vain hope of getting something for little or nothing. It is a fortunate provision of nature that there are so few rogues; for if they bore any proportion to the number of dupes society would go to pieces.

In Philadelphia the other day a man pretending to be a sailor went into a baker's shop and asked for a person for whom he had bought some jewels in a foreign land. He was exhibiting the casket when in rushed an alleged pawnbroker, who pronouncing the jewels worth $600, offered $150. The sailor demanded $250, and the pawnbroke went away for the money. The sailor soon after departed, when the pawnbroker coming back upbraided the baker for letting the man go and took his departure, telling the baker to advance the sailor $100 and he would call and take the treasures off his hands. The sailor, of course, came back and said he had been frightened away because the goods had been smuggled. Fear of arrest induced him to offer the jewels to the baker for $80. He eagerly accepted and that was the last he saw of money, sailor or pawnbroker. The "jewels" were worth fifty cents.

ANIMALS WITH BRAINS.

A Tallahassee man cut the tail off his cat last year, and her last litter of four kittens have no tails.

At Croton Falls, N. Y., a rooster looks after a large brood of chickens as tenderly as a veritable biddy.

The maltese cat belonging to Squire Belleville of Saverton, Mo., went to the woods and brought in two young wild rabbits that she now treats as well as the rest of her family.

Rover is a dog belonging to William H. Tuttle of New Haven. After the morning paper, which is delivered at his master's store, has been read, Rover takes it to Mrs. Tuttle's mother to read.

At Easton a horse envied his master the comfort of a hammock, and while the gentleman was dining the horse left his pasture and took possession of it. The hammock had to be cut to pieces to get the animal clear.

A cat belonging to Judge Bernard of Tallahassee became such a nuisance that the Judge sent him to a new house fifty miles away. Tom came walking into his old home a few nights ago, nearly drowned and very weary. He had walked the fifty miles back, swimming across several streams on the way.

The sparrows had been too well treated by a farmer near Youngsville, N. Y., for them to forget him, so when a big hawk swooped down on a fat hen and carried it to the top of a neighboring tree the sparrows went for him. They worried it until it released the hen and attempted to fly away. It finally fell back into the poultry yard with both eyes picked out and so badly hurt that it died.

Russian Topics.

From the moment the news of Mr. Gladstone's defeat reached St. Petersburg the political atmosphere changed as if by magic. The talk of war, which during the last month had quite ceased, is everywhere renewed, and the coming struggle again forms the subject of conversation, to the exclusion even of the cholera and the inoculation of bacillus. There is no doubt that the preparations for war, which have been carried on lately in the careless, lackadaisical way peculiar to the Russians, will be resumed with more energy. If England bring no serious obstacle to the present project for the line which gives Zulfikar and Moruchak to the Russians, most likely hostilities will be postponed. Russia is accused of encroaching more and more, but if any one is interested enough in the subject to go into all the details, he will be convinced that without the territory claimed by Russia her acquisitions in Central Asia would be almost useless to her.

To affirm that Russia desires to begin a ruinous and endless war with such an opponent as England in the present deplorable state of the Russian finances is to prove one's self strangely ignorant of affairs in this country, and greatly to exaggerate the importance attributed to the Central Asian conquests. The real interests of Russia are in the Black Sea, and her dreams are of Constantinople, not of Herat or even India.

The storm of the 29th of May was "an ill wind that blew nobody any good." It caused the wreck of the ironclad Kremlin in the Baltic, it caused great mischief in the military port of Cronstadt, and it made the Neva cover the streets of the capital. The equipage of the Kremlin was saved, and that vessel is being taken off the sand bank where it stuck and ignominiously tugged back into port. The Kremlin has a queer reputation; it never goes out of harbor but it gets into some terrific scrape. Of all ships ever built it is the ugliest and, except perhaps the famous yacht Livadia, certainly the most unwieldy. Since the opening of the canal which permits the largest ships to enter her harbor, St. Petersburg has put on an air of animation before quite foreign to this capital. The possibility of sending goods without discharging them at Cronstadt will no doubt greatly contribute to raise the commercial importance of St. Petersburg. Cronstadt is now to be exclusively devoted to military purposes.

Preparing Fruits for Canning.

Boil tomatoes twenty minutes, add a little salt; hot.

Boil ripe currants six minutes; amount of sugar to a quart, eight ounces,

Boil Siberians, or crab apples, whole twenty-five minutes; eight ounces of sugar to a quart.

Boil peaches whole fifteen minutes, using six ounces of sugar to a quart.

Boil pears from twenty to thirty minutes—twenty for halves and thirty for whole pears—using six ounces of sugar to a quart can of fruit.

Boil whortleberries five minutes; the amount of sugar to a quart jar should be four ounces.

Boil plums ten minutes; eight ounces of sugar to a quart is needed

Boil blackberries six minutes with six ounces of sugar to the quart.

Raspberries six minutes, with four ounces of sugar to the quart.

Boil cherries five minutes; the amount of sugar to a quart is six ounces.

Fruit cans ought to be tightened both before and after the fruit cools. Never use poor rubbers if you want your fruit to keep well. The best cans have porcelain tops. Keep canned fruit in a dark, cool place (in the cellar) with doors is just the thing to keep fruit in. Swing shelves in the cellar is no place for fruit. Fruit gets too much light and sometimes takes a fall, and, great is the fall thereof, as well as great waste of fruit and time. Avoid all such calamities. Have a cupboard for your fruit. Any man or boy that is handy with tools can make one good enough to put in a dark corner of your cellar. I can assure you it will pay well for the trouble. Fruit kept in the dark retains its flavor better. Try it and judge for yourself.

The Congo.

Stanley, the explorer, expresses the opinion that important steps will be taken this year towards building the railroad past the Congo cataracts 235 miles. The preliminary surveys at least will be made this fall by the engineers who have recently left Belgium to explore the two proposed routes. One route contemplates a through line on the south bank from Noki, near Vivi, to Stanley Pool, to cost about $5,000,000. By the other route it is proposed to follow the north bank to Isangila, then use steam-boats to Manyanga, and lay rails on the south shore from that point to Stanley Pool, at a total cost, it is estimated, of $3,000,000. One of the two surveying parties, under Lieut. Vandervelde, left Brussels for the Congo about June 1, and the other, under Capt. Zboinski, started on July 1. The choice between these two routes will depend upon the results of the studies which are soon to be made.

TRAVELLING IN MEXICO.

A lady who spent some time in Mexico, writes as follows:—

About midway between Saltillo and Monterey, and some fifty miles from either, lies the little village of Pesqueria. Astonishing tales are told of marvellous caverns in the mountains that overshadow the hamlet; but as the caves are exceedingly difficult of access, few people—at least of this easy-going generation—have ever seen them. Your correspondent, and the companion who insists on calling herself my "frequent partner"—a la Betsy Prigg, conceived the idea that it was our journalistic duty to explore the height and depths aforesaid. "But you can never reach the caves," said one, "it is a terrific climb, straight up the mountain side and then down into unknown abysses."

"How can you two ladies make such a hair-brained expedition?" said another, "What will you do with your dignity, and your petticoats, climbing up those slippery steeps through cactus and chapparral?" "Oh, bother dignity!" Betsy irreverently remarked.—"When travelling, one must adapt one's self to circumstances. It is our duty to visit those caverns, and we are going to do it."

That settled it, for when a "gentle woman" makes up her mind, there is generally no use arguing, so without delay we organized a small party of trusted friends and burning with journalistic enterprise, set off on our laudable pursuit of information.

The Mexican National Railway, which has penetrated from the Rio Grande as far south as Saltillo, runs through a narrow defile between spurs of the Sierra Madras, in the midst of most picturesque scenery. Sometimes the gorge is very narrow, the "mother mountains" rising, peak upon peak, in sierred ranks close in on every hand. Anon the heights trend off in pallisades and bare gray cliffs, like those of the Hudson or the sombre, far-away Columbia; while here and there little valleys open on either side, made green by the ranchman's cultivation. This thirsty soil, which grows nothing naturally but dust, stones, palms and cactus; is made to blossom as the rose whenever water is turned on. Irrigation is nearly everywhere possible, for when rivers are not, there is generally plenty of water below the surface which is readily made available by means of artesian wells.

In this sunny country seed-time and harvest come whenever it is most convenient for the husbandman, and he is as liable to be planting in December as May, expecting to realize at least three crops of corn a year, and other products in proportion. Almost any day one may find the farmers ploughing—with great forked sticks, precisely like those used in Egypt centuries ago. Occasionally we catch glimpses of the threshing floor, the process being still conducted here exactly in the manner of King David's days, according to the Bible description. Passengers bound for Pesqueria leave the cars at a station called Garcia and take coach for the remainder of the journey. The hamlet of our destination lies three miles from the railroads, and the advent of a stranger there is a bewildering event to the simple natives. We arrived about 9 a. m., and soon discovered that there was not an inn within forty miles—an unpleasant circumstance in view of the fact that we were breakfastless, having left our respective abodes before daylight! But these gentle-hearted people are proverbially hospitable, and a judicious combination of silver and suasin induced a Mexican Samaritan to admit us to his casa, where we were speedily "done for" in the way of cold tortillas (cakes made of crushed corn and water, without salt, soda, butter or other embellishment,) and frijoles (red beans) boiled in pork fat. Thus refreshed, and a guide secured, we mounted our waiting steeds and galloped gleefully away. But we didn't gallop long. I speak from sad experience in asserting that plow-horses, topped with Mexican saddles (men's saddles, made wide as barn-doors, slippery as glass, and with stirrups like instruments of torture) are not suitable accessories to feminine enjoyment of that exercise. Eight weary miles over the worst roads the imagination can conceive—alternately between clouds of dust that cut the flesh like needles, and narrow canons strewn with sharp, loose stones upon which our horses slipped at every step—are enough to take the "tuck" out of the most enterprising journalist; while the tropic sun hung in exact meridian as if interested in the spectacle. At the outset Betsy whipped up her nag and cantered triumphantly ahead, regardless of my quoted admonition "Drink fair, Betsy wotever you do." "Call me not 'Betsy'"—she proudly responded—"I am Maseppa, henceforth Maseppa!" A couple of hours later, when two jaded women reached the foot of the mountain and viewed the perpendicular ascent to the mouth of the cave, (which looked like a needle's eye hung away up in the blue,) neither had a word to say about Maseppa, or Dickens' heroines either. We took a long and silent pull at the gourd of tepid water which the guide had considerately hung to the horn of his saddle, gazed ruefully at each other's sun-blistered noses, gathered our skirts more closely about us, said our prayers, and prepared for 'victory or death.' Over the horrors of that three-mile climb—which by the constant slipping back of our horses amounted to thirty—the sharp-thorned chapparral tore our clothes and scratched our faces, the panics on the brink of precipices and repeated importunities to be allowed to get off and walk,—for Betsy's sake I draw the veil. When the summit was reached at last, one of the ladies fainted from sheer exhaustion (who I have solemnly promised never to reveal, for but two of the "female persuasion" made the ascent,) and never saw the caves at all, but remained stretched out on the mountain-top with a cactus leaf for a pillow, dreading the hour of return!

Her Grammar.

It is a pathetic sight to watch the meanderings of the childish mind through the intricacies of English grammar. Little Jane had repeatedly been reproved for doing violence to the moods and tenses of the verb "to be." She would say "I be," instead of "I am," and for a time it seemed as if no one could prevent it. Finally Aunt Kate made a rule not to answer an incorrect question, but to wait until it was corrected.

One day the two sat together, Aunt Kate busy with embroidery, and little Jane over her dolls. Presently doll society became tedious, and the child's attention was attracted to the embroidery frame.

"Aunt Kate," said she, "please tell me what that is going to be?"

But Aunt Kate was counting, and did not answer. Fatal word, be! It was her old enemy, and to it alone could the child ascribe the silence that followed.

"Aunt Kate," she persisted, with an honest attempt to correct her mistake, "please tell me what that is going to am?"

Still auntie sat silently counting, though her lip curled with amusement.

Jane sighed, but made another patient effort.

"Will you please tell me what that is going to are?"

Aunt Kate counted on, perhaps by this time actuated by a wicked desire to know what would come next. The little girl gathered her energies for one last and great effort.

"Aunt Kate, what am that going to are?"

Ghost of the Engineer.

Ever since the killing of a colored engineer by the explosion in the mill of the Bibb Manufacturing Company at Macon, Ga., the negroes in that locality have been excited by what they believed to be repeated visits of his ghost. According to them, the ghost of the dead engineer is in the habit of appearing near the northeast corner of the factory inclosure on moonlight nights and of promenading in grim silence around the grounds just outside the brick wall.

One morning Police Officers Long and Thomas, on Oglethorpe street, in front of the mill, saw a large man approaching them from the northwest. He walked slowly and seemed to be examining the brick wall which incloses the grounds. They continued their walk, wondering what the man was doing on the street at that hour. When quite near him he suddenly turned around and disappeared. They knew that he could not have climed over the walls, and considering his sudden disappearance suspicious, at once began to search for him. They looked everywhere in the neighborhood, even beating up the tall grass in the factory reservoir inclosure, but they could not find the mysterious promenader. The question which agitates the officers is, Was the man flesh and blood or was it the ghost of the dead engineer?

Tea as a Beverage.

Use a china or porcelain pot. If you do use metal let it be tin, new, bright, and clean; never use it when the tin is worn out and the iron exposed. If you do you are playing chemist and forming a tannate or tea-ate of iron.

Use black tea. Green tea when good is kept at home. What goes abroad is bad, very bad and horrible. Besides containing the two hundred and three adulterations the Chinese philanthropist puts up for the outside barbarian, it is alway pervaded by copper dust from the dirty curing pans of the growers.

Infuse your tea. Don't boil it! place one teaspoonful of tea in the pot and pour over it one and a half cups of boiling water—that is, water realy boiling. If your tea is poor use more. It is cheaper, though, to buy good tea at the outset. Put your pot on the back part of the stove, carefully covered, so that it shall not lose its heat and the tea its bouquet. Let it remain there five minutes. Then drink it.

Drink your tea plain. Don't add milk or sugar. Tea-brokers and tea-tasters never do; epicures never do; Chinese never do. Milk contains fibrin, albumen, or some other such stuff and the tea a delicate amount of tannin. Mixing the two makes the liquid turbid. This turbidity, if I remember the cyclopœdia aright, is tannate of fibrin, or leather. People who put milk in tea are therefore drinking boots and shoes in mild disguise.

Leather may have its color restored by an application of good blacking, and after brushing, a slight oiling and an after dressing of gum tragacanth. It will improve the suppleness likewise.

The Standard.

MARKDALE JULY 30, 1885.

WELCOME, BRAVE BOYS.

On Thursday last three trains of the returning volunteers passed through on their home trip, when Markdale did honor to the brave boys in a most enthusiastic manner.

At eleven o'clock a. m. every avenue and nook in and around the station was crowded by anxious mothers and maidens, to catch a glance of those who had so nobly defended their honour and homes.

Our citizens had erected a very neat arch on the triumviral style of Roman architecture, the centre being adorned with a Royal Standard, in all its gorgeous hues of the Royal Scarlet, while on either side were its unison emblems of Union Jacks. A centre motto adorned the arch with the words "Welcome Home;" while other suitable mottoes adorned the pillars of the structure. Some disappointment was felt by the audience at the short delay by the railway train; but, we must pay all due regard to the energy of our persevering station master, Mr. Cæsar. Indeed every citizen lent their best energies to the work. The following address was delivered by John Lyons. Esq.:

To General Middleton, officers and men under his command, comprising the "Queen's Own" and "Tenth Royals," Canadian Volunteers:

GENERAL,—Permit us, the residents of Markdale, County of Grey, Ontario, Dominion of Canada, to offer you an humble address, and trust that the spirit in which it is given will be a token of the interest taken in National Affairs by your representatives. Your Military Skill has earned for you an undying fame in the estimation of all loyal Canadians; and the noble officers and men under your command, and who so successfully executed your orders, will win our everlasting approbation. The scenes of your arduous labors have been pictured to us thro' our daily newspapers:—We weep for the sufferers, and mourn for the fallen.

Your hard earned victories on the thorny path of National Duty, has had a responsive feeling in all our breasts; and your successful efforts in extinguishing incipient rebellion will cherish you in the memory of every citizen of our town and community.

Lieut.-Col. Grassett, who was in command, gave a short impromptu reply, thanking the citizens of Markdale for the honor conferred upon the troops.

Bouquets were served by the ladies' in large quantities, for which they received in exchange all sorts of tokens of friendship, such as hard tack, bullets, calling cards, buffalo teeth, etc., etc., besides various trinkets, picked up at the capture of Batouche, and an occasional kiss.

The locomotive gave a snort, and the boys were whirled away to their respective homes.

The people of each station along the line turned out to welcome the boys, but when they reached Toronto the number of people, the decorations of the city and the enthusiasm would be impossible to describe. 100,000 people were in the street, and each one boiling over with enthusiasm. Some of the Volunteers said that the excitement at the capture of Batouche was nothing to that in Toronto on their return.

Was It Riel?

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—Seeing in your issue of last week an account of the descent of a "Something" on the farm of Mr. Sanderson, we write to-day to tell you that that something left our village on Tuesday evening July 14th. For some hours during the day persons were seen to pass silently and quietly up a pair of stairs and disappear, and each person as he came and went, seemed to moove in an air of mistery. As the hours went by the mistery deepned until about sunset when all our dark surmisings were put to flight by the appearence in the air of a rising baloon, then as the truth forced itself upon us cheer after cheer made the welkin ring. We may say that any who wish to see the ascent of some more of the mysterious visitors if they will visit our village on the afternoon of August the 4th they will witness the whole performance. The annual pic-nic of the Methodist Church will be held in the afternoon and in the evening. Our friend Mr. Wilkinson will "send off" several baloons. We can confidently promise you a rare treat on 4th.

Yours, NIB BOD.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

The hot weather, and holiday season is now with us, the time when friend visits friend and especially to those confined to crowded city life is it not pleasant to enjoy for a while the freedom of country life?

J. W. Henderson; Esq., and family, of Toronto, are now visiting friends in this locality.

Mr. Clark, of the Hamilton Times, and Mr. Aikinhed, of Toronto, with their wives are spending some holidays with J. W. Armstrong. Esq., in this village.

All in our village appeared very enthusiastic over the return of our soldiers from the North-West. On Thursday last shops and business places were closed and business was almost suspended for the greater part of the afternoon while almost every man, woman and child wended their way to the depot. Our No. 6 Company of Volunteer, under command of Lieut. Field, was also present in full dress and all prepared for giving the brave boys a right, royal and hearty welcome. Lieut. Field drew up his men in single file on the platform and immediately in front the ladies were given position in same file, each carrying a boquet of flowers. The first troops to arrive was the "Queen's Own," and as the train steamed into the yard the large company of some hundreds present sang the "Soldiers Welcome Home," when the train had stopped and eager hands grasped the flowers as they were thrown into the train, and the poor fellows, whose hearts were touched with the kindness of the ladies, having nothing better to give, threw out buttons off their coats, cartrige boxes, &c., with a God Bless the ladies. The Band then played the "British Grenadiers" when three cheers were given for the soldiers, which was reciprocated by them by three cheers for our volunteers and three rousing cheers for the ladies. A few boxes of cigars provided by some of our boys was distributed among the sun burnt boys on the train, when the signal was given, and with waving of hands, caps, &c., and prolonged cheers the heavy train started on her onward journey to carry the brave lads to their own sweet home. The same reception was tendered the "Grenadiers" and "Body Guards" as their respective trains arrived a little later in the afternoon.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

News rather scarce this week, as there has been no picket fence walking, or any stone walls breaking down; but we must not forget to mention that we mourn the loss of our esteemed citizen, John Miller, and the menagerie of mules and jackasses, who made their departure from our midst on Monday night of last week, bound for their new home in Alpena, where we believe he intends to deal extensively in the fowl and feather line—a pretty good business on that side. On the evening of his departure he did not forget to use the lads well who assisted in helping him off, and they soon were so boozy they could sing or whistle and play the Jewsharp, and some got arguing scripture, but not much benefit was derived from this. It was comical to see young "Bill" sitting on the little sulky in which the little jassack was placed ready for a start; but, although little Bill has been used very rough by the boys around, yet he did not forget to go around and bid them all a kind farewell. When leaving they were cheered off by many voices till out of sight. The following morning the door of the dwelling was draped in mourning, which presented a very sad appearance to the place, and although we cannot hear the brays of the little jassack and see the sweet smiling face of John and the rest, yet they will long be remembered by the people of this vicinity.

Last Friday evening a couple of village dudes, both wearing about a No. 5 shoe, took a stroll out of the village to see a young lady, about half a mile distant, but unfortunately one was a little behind the other in going, but he met the others at the bars and they all sat down together on the grass till some other young folks was coming along, then they hid in the wheat till they passed by, and then along came the third, for the second one in going, as he was wanted at his business place, so the poor fellow had rather bad luck, didn't he? But it wasn't long till the other had to skin out also. We wish them better success another time.

Mr. John Gordon, of Manitoulin Island, brother of our highly respected friend, Robert Gordon, is visiting friends in the neighborhood.

Jackson L. Little, of Owen Sound, paid a brief visit to his brother in this place.

Miss Christena Gamey, of Nottawasaga, is visiting friends in this place.

New potatoes are plentiful, and also a good size.

Quite a number of people are through haying. Fall wheat is changing its color fast, and will soon be fit to cut.

Quite a number of boys went down last Sabbath evening on the banks of the beaver and pelted stones at the house occupied by Mrs. Miller and her family, but the compliment was returned by showers of bullets, but no one was hurt. We think our boys should have more sense than to break the Sabbath in this manner. If they don't know better, they will have to be taught.

We noticed in Feversham news of last week, a Maxwell item in reference to John Miller, formerly of this place. We think it must be as quiet a place as it looks to be, when the correspondent cannot gather a few items without taking in Maxwell.

Business is rushing at Herron's hollow. Large loads of wool are continually going from there to the station, where it is shipped to Toronto.

THE BEST YET.

There is no preparation before the people to-day that commends their confidence more, or meets with a better sale than does Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry—the infallible remedy for all forms of Summer Complaints.

Priceville Pointers.

Mr. John McArthur, councillor, has been very ill for over two weeks with billious fever, and is yet in a critical condition.

Mr. T. Brown has erected a new Saw, Lath, Shingle and Plaining Mill with a 40 horse power steam engine. The Mill is guaranteed to cut twenty thousand feet of lumber in ten hours, and will be in operation about the 15th August.

Mr. Robt. Chapman went to Calgary, Man., last spring, and his wife and family left to join him this week.

Mr. Thos. Atkinson of the Commercial Hotel has purchased a lot on the opposite corner to this hotel and has this summer erected one of the finest stables in the county. The building is 80 x 52 feet and well finished, and is so arranged that a load can be drove in off one street and out upon another without backing out or turning within the barn.

UNKNOWN.

There is no remedy known to medical science that can excel Dr. Fowlers Extract of Wild Strawberry as a cure for Colera Morbus, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, or any form of Summer Complaint afflicting children or adults.

A Plucky Female.

The following item of news we received from a lady subscriber at Toronto with the request to publish, and also requesting the Monitor and Owen Sound papers to copy. The Mrs. Freeman referred to is a daughter of Mr. James Loycock, who resides on the 7th line of St. Vincent. She is also a niece to Mr. John Hill, Meaford, and will be well known to the majority of our readers. This is what our fair correspondent says: Mrs. Geo. Freeman, of Toronto, daughter of Mr. James Laycock, St. Vincent togather with a young lady friend, were out for a ride on horseback. They had not proceeded far when they came in contact with a large blowing adder, a very venomous viper. The young lady made off as fast as her horse would carry her, but Mrs. Freeman dismounted, tied her horse, secured a stick and with a few well directed blows killed the reptile, which, had she not done so, might have caused the death of one or more persons. The snake measured 5 feet 7 inches in length and was 9 inches circumference in the largest place. During the melee Mrs. Freeman lost a valuable gold watch but was fortunate enough to secure it again. Our correspondent concludes the item by saying: "Not so bad for a female," and we must admit the action of Mrs. Freeman proves her to be possessed of no small amount of nerve.—Meaford Mirror.

Stabbing Affray at Chatsworth

COMMITTED TO GAOL.

A stabbing affray of a serious nature occurred at Chatsworth on Monday evening last. As far as we have been able to learn it had its origin in a quarrel which took place on Dominion Day, between some of the young men of the village and some colored men named Bowie. The Bowies are described as quiet, inoffensive citizens when let alone, but passionate when roused, as they sometimes are, by the thoughtless taunts of young men in the neighborhood. On Monday evening it appears that Allen Bowie was passing down the street, when several young men came out of a tavern, and one of them (not the one who was afterward stabbed) said "He could lick any d——d nigger in the place," making hostile demonstrations. There was a fight, and Bowie appeared to be getting the better of his assailant when one of the other young men kicked him on the head. His brother and wife then appeared on the scene and got Bowie away; but the young men followed them up with abuse and threats, and another fight took place, Bowie plunging a knife into the neck of a young man named Alex. Mitchell. The wound was a very deep one, the blood spurting several feet from it. Bowie was at once arrested and has been committed to the gaol here to await his trial. The wounded man had medical attendance promptly, and we are pleased to learn though the wound is a serious one, he is expected to recover.—O. S. Times.

HE ACTED WISELY.

"I am so weak I can hardly move, all run down with a Chronic Summer Complaint," said one gentleman to another on our street the other day. "Now, take my advice," replied his friend, "go to your Druggist and get a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. I never have known it to foil in curing any kind of Summer Complaints."

Every man to his Choice.

A returned Volunteer went to bed on Thursday night tired out. His couch was soft and comfortable, but he turned and tossed himself and could not sleep. Early in the morning he dressed himself, took his blanket and lay down in the lawn, and immediately began the enjoyment of a dreamless sleep. He has announced his intention not to exchange the luxury of sleeping on a lawn or a plank for any new-fangled invention. There are quite a number like him in the city just now.

A FREQUENT ANNOYANCE.

Many people suffer from distressing sick headaches and bilious attacks of frequent occurrance which a bottle or two of Burdock Blood Bitters would entirely remove. It regulates the Stomach, Liver, Bowels and Blood to a healthy action.

FINE LUMBER.—The steam barge Niagara arrived here on Friday last, having on board 480,000 feet of pine deals, from Ashland, Lake Superior, in Northern Wisconsin. This is the first of five million feet which is to go through from here to Quebec by rail and thence by Allen Line to Liverpool. Lumber is of the very finest quality, and about four inches thick.—Owen Sound Advertiser.

FLUID LIGHTNING.

All sufferers from the terrible torment, Neuralgia, can be made happy in one moment by a single application of Fluid Lightning briskly rubbed on painful parts, and without using any disgusting medicine day after day with little or no result. The Temperance Problem.

BY ISAIAH RYDER, M. D., TORONTO.

The Scott Act as a legal measure for the supression of intemprane has been before the public for some years, and most persons are supposed to have become somewhat familiar with its provisions and with the object of its promoters. Its advocates look upon intemperance as an evil second to no other in its magnitude, and they are endeavoring to surpress this evil by enforced legal enactments. Their undivided sympathies go out spontaneously towards the unfortunate victim of alcoholism, while their hatred and contempt are often expended in denouncing the manufacturers and dispensers of alcohol in its various forms. Opposed to this class stand arrayed and promoters of the traffic, insisting that they and their intrests are being ruthlessly trampled upon by those who are striving to surpress the evil.

In one respect all are agreed—that drunkness is a shame and a sin to the individual. While some pity its victims, others denounce them as incompetents, and urge that they do not deserve either sympathy or assist ance. These sentiments in their innumerable variations find expressions in the community in the various phases of temperance workers, church members, legislators, and administrators of the law. The reason of this medley of ideas which combined, constitute public opinion, is that each one looks at the problem from a different stand point, and under different degrees of intelligence, prejudice, and ignorance of the facts as they exist in the ordering of a kind Providence. It may safely be assumed that each individual is accorded the privilage of free agency, and is certainly held to a strict accountability for whatever consequences follow the choice made in deciding upon the course he shall pursue. While each one may be approximately near or distant from the real standard of truth, God has established such a standard, and is insisting that all who do not come to His standard shall pay the penalties which he enforces as a consequence of all ignorant, or incompetent disobedience.

In the discussion of this quesiton we have to enquire whether alcohol is friend or an abettor to the advances to accomplishment of this great privilege. In order to do so we must ascertain its true character and effects.

Alcohol is in itself an inorganic, active and instant poison. It is not a product of growth, it is a combination of simple elements resulting from the death of the living cells of the fruits or grains from which it is derived. In the distruction of the sacharine and starch cells, a minute fungus growth, a yeast plant, or ferem, is first produced by absorbing a portion of the gases, and residue of the dead or incorporate elements combine into two new death-dealing substances, one atom of carbonic acid gas and two atoms of alcohol. The carbonic acid gas causes death if persistently taken into the lungs, and the alcohol as certainly destroys the living cells, both of the blood and assimilated tissues when taken into the stomach.

Alcohol cannot by any possibility be shown to originate, as do foods, under vital laws. These laws seize upon inorganic matter and endow it with life such as is peculiar to all vegetables and animals. They organize, construct, endow with life and knowledge; while all chemical actions, and especially fermentation; disorganize by first devitalizing, and then reducing them to the simple inorgnic element by a process of decomposition.

In regard to alcohol it is clear that its medicinal use is quite as absurd, as it is claimed that it has food value. There are only two specific abnormal conditions upon which illness depend. These are, (1) impurities in the blood, and, (2) imperfectly repaired or damaged structures. Alcohol cannot purify the blood, as it possesses no single characteristic by which this can be accomplished. It is like the proverbial bull in a china shop: its presence is dangerous to the welfare of the entire institution. It is the very essence of impurities itself—far worse than the debris of the broken-down tissues resulting from the wear and tear of the bodily structures, as its contact with the living cells always deprives them of life, which is not the cause with the ordinary impurities of the blood, and if it is not food, it certainly has no single capacity by which it can be used in repairing the damaged structures.

It is supposed medicinal effects are based upon the fact that when it is taken into the system it causes an augmented vital action. The pulse beats from two to ten times faster per minute after its imbibition; and this augmented vital action has been erroneously supposed to be a result derived from the alcohol, while realty its presence arouses the vital intelligence and forces for the purpose of driving the offensive substance to the depurating organs for expulsion.

Its presence causes an undue expenditure of vital nervous energy, just as the whip or spur applied to the horse causes a more rapid and wasteful expenditure of his muscular energy. Illness is really caused by a depletion of the same vital energy which its presence still further exhausts in expelling it. Its exhibition in cases of indisposition is equivalent to putting the hand stealthily into a man's pocket and extracting his cash when he is greatly in need of more to meet his recurring liabilities. It is equivalent to making the poor comfortable by plundering them of what little they already possess.

The Temperance Liberal Union, lately established in Toronto by Prof. Goldwin Smith and his coadjutors, is discussing the question at a series of public meetings now being held in different parts of the Province. If the reports are to be credited their logic is tolerable; but their premises are wholly at variance with the truth, and hence they are led to wrong conclusions. A successful defence of the use of alcohol under the light of our present scientific attainments is impossible, if reference is had to facts that are well-known to such as take the trouble to keep themselves posted as to the latest scientific discoveries.

The advocacy of the use of right wines, lager, beer, etc., as a remedy for the evils resulting from the use of the stronger alcoholic beverages, is equivalent to teaching young men to avoid a more glaring inconsistency by guiltily indulging in one less apparent. The proper regulation of the human mind depends upon avoiding all that is wrong, and defending and practising all that is right. The contaminating influence of the lesser evil is only the seed-bed of the more apparent destroying influence. The advocacy of the use of light alcoholic beverages is precisely what temperance workers did fifty to sixty years ago, when the temperance agitation was first inaugurated; and that the work of temperance education has been superficially done is apparent from the logic of this new candidate for public favors. If the temperance people had paid due attention to the physiological aspect of the case, that they have to the moral suasion and legal aspect, they would have won the fight many years ago. There is no possibility of dealing successfully in educating public sentiment as to the truth regarding the character and effects of alcohol upon those who use it, except by showing how it effects the living cells when it comes into contact with these sentient atoms. We must first teach the public that it always injures these cells, and that the apparent augmented strength after its use is only an effort on the part of the combined assimilated atoms of the vital organism to expel an offensive intruder.—Truth.

Cooling the Cellars.

A great mistake is sometimes made in ventilating cellars and milk houses. The object of ventilation is to keep the cellars cool and dry, but this object often fails of being accomplished by a common mistake, and instead, the cellar is made both warm and damp. A cool place should never be ventilated, unless the air admitted is cooler than the air within, or is at least as cool, as that, or a very little warmer. The warmer the air the more moisture it holds in suspension. Necessarily, the cooler the air, the more this moisture is condensed and precipitated. When a cool cellar is aired on a warm day, the entering air being in motion appears cool; but as it fills the cellar, the cooler air with which it becomes mixed chills it, the moisture it condensed, and dew is deposited on the cold walls, and may often be seen running down them in streams. Then the cellar is damp and soon becomes moldy. To avoid this, the windows should only be opened at night, and late—the last thing before retiring. There is no need to fear that the night air is unhealthful—it is as pure as the air of midday, and is really drier. The cool air enters the apartment during the night, and circulates through it. The windows should be closed before sunrise in the morning, and kept closed and shaded through the day. If the air of a cellar is damp, it may be thoroughly dried by placing in it a peck of fresh lime in an open box. A peck of lime will absorb about seven pounds, or more than of water, and in this way a cellar or milk-room may soon be dried, even in the hottest weather.—American Agriculturist for August.

Malicious.—Some miscreants on on last Sunday night rolled a saw-log on the center of the road leading to Rowe's Mill. The obstruction was placed near the centre of the hill—a most dangerous spot. Beyond the mill, another log was placed on the road, when it is crowded on either side by piles of saw logs, and had any vehicle been passing in the night, it is impossible to estimate what injury might have been the result of this wicked folly. There are criminating suspicions as to the perpetrators.

The seventeenth number of Canadian Pictorial & Illustrated War News was issued last week on Saturday, instead of Thursday. It is a Special Number containing 16 pp. and is devoted entirely to describing and illustrating the reception given by the various towns and cities of the Dominion to the returning troops. The publishers sent special members of their staff to Winnipeg and other cities to report and sketch the proceedings, and the illustrations are striking mementos of the joyous occasion of the home-coming of our gallant troops. As the paper is double the ordinary size the price is 15c. instead of 10c.

It is not to be wondered at that errors occur in the hurry of newspaper reporting; but there are two of our Toronto brethren--the Mail and News--who made serious blunders in their report of our reception of the volunteers at Markdale last Thursday. The Mail said the address of welcome to the volunteers was presented by Capt. Madill, of the Salvation Army, and the News credits Dr. Sproule with that honour, and gives him an extra P (ital) to the dignity which belongs to him as a member of the house of Commons. Genuine facts can only be obtained from the local press, the country over. The Address was presented by John Lyons, Esq., of this town.

Garden Party.—The Methodist Ladies' Aid annual garden party was held at the residence of Mr. Wm. Armstrong on Friday evening last and was a decided success. The weather was very threatening all day and a few drops of rain fell in the evening, but otherwise everything was favorable, and there was a large attendance. The Brass Band was in attendance, and appeared for the first time in their new uniform which gave them quite an improved appearence, they acted their part to the great satisfaction of all, they are a very respectable lot of young men and are fast growing in popularity. The refreshments, ice-cream, lemonade, bouquets, &c., were in abundance and the customers plentiful, so that a very enjoyable time was spent in those most delightful grounds which are large, neat and well arranged. Mr. Armstrong and family will please accept the united thanks of the society for throwing their grounds open and for their united efforts in making the lawn party a success. Proceeds $41.03.

"A policy of Life Insurance is the cheapest and safest mode of making a certain provision for one's family. It is a strange anomaly that men should be careful to insure their houses, their furniture, their ships, their merchandise, and yet neglect to isure their lives, surely most important of all to their families, and far more subject to loss."—Benjamin Franklin.

SALADS AND

A Fam Chef—Valuab'e Opinions—Sugar and Salt—A White Sauce—Egg Salad—Celery—"Stock."

"If you don't get any thing else there you ike, you will say you never tasted such salads and sauces."

So spoke a wise friend to us as we were starting for a historic town in Provence, France, and while we could joyfully testify to many other delights in which that visit resulted, yet have we the most fragrant memories of the salads and sauces of the little inn where we lingered for more than a month that winter.

It was such a very home-like place that we had not been there any time before we were on friendliest terms with the whole establishment, from Madame in her little gayly decorated "bureau" just off the courtyard, to Jean, the fat cook, who held daily confabs with us in one half-covered part of the portico near the dining-room. Jean was quite a character. He had his own way of doing a thing; for example, he never on these occasions came into the room; we have seen him quite indolent there at other times. On rainy mornings, our breakfast over, we would behold the prudent chef making his way across the court holding a large umbrella over his head, and not to be lured from his usual place. He would chat affably on various culinary subjects, asking our opinion on this and that in the most complimentary manner, now and then giving us fragments, as it were, of the most delightful sounding recipes. At last a time came when he actually wrote down some of these. Later he told us that he knew he might make a fortune in England, for—as many letters he had received testified—he could get enormous wages in a club or some great nobleman's house, but Jean preferred humbler laurels and lower earnings in his own Provence. And his fame did go abroad. To the superior excellence of his salads and sauces more than one guest at the little Hotel Imperial has subscribed. Jean assured us that the first consideration in a sauce was the amount of sweet or salt naturally in the article to be dressed, for salt and sugar, he observed, were far more important elements than one believed until one thought with seriousness upon it. White sauces were his chef-d'œuvre. A fine one for fish which we have since used successfully for certain vegetables and ragouts, was made as follows: Put into a porcelain stew-pan a good sized lump of butter; when it melts add one pint of cream or rich milk; let this heat through, and add a good pinch of salt, some Cayenne pepper, and the heart of an onion chopped tolerably fine. Smooth to the consistency of paste two table-spoonfuls of flour in a little cream or milk, and taking care to stir all the time, pour this in slowly. Let it all boil up, keep on stirring, and then put it at the back of the fire. Have ready, well crumbled, the yolks of two very hard boiled eggs. Beat these well into the sauce. Just before pouring it over your fish or other article to be dressed with it, let it boil up once more, but taking care to stir well all the time. As a sauce for small new potatoes, for boiled lobster, for chicken hash, veal stew, etc., this is excellent, but too much care can not be taken in following the directions exactly, the melting of the butter first being very important, and to be recommended in all white or cream sauces. An egg salad can be made by boiling eggs eight minutes, and placing the yolks in unbroken balls on a dish, pouring over them the above sauce with one table-spoonful of salad oil beaten into it. Garnish with sprigs of parsley and the white of the eggs cut in crescents. It is also excellent poured over bits of toast which have been previously dipped in boiling water.

Our Provence cook made a delicious celery sauce by boiling pieces of celery tender, and adding to some good stock a little white wine. Then thicken this with flour, a little butter, and some pepper and salt. Boil up with the celery, and pour hot over the article, fowls, etc., to be dressed.

All small white fish when dressed should have either a cream or a white wine sauce, and for the latter stale champagne may be used to excellent advantage, but never when the sauce is to be served cold.

The Apache Indians.

The Apaches have smoke signals by day and fire beacons at night, and systems of telegraphy understood only by themselves. The displacement and overturning of a few stones on a trail, or a dent or broken twig, is a note of warning like the bugle call to disciplined troops. The many crosses dotting the road-sides of Arizona and New Mexico mark the graves of murdered men. "The country seems one vast grave-yard," writes Susan E. Wallace, "if we may judge by the frequency of these rude memorials." Trained by their mothers to theft and murder from childhood, they are inured to all extremes of heat and cold, hunger and thirst. They are cunning as the red fox, insatiate as tigers, and so ingenious in preparing for surprises that they will envelop themselves in a gray blanket and sprinkle it carefully with earth, so as to resemble a granite boulder, to be passed within a few feet without suspicion. Again they will cover themselves with fresh grass, and, lying motionless, appear as a natural portion of the fi

SCIENCE.

Pure beeswax is obtained from the ordinary kind by exposure to the influence of the sun and the weather. The wax is sliced into thin flakes and laid on sacking or coarse cloth stretched on frames resting on posts to raise them from the ground. The wax is turned over frequently, and occasionally sprinkled with soft water if there be not dew or rain sufficient to moisten it. The wax should be bleached in about four weeks.

H. Fol and E. Sarasin have lately written a memoir on the depths to which solar rays penetrate in marine water. From a series of experiments made in the month of March of this year at Ville-franche-sur-Mer (Mediterranean) analogous to those previously carried out at the Lake of Geneva, the authors conclude that in fine weather the last rays of light are dissipated in the Mediterranean at a depth of about 400 meters.

N. J. Hericourt has submitted a paper to the Academy of Sciences, Paris, in which he maintains that all waters, of whatever origin, contain curved bacilli of variable forms and dimensions; that the curved bacilli do not exist in the atmosphere under their characteristic form, but are there, however, in the condition of germs, and that all substances capable of serving as nutriment to germs or bacteria contain curved bacilli.

No method, says the Engineer, has yet been discovered for removing obstacles from pneumatic tubes preferable to that resorted to in Paris. The position of an obstruction is determined by simply firing a pistol into the tube. The resulting wave of compressed air, traversing the tube, strikes the impediment, and is then deflected back to its origin where it strikes against a delicate diaphragm, its arrival being recorded electrically upon a very sensitive chronograph, on which also the instant of firing the pistol had previously been recorded. The wave of sound on reaching the diaphragm is recorded, and then reflected back, a second time striking the obstacle and returning to the diaphragm. This operation being several repeated, successive measurement are thus made of the time required by the sound wave to traverse to and fro within the pneumatic tube, and the exact position of the blocking matter is ascertained.

Looks Like War.

A despatch from Teheran states that 1,000 Persians are at work constructing the Trans-Caspian railway. War-like preparations are still being continued by Russia. Rumors are in circulation in the bazars of Teheran that war will probably occur after the Trans-Caspian railway is completed to Merv. The Russians are bridging the river Murghab on the confines of Afghanistan. Eight hundred Russian infantry are at Old Sarakhs. The Persians are fortifying the Persian Sarakhs and building barracks there for troops. A foundry has been started at Herat for the casting of heavy guns. A St. Petersburg despatch states that a telegraph office has been opened at Merv.

Russian advices from Vladivostock say that a Russian steamship which attempted to enter Port Hamilton was intercepted and forbidden to enter by an English man-of-war. The English are said to be fortifying the port.

The Caribs.

The Caribs, or Caras, who are met in British Honduras, existed, it is said, as a powerful race in prehistoric times, and spread gradually, under different names, over the globe. They themselves assert that they came from the North. At the time of the discovery of America they were in a complete state of decadence, although they had been previously a highly civilized people. The Caribs in British Honduras sell yams and a kind of bread called cazava at Belize. In a crowd their peculiar language, which resembles the sound of gloo-gloo indefinitely repeated, attracts attention at once. Oddly enough, they use the French numerals up to ten, though French is seldom spoken in British Honduras. The Carib women dress in skirts, but wear no jackot over their low-necked under-garment. They like gaudy turbans and ornaments.

From the Lowest Round to the Highest.

Many years ago a glover's apprentice in Edinburgh suddenly made up his mind to be a student. For a long time the thought had glowed and burned within him, but he was very poor, and daily bread was an urgent necessity. The outlook was not inviting; no candle had he at home, so after shop hours were over he resorted to lights in shop windows, and when they were put out a lamp-post was climbed. Just think how uncomfortable he must have been—holding on by one hand, book tightly clinched in the other, and his eyes literally devouring the open page. No one need be told that this hungering and thirsting after knowledge was amply satisfied. This young man became one of the most brilliant Oriental scholars in the world, and the first book in Arabic printed in Scotland was his work.

A Japanese inventor makes paper from seaweed, which from its thickness and transparency, can be colored to an excellent imitation of stained glass.

LAKES OF SOLID SALT.

Marvellous National Curiosity in Afghanistan.

At the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, London, the other evening, Sir Peter Lumsden read a paper on the countries and tribes he had recently visited west of Afghanistan. He gave an interesting description of the geography of the Murghab valley and the customs of its people, and quoted a singular account of the Namaksar, or salt lakes of Yar-oilan, visited and described thus by Capt. Yate:—

Yar-oilan means "the sunken ground," and no word can better describe the general appearance of the valley of these lakes. The total length of the valley from the Kangrualion the west of the Band-i-Dozan which bounds it on the east, is about 30 miles, and its great breadth about 11 miles, dividing into two parts by a connecting ridge which runs across from north to south, with an height of about 1,800 feet, but has a narrow which rises to some 400 feet above the general average. To the west of this ridge lies the lake from which the Tekke Turkomans from Merv get their salt. The valley of this lake is some six miles square, and is surrounded on all sides by a steep, almost precipitous descent, impassable for baggage animals, so far as I am aware, except by the Merv road, in the northeast corner. The level of the lake I made to be about 1,430 feet above the sea level, which gives it a descent of some 400 feet from the level of the connecting ridge, and of some 950 feet below the general plateau. The lake itself lies in the centre of the basin above described, and the supply of salt in it is apparently unlimited. The bed of the lake is one solid mass of hard salt, perfectly level and covered only by one or two inches of water. To ride over it was like riding over ice or cement; the bottom was covered with a slight sediment, but when that was scraped away the pure white salt shone out below. How deep this deposit may be it is impossible to say, for no one has yet got to the bottom of it. To the east of the dividing ridge is the second lake, from which the Saryks of Penjdeh take their salt. The valley in which this lake is situated is much the larger of the two. The valley proper is itself some fifteen miles in length by about ten miles in breadth. The descent to it is precipitous on the north and west sides only, the eastern and south-eastern end sloping gradually up in a succession of undulations. The level of this lake is apparently lower than that of the other; I made it out to be some 800 feet above sea level. The salt in this lake is not so smooth as in the other, and did not look so pure. It is dug out in flakes or strata, generally of some four inches in thickness, is loaded into bags, and carried off on camels for sale without further preparation.

He Preferred to Walk.

"She's pretty hot, ain't she?" said a backwoods passenger, addressing the engineer of a Mississippi steamer that was racing with another boat. "So-so," responded the engineer, as he hung an additional wrench on the safety-valve cord to stop the steam from escaping. "I reckon we'll overtake that craft soon," pursued the stranger. "That's about it," returned the engineer, giving the cords another twitch and hallooing through the trumpet to the fireman to "shove her up." "One hundred and ninety-five," hummed the passenger, looking first at the gauge and then at the boilers. "That's where she's rusticating," put in the engineer. The passenger ran his fingers through his hair nervously, and walked about the decks for a few minutes, when he came back to the engineer and observed, "Hadn't you better leave that boat go?" "Can't do it. Must pass her." "But s'posin' we should blow up?" "Well," said the engineer, as he peeped over the guard to see how fast he was going, "if it is the will of Providence for the boat to blow up, we'll have to stand by it." Then he hallooed to the fireman to coal, and give her a little more turpentine and oil. The next moment there was a splash in the river; but before the yawl could be lowered, the man had succeeded in reaching the shore and hallooed out, "Go on with the race. I guess I'll walk."

A Loving Stepmother.

In order to punish her stepson, a boy 12 years old, a woman living at Minneapolis tied a rope around the boy's wrists and hung him out of a second-story window on the slanting roof of a bay window. After putting the boy out of the window, the mother closed it so that it rested on his wrists, tied the rope to a trunk, and put a nail in the window so that the lad could not raise it to help himself. A great crowd of men and women collected in the street, but no one dared to interfere until Sergt. Kirkham's little girl came and notified her father, telling him that a boy was being hung. Mr. Kirkham hurried out, and in spite of the fact that the woman said she "would like to see a police officer come into her house," went in and took the boy down. His hands were black, caused by stopping the flow of blood, and the rope had cut his wrist. In the afternoon the father appeared at the station with the boy and wanted him sent to the reform school. He said he had whipped him, locked him up in a room without clothes, but it didn't do any good.

At Philadelphia, recently, a hotel runner known as "Charlie the Swede," plunged a knife into the back of Joseph Maguire, with whom he had long been at enmity, and then leaped into the Delaware river and swam towards Camden. Next morning his dead body was found in the river. Maguire's condition is critical.

At Green River island, in the Ohio river, near Evansville, Indiana, Charles Harding and James Townsend fought six rounds with bare knuckles, the stake being the hand and heart of Miss Sadie Corning, a rural belle, for whose affections they had long been rivals. Harding proved victor, and will claim his bride as soon as he can see out of his right eye. Townsend was severely punished.

At East Saginaw, Michigan, recently, several hundred strikers visited all the saw-mills and salt works in operation on both sides of the river, and compelled them to close. Mr. Warner, one of the mill-owners, was choked for offering resistance, and two negroes, who went to his relief, were roughly handled. At Bay City the strikers made an orderly street parade, headed by a band of music, after which a committee of their number held a conference with the mill-owners asking that ten hours constitute a day's work and no one be discharged for participation in the strike. No agreement was reached, the mill-owners accepting the first proposition but declining to entertain the second.

What to Take to Picnics.

At this season of the year the question what eatables to take to picnics arises so frequently that a few suggestions may be acceptable. Many people lose sight of the fact that good bread and butter and cold meat are articles of which there should be an ample supply, even at the cost of going without some delicacies. A small spirit-lamp will enable one to get, with very little trouble, a cup of hot tea, coffee, or chocolate. Here is a short list of good things from which to make selections for a luncheon in the woods: Buttered thin bread, buttered rolls, pressed chicken, broiled chicken, tongue, ham, pressed corned-beef, sardines, stuffed eggs, hard boiled eggs, broiled smoked salmon, pickles, olives, crackers and cheese, orange marmalade, hard gingerbread, cake, cold coffee, cold tea, lemonade. There are many fruit syrups which, mixed with cold water make palatable drinks. Lemon juice for lemonade should be extracted at home and carried to the picnic grounds in bottles. The sugar may be put with it or added with the water when the lemonade is wanted. When ice can be transported the bill of fare may be improved greatly. For example, salads may be packed in ice, and they will be found tempting when dinner is announced. Ice cream and sherbet also will make the meal seem a hundred per cent. better on a hot day, and a little ice in the lemonade will make it so much more refreshing as to repay one for the trouble of carrying the ice. But have good bread and butter anyway. It is well to distribute crackers and cheese among the party on first reaching the grounds, so as to relieve any feeling of faintness.

In ancient times the swampy, spongy territory of the Netherlands was bordered by thick forests, which prevented it from being wholly washed away. The wretched inhabitants of this watery waste were obliged to raise mounds for dwelling-places amid the frequent floods. Strange as it seems, this race of savages, living on fish and spending much of their time in trying to keep themselves from drowning, grew into a great and powerful nation. Their hardships were the school of courage and perseverance that enabled them to surpass races placed under more genial conditions. They made the overflowing rivers fertilize the soil of the country, which became a garden of productive industry. The ocean, that threatened to engulf them, they kept back by embankments, while covering it with their commerce. But the chief glory of this people was not in their industrial enterprises or wealth, or in the triumphs of their arts and arms, but in the services which they rendered to the cause of human liberty and justice by their resistance to oppression.

Hobart Pasha.

The career of Hobart Pasha, just sent to England on a mission to the Sultan, has been an eventful one. The second son of the Earl of Buckinghamshire, he was born in 1823, and first saw active service when still a boy in the expedition for suppressing the slave trade in Brazilian waters. During 1848 and 1849 he served as Lieutenant on board the Queen's yacht. He was mentioned when in command of H. M. S. Driver at the capture of Boomarsund and became Post Captain in 1862. Six years later he was appointed naval adviser in the Turkish service. In 1869 he commanded the Turkish fleet which was sent to Crete and brought to a satisfactory issue the delicate diplomatic negotiations which were carried on at Syra.

He was subsequently promoted to the rank of Pasha and became Inspector-General of the Turkish navy. During the war he contrived to elude the vigilance of the Russians and at great risk successfully ran the blockade of the Danube in one of the Sultan's gunboats. In 1880 he was named Minister and Naval Aide-de-Camp to the Sultan. Four years ago he married Miss Kathleen Hore, who belongs to an ancient Anglo-Norman family which settled in Ireland as far back as 1160, and who has the rare distinction of being a countess of the Holy Roman Empire in her own right. Mrs. Hobart Hampden has devoted a great part of her life to works of charity, and is now President of most of the Catholic societes de bienfaisance at Constantinople. Hobart Pasha stands very high in the favour and friendship of the Sultan, and is doubtless now sent to renew that anti-Russian English and Turkish alliance which existed under Beaconsfield, but has been broken under Gladstone.

Canada in Belgium.

A witty correspondent of The Tropical Times, London, Eng., who is "doing" the Antwerp exhibition with his "wicked uncle" and the "editor," after criticising the mass show of the British department at the International exhibition, thus descants about the Canadian court: "Passing from the British Disgraceries, we enter a really charmingly arranged court. Surely this must be England too. There are the royal arms, there are the Union Jacks, there are—— But no, two smart men with 'Canada' on their caps keep guard. We are on the ground dressed to the most go ahead of all our colonies, the great Dominion of Canada. The superiority of this court only makes our appreciation of the humiliation to the mother country the greater. Mr Canadian Commissioner Dore deserves well of his Government. Good taste is apparent everywhere, from the massive case of Canadian wood down to the very entrances and exits.

STORM AND SUNSHINE.

"Now that you have come so far you must stay for a cup of tea," she says, as we reach the porch of the Vicarage. It is a little stone porch muffled with ivy, as is the whole house, and even the wall which divides its tiny pleasure-ground from the high road. The door into the porch stands ajar. Miss Irving pushes it open and holds it so for me to pass in, which I do, nothing loath.

The porch and entry are both very dark, as they seem dark after the glare of May sunshine without. Miss Irving pulls up the green Venetians in the little drawing-room and puts me into a chair.

"Rest here for a moment while I order tea, and admire my wood-carvings. Every one of those frames and brackets I made myself."

They are exquisitely carved, some of them in high relief—birds, animals, fruit, flowers, in wood of every colour. The border of the mirror over the mantelshelf is a marvel of intricate leaves and blossoms and fruit of the wild raspberry, the walls are covered with photographs in frames of carved oak, the corner brackets are supported by stags' heads, beautifully modelled; the very gipsy-tables are of fret-work, their legs quaintly shaped, and ending in the claws of animals.

The room is small and square, with two windows, one looking into the pleasure-ground, the other into the garden at the side of the house. It has not the air of being occupied—the books and other things on the tables have a set-out appearance; a great painted jar of a dull esthetic shade of blue stands on the hearth, filled with tall lilies and fern; the harmonium in the corner is closed, the music neatly arranged beside it.

"You don't do much of your work here?" say to Miss Irving when she comes back, with a smiling look round the room.

"I never sit here," she answers, shrugging her shoulders; "but I keep the room like this to please my visitors. Once or twice I received them in my studio; and you should have heard the remarks they made about it—to their friends! I heard them afterward."

"I wish you would take me into your studio."

"I have come back for that purpose."

Miss Irving's studio is the little front room over the hall. It is very small, very untid, littered with wood shavings, with scraps of cardboard, with photographs, with sheets of copied music. An easel stands in one corner, a piano in the other; the sunshine comes in gloriously, and the breath of the hawthorn and sweetbriar. A tray, with tea-things upon it, stands on a corner of the table, which has been hastily cleared for the purpose; close to it a narcissus nods on its long stalk in a tall blue glass.

"Do you like this better?"

"A great deal better. It is more like yourself."

"How do you know?"—smiling down at me as she stands by the table pouring out tea.

"Oh, I can guess! This room is not like every other room one sees."

"And you think I am not like every other person?"

"I don't think you are."

"But that is the only objection some people find to me."

"I know that—stupid commonplace people!"

"No; good sensible people, like your aunts."

"My aunts are about a hundred years behind the present age," I say, laughing, as I take the cup of tea she offers me. "If you want my aunts to admire you, you should go about with your hair in ringlets in front and turned up with a pig-tail behind, with white stockings and shoes with spot heels, with a cottage bonnet, and a black silk scarf, and a reticule. And you should never indulge in superlatives of any description; above all, you should never say 'awfully.' To say 'awfully' though you are one as a heathen and a renegade."

"I am afraid you are very naughty," she smiles, shaking her sleek dark head.

She wears her hair quite smooth, except for the cloud of dusky curls just over her beautiful low white forehead; I think the great charm of her face lies in her forehead and eyes, and in the sweet, mocking, gay, satirical, tender, provoking, "kissable" red mouth.

"I mean to come and see you very often," I say, reclining comfortably in my hammock-chair. "And you must sing for me sometimes, won't you?"

"Perhaps. But I don't care about singing for people."

"I am not 'people.'"

"Well, strangers, I mean."

"I dont intend to be a stranger, I assure you!"

"Nevertheless I think this will be your first and last visit to me," she laughs, shaking her head.

"I don't think so. Did you know I was born in this house!"

"I supposed you were born here, as your father had this parish at that time."

"I wonder if the rooms are just the same as they were then?"—looking round a little dreamily.

"The rooms are the same of course."

I think of my mother, and am silent for a minute or two; then I put down my cup and rise to go.

"There are the books"—Miss Irving nods in the direction of a long shelf hanging against the wall; "you can choose anything you like."

I select a thick yellow-paper-bound volume with a very taking title; Miss Irving, who still has her hat on, walks back with me as far as the school-house which is more than half way to Osierbrook. Here we say good-bye to each other, with many assurances of a speedy reunion on my part, and a rather doubtful smile on the face of my new acquaintance. I reach home just as the clock strikes five, and in the hall meet aunt Theodosia, with a trowel in one hand and a bundle of violet plants in the other.

"Why, child, where have you been? We were just thinking of starting out to look for you!"

"I went to the library for a book."

"So your aunt Anchoretta told us; but we could not imagine what detained you so long."

"I hope you won't always get into a fume if I am out of sight for an hour," I exclaim rather crossly, thinking it as well to begin as I mean to go on.

"We were not in a fume," aunt Theodosia returns, in a tone of quiet reproof. "What is the book? It looks very attractive."

She takes the volume from my hand, and, putting on her glasses, turns to the title-page.

"My dear Lisle, this is a regular 'sensational' novel!"

"Well, what if it is? Everybody reads sensational novels!"

"We would rather you did not read them, my dear. You did not get this at the library?"—"No."

"Where did you get it?"

"It was lent to me"—very sulkily.

"By whom?"

Her grave, kind, faded eyes meet mine; I turn away my head.

"Miss Irving lent it to me. There is no harm in the book."

"I dare say there is no harm in it; I never saw the book before to my knowledge; but while there are so many useful things of which you are ignorant, Lisle, we cannot allow you to waste your time over such rubbish as this."

"To waste my time!" I exclaim, forgetting myself completely in my rage and mortification. "I am sure there is time enough in this stupid old house for anything; I do not know how I am to live here if all the days are to be like this."

"Lisle, I am ashamed of you! Go up to your own room, and do not come down again, until you are in a better frame of mind."

"I won't submit to be sent to my room like a naughty child."

"You are a naughty child, and nothing else!"

"I am not a child; and you shall not treat me like one, either! I will not stay a Osierbrook to be dictated to about every thing I do or say as if I were five years old—it is too absurd!"

"My dear Lisle, you don't know what you are saying. Nobody is dictating to you."

"You are dictating to me!"

"I cannot have you read novels of this kind; and, what is more, we do not wish you to be on terms of anything more than the nearest civility with Judith Irving."

"I guessed that would be the next thing——"

"Hush, Lisle! Your aunt Anchoretta is in her room. We know Judith Irving better than you do."

"And what have you to say against her?" I interrupt furiously.

"Merely that she is not the kind of girl with whom we should wish our niece to be intimate—that is all!"

"Because you think, with your antediluvian ideas——"

"Don't let your aunt Anchoretta hear you talking of ghosts in this room Miss Lisle. I hear with you become you are a spoilt child, and brought up in a lamentable want of respect for the opinion of people who are older and wiser than yourself——"

"Older perhaps——"

"And wiser. I say nothing against Judith Irving——"

"But you say everything against her when you say she is not the proper friend for me to have."

"I said she was not the kind of friend we would wish you to have."

"There is such a choice in this wretched old ——"

"Lisle, let me beg you to remember that you are speaking to your father's sister; and remember also that, as long as you stay at Osierbrook, you must bow to our decision in this and in everything else. If you are not happy here, arrangements may be made for your residence elsewhere; but while you do remain here you must conform to your aunts' wishes, and one of their most earnest wishes is that you should not form any undesirable friendships."

"It is rather hard that my life is to be made unbearable because other people choose to stick to their old-fashioned prejudices," I exclaim angrily, and dash up-stairs to my own room. I shall say nothing more about it, since I am obliged—for the present, at least—to remain under their roof; but my aunts shall not choose my friends for me—I am very certain of that!

CHAPTER III.

Going down-stairs about a fortnight later, I find a door open on the first landing which I never remember to have seen open before. The old housemaid—for even the housemaid at Osierbrook is old—is opening the windows. I put my head in and take a good view of the room while her back is turned.

It is a large low room, bright and sunny, with a quaint low window, curtained in faint creamy old chintz, and a tent-bed, draped in the same old-fashioned material, lined with faded pink. There is a wardrobe in the room like aunt Anchoretta's wardrobe, the chairs are spindle-legged, a quaint old spinet stand against the wall opposite to the bed.

"Who sleeps here, Wigley?"

"Gracious, Miss Lisle, how you startled me?" the old woman exclaims turning round.

"You are not afraid of ghosts in broad daylight?" I laugh.

Lisle—nor anywhere else, for that matter."

"Is aunt Anchoretta afraid of ghosts?"

"She don't believe in ghosts; and it makes her furious to hear anybody speaking about them."

"That looks very much has if she were afraid of them!" I persist, shrugging my shoulders. "But you have not answered my question, Wigley."

"This was your aunt Nona's room, Miss Lisle," Wigley answers, lowering her voice mysteriously.

"My aunt Nona? I never heard of her."

"She died years and years before you were born."

"Did she die young, Wigley?"

"Very young," Wigley says, with a solemn shake of her head. "Only six-and thirty, Miss Lisle—a child, you may say, compared with the rest."

Only six-and-thirty! It seems to me a rather ripe old age.

"They never speak of her, Wigley."

"I don't think they have ever spoken her name since the day of the funeral," Wigley answers, with a shake of her head.

"Did she die in this room?"

"In this room. And nobody has ever slept in it since. And that is nigh upon forty years ago, Miss Lisle—nigh upon forty years!"

"And is the room just as she left it?" I ask looking round with some curiosity.

"Exactly as she left it. I come in to open the windows every morning, and every afternoon I shut them at this hour. But not one of the ladies has ever put her foot inside the door since the day Miss Nona died."

"Wigley," I say, struck with a sudden idea, "was that my aunt Nona's garden inside the clipped hedge?"

"It was. And that's never been touched either to my certain knowledge. Miss Theodosia, she wanted to have this room made use of—the house being so small, and each of the ladies wanting a room to herself—but Miss Anchoretta would not hear of it. And when Miss Emily spoke once of having something done to the garden, Miss Anchoretta shut herself up in her own room and nearly starved herself to death."

And these are people who want to dictate to me as to the choice of my friends! I shrug my shoulders as I run down-stairs, across the hall, into the sweet free summer air.

Are not Judith Irving's bright "new-fangled" ways of keen enjoyment of such pleasure as falls in her way worth a cart-load of their ancient fads? Would she not live two lives—three lives—while they were living one? Would not anybody be a fool who took the advice of women silly enough to keep a room shut up for forty years, and allow a garden to grow into a wilderness because it had once belonged to a person who was dead? If they keep this up Osierbrook will soon be nothing but shut-up rooms and neglected gardens, for in the course of nature all my aunts but aunt Theodosia must soon go. Or to the majority count Anchoretta must be eighty if a day.

I hurry down the "laurel" walk, out into the lane; and, from the lane through a stile into Farmer Peckitt's fields. This is a short cut to the Vicarage, which has grown very familiar to me during the last week or two, wherein scarcely a day has passed without my meeting Judith somewhere or other—either at the library, or at the church practice, or at Mollie's cottage, or at the Vicarage itself.

I have always run to my assignations and back again, arriving at Osierbrook so tired and out of breath that if my aunts had not been almost purblind they must have noticed it. But if I am late I always have an excuse ready; without telling a downright lie I manage to evade every question which might get me into trouble, and nobody tells my aunts anything, for nobody—except the villagers—knows that Judith and I are always together, or that when I am supposed to be paying visits to old women in the neighbouring cottages I am at the Vicarage, half a mile away.

Judith knows my visits to the Vicarage are stolen visits, but I have never told her how she is tabooed at Osierbrook, or what aunt Theodosia had said about not allowing me to have her for a friend. I thought if I told her this she might hate me or be offended, and tell me never to come near her again. And she has already obtained such a wonderful hold on my heart or my imagination that I feel as if to lose her now would be to lose all that I had in the world—that if I could not see every day I should scarcely care to live.

I had had school-girl fancies for my schoolfellows before, and wondered how I managed to exist before I knew this girl or that. But my love for Judith Irving is stronger and deeper than any of these experiences; I admire her so much—her strange beauty, her cleverness, her cold cynical views of men and of things, her reckless bravery, her scorn of everything poor and petty and mean.

My infatuation may blind me to her faults certainly—for I suppose she has faults, though I cannot see them. But I do not think it deceives me with regard to her love for myself. I could not hope that she would love me as I love her—an ignorant simple girl like me! But I am sure she cares for me as much as she says she does—if she did not care for me she would not trouble herself to be kind to a person who can never make her any return; and not only that, but her kindness to me may bring her into trouble with my aunts if it should ever come to their ears.

I arrive at the Vicarage breathless having run the whole way across the fields. I find Miss Irving in the garden, gathering over blown Gloire de Dijon roses from the tree in the middle of the grass-plot before the house.

"Judith I have come to tell you that I am going to Velfry to-morrow, to spend three or four days. So don't think there has been any row or anything when you don't find me running over here to-morrow or the next day; and remember you are not to forget me while I am away!"

I put my arms round her as we stand together—I dare say we make rather a pretty picture in the June sunshine, she is so tall and dark, I so small, slight and fair. A gentleman riding by seems to think so at all events, for he smiles as he passes the gate very slowly, raising his hat. Judith returns the salutation with a rather distant nod.

"Who is that?" I ask, raising my head from her shoulder to look after him.

"That is Erroll Rutherfurd."

"He is very handsome, is he not?"

"He is considered very handsome."

"Do not you admire him, Judith?"

"Not in the least. He is not my style."

"What is your style?"

"Something very different from Erroll Rutherfurd."

I stand beside her in silence for a minute or two, while she gathers her great creamy roses one by one. Then I say, laughing—

"Do you know, Judith, I am rather glad I am going to Velfry now!"

"Is it a case of love at first sight?"

Judith smiles, but without looking at me.

"Oh, no; but I like his face! And I am sure Erroll Rutherfurd and I will be great friends."

"I hope so," Miss Irving answers, still smiling good-naturedly. "I used to like Erroll Rutherfurd as a boy."

"But do you like him now?"

"My dear, I have not seen him since he went to China, three years ago, until to-day."

"Then that was a very cool nod you gave him!" I laugh carelessly. Judith, I wish you were coming to Velfry too!"

"So do I," she answers, without a moment's hesitation.

"Do you really? Then I shall put it into Mrs. Rutherfurd's head to ask you."

"I wish you could!" Judith laughs, but there is an eager flush on her soft cheeks as she bends over her rose-bush—such a flush as I have never seen before.

"I shall do my best. I am her god-daughter, you know, and she is bound to be good to me."

"How do you like her?" Judith asks, still keeping her face turned away.

"Very much. She has been in Paris ever since she sold to Osierbrook with both her sons."

"Yes, I know. They came back yesterday."

"And she drove over to Osierbrook this morning. I think her so pretty, with her crisp wavy white hair and clear hazel eyes. Just the kind of woman one would like to have for mother."

"Or mother-in-law!"

"Now you are disagreeable, Judith, and I shall go away!"

"My dear, I did not mean to hurt you. Do not you believe that, Lisle?"

She has thrown down her basket and put her arms round me very tenderly, and with my head on her shoulder I wink the foolish tears out of my eyes.

"What a silly child you are!" Judith smiles, and then she bends her pretty head and kisses me for the first time; and I feel as if I could never care for anyone as much as I care for her; and that if I could only be with her always I would willingly give up everything else in the world.

PECULIAR WARNINGS.

Four U. S. Presidents Who Have Died in Office Strangely Forewarned.

It has been asserted by some curious observer, says Harper's Bazar, that the inaugural ceremonies of each of the four Presidents—Harrison, Taylor, Lincoln and Garfield—with whom death, an unseen and unbidden guest, entered the White House, were marked by signs and omens that, interpreted by supernatural lore, foreshadowed to the ignorant and superstitious the funeral pageantry in which they would ere long be central figures.

Gen. Harrison arrived at Washington in the midst of a driving thunderstorm, and as he descended from his carriage a flash of lightning blinded him and caused him to miss a step and fall. The first night he slept at the White House an owl, perched on the roof of his bedroom, hooted continuously and he explained the next morning that the owl and the howling dog near had kept him awake.

When Mrs. Taylor heard of her husband's election she burst into tears and exclaimed: "Oh, why can't they leave us alone? This is all a scheme to break up our home." When she entered her bedroom at the White House she started back, and, pointing to a diamond shaped ornament carved on the mantel, said "See! the first thing to greet me is a coffin. Death will rob me in this dreadful house of some one I love."

To Mr. Lincoln there came an apparition, thus described by him: "On the evening of the day I received news of my election, worn out by excitement and fatigue, I threw myself upon a lounge in my bedroom to rest. Just opposite to me was a bureau with a swinging glass, and looking into it I noticed two separate and distinct images of myself. A little bothered, perhaps startled, I got up and went to the glass, but the illusion vanished. Lying down again, I saw again but noticed that one of the faces was paler than the other, and had a blood stain on it. When my wife came in I told her of the vision, and she, who had great faith in signs, had generally attached some meaning to them, said: "It means that you will be elected to a second term, but will not live through it."

On their return trip from Springfield to Washington they passed by Gen. Harrison's burial place and halted to pay a tribute of respect to his memory. Turning from the grave, a blackbird made a circle round his head. The night of his assassination Mrs. Lincoln told one of the watchers that on that eventful trip through the bright, happy northern villages, decked with flowers in his honor, as well as that mysterious night ride through Baltimore and secret arrival in Washington, the tolling of a death-knell, clear and unmistakable, was sounding in his ear. The dreams and forebodings of the two Mrs. Garfields, mother and wife, are too recent to be repeated. Were they the idle fancies of nervous women?

PEARLS OF TRUTH.

The company in which you will improve most will be the least expensive to you.

The qualities we possess never make us so ridiculous as those we pretend to have.

It is impossible for that man to despair who remembers that his helper is omnipotent.

A passionate reproof is like a medicine given scalding hot; the patient cannot take it.

A miser grows rich by seeming poor; an extravagant man grows poor by seeming rich.

Every to-morrow has two handles. We can take hold of it by the handle of anxiety or the handle of faith.

We judge ourselves by what we feel capable of doing, while others judge us by what we have already done.

The road to home happiness lies over small stepping-stones. Slight circumstances are the stumbling-blocks of families.

Religion finds the love of happiness and the principle of duty separated in us; and its mission—its masterpiece—is to reunite.

If the human intellect hath once taken a liking to my doctrine . . . it draws everything else into harmony with that doctrine, and to its support.

Percheron Horses valued at $3,000,000, which includes
75 PER CENT OF ALL HORSES
Whose purity of blood is established by their pedigrees recorded in the STUD BOOKS OF FRANCE.
EVER IMPORTED TO AMERICA.
STOCK ON HAND:
150 Imported Brood Mares,
250 Imported Stallions, Old enough for service,
100 COLTS, Two years old and younger.

Recognizing the principle accepted by all intelligent breeders that, however well-bred animals may be said to be, if their pedigrees are not recorded, and cannot be authentically given, they should be valued only as grades, I will sell all Imported Stock at Grade Prices when I cannot furnish with the animal sold pedigree verified by the original French certificate of its number and record in the Stud Book in France. 140 Page Catalogue sent free. It is illustrated with Six Prize Horses of the Exhibition of the Societe Hippique Percheronne of France, 1884, purchased by M. W. WILL YOU SUFFER with Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint? Shiloh's Vitalizer is guaranteed to cure you. Sold by A. Turner & Co. z

LOW'S SULPHUR SOAP should be found with every toilet. It is cleansing and healing.

WATCH AND PRAY.—A minister gives a new explanation on the above. Once while he held service in the lunatic asylum, Toronto, being somewhat suspicious of his audience, he kept his eye on them while he prayed. This is doubtless one way to "watch and pray."

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold by A. Turner & Co. z

THE A. O. U. W. pic-nic at Eugenia yesterday was quite successful. Only twenty-five were present from Markdale, and only one of them was a member of the order. This speaks bad for our lodge. Flesherton and Priceville, however, turned out well, showing a more fraternal feeling. Flesherton Brass Band was in attendance, and played well. The day was cool and pleasant, and all enjoyed themselves remarkably.

CATARRH CURED, health and sweet breath secured, by Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Nasal Injector free. Sold by A. Turner & Co. z ENTERPRISE.—Mr. E. Vanzant, of the Flesherton Marble Works, has displayed commendable skill and taste together with enterprise in his business during the two years he has been in Flesherton. He has erected a large number of fine monuments and headstones through the country in the various cemeteries. One recently erected in the Markdale Methodist cemetery for the Irwin family, is a beauty; it is a cottage monument, the die is 18 x 18 inches, four feet high, the whole stands nine feet high, and is New Brunswick granite. Those requiring anything in the above line will find it to their best interest to see Mr. V. before giving their order.

SHILOH'S VITALIZER is what you need for Consumption, Loss of Appetite, Dizziness, and all symptoms of Dyspepsia. Price 10 and 75 cents per bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co. z

OUR post-office assistant (Master Fred Stevens) is proving himself very competent in his exceedingly important position. There is perhaps no public institution with which the general public have so much to do, as the post-office, and it is therefore of the greatest importance to have it managed by careful and competent persons. We are much pleased to be able to testify to those qualifications in our young friend.

ON Monday last the Warden and Building Committee of the County Council met and opened the tenders for the addition and improvements, of the Court House, and let the contract to John Harkness for $7200. The addition will consist of a two-storey wing to the south of the present building, which will contain a Council Chamber for the County Council, Judge's Chambers and officers for other officials. More accommodation will be given to some of the officials in the present building by making two rooms into one, and the present Court Room will be remodelled and enlarged. The Judge's seat will be removed to the north side, and the partitions to the south will be thrown down, thus greatly enlarging the Court Room by giving the space now occupied by Judge's and Barristers' rooms. The whole building will be covered with galvanized iron roof, surmounted by a dome, and will be heated throughout with hot water pipes. The contract is to be finished by 10th December.—Owen Sound Times.

GRAND EXCURSION to Owen Sound and Wiarton, will be given under the auspices of Shelburne Lodge Ancient Order of United Workmen, on Tuesday, August 11th. The trip will be made via. C. P. R. to Owen Sound, thence by the new and commodious steamer Pacific to Wiarton. The train reaches Markdale at 8:40 a. m. and Owen Sound at 10:00. At 10:30 the steamer leaves her wharf, arriving in Wiarton about 1 p. m., where a stay of some two hours and a half will be made, and an opportunity will be afforded excursionists and others of witnessing a grand lacrosse match between the Shelburne and Wiarton clubs. Owen Sound will be reached upon the return journey at 6 p. m., but here a stay of two hours will be made, the train not departing for home until 8 o'clock. Those who wish to return next day can do so by paying 30 cents extra. Good Brass and Quadrille Bands will enliven the trip. Meals served upon the steamer at 25 cents each. A grand time is expected. Tickets from Markdale for the round trip, only $1.25; children half price. Tickets to be obtained at the railway station and from members of the committee on board the train. For full particulars see posters.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE.—In accordance with notice, a meeting was held at the Council Chamber on Tuesday last to organize a Farmers' Institute for the North Riding of Grey. Jas. Bowes, Esq., Reeve of St. Vincent, took the chair, and explained the object of the meeting, after which members were called for, and the Institute organized with a membership of fifty-two. The following officers were elected:—Jas. Bowes, Jr., President; Robt. Cochrane, Vice President; Thos. Gordon, Sec. Treas. Directors—B. Allen and D. Creighton for Owen Sound; Alex. Garvie and Jno. Robertson for Derby; Jno. Clark and S. Edmonstone for Keppel; Robt. McNaught and Wm. Garvie for Sarawak; D. Armstrong and Wm. Thomson for Sydenham; P. Christie and John Clark for St. Vincent; Jas. Cleland and John Douglass for Meaford. After a cordial vote of thanks to Mr. Bowes, for the interest he had taken in starting the Institute, the meeting adjourned. The object of the institute is to hold conventions of farmers for the discussion of agricultural topics, and it is understood the services of the Professors of the Agricultural College will be available to deliver lectures at the conventions. The first will be held at Owen Sound, on a date to be hereafter fixed.—O. S. Times.

THE DominionParliamentary session for 1885 has indeed been a remarkable one. The Franchise Bill, an exceedingly objectionable and dangerous measure, has been forced upon the country. Ten millions, in addition to the thirty given last year, have been voted to the C. P. R., the nation's pauper. Two millions have been appropriated for the expenses of the civil war, which Parliament is itself almost wholly responsible for. And to complete the sum of their infamy the members have voted themselves an extra $500 each, aggregating $144,500, as an indemnity for the privilege of thus toying with the people's money. The session was unduly prolonged by the obstruction of the Opposition and the presistent self-seeking policy of the Government. The conduct of the Opposition in allowing the item of increased salary to pass unchallenged is to say the least reprehensible. All along they have been accusing the Government of hindering the progress of public business; and holding them responsible for the undue length of the session. And now, when the House is about to prorogue Mr. Blake and his party have allowed themselves to fall into a well prepared pit laid for them by the wily Sir John, for such it evidently is. The Liberals, in becoming parties to the salary deal, have indeed made a terrible mistake. The worst feature of the whole business is that thirty-nine thousand dollars is to go to the Senate as a reward for their tremendous exertions in attempting to mutilate and destroy the Scott Act. This could be endured, as a contemporary remark if in return the poor old Senate would silently vanish away and never be heard of again.—Truth.

IT NEVER FAILS.

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry will never fail you when taken to cure Dysentery Colic, Sick Stomach or any form of Summer Complaint. Relief is almost instantaneous; a few doses cure when other remedies fail.

Hawkers Versus Storekeeper.

People who choose to buy from hawkers and peddlars prowling through the country instead of from responsible business men in the towns, deserve little pity if they come out of the small end of the horn. There are few, if any, of our merchants in any line of business who are making too great a profit, and it is absurd to suppose that the doorstep merchant can offer any better value than the ligitimate trader.

A QUADRUPLE FORCE.

The reason why disease is so soon expelled from the system by Burdock Blood Bitters is because that excellent remedy acts in a four-fold manner—that is to say, upon the Bowels, the Liver, the Blood and the Kidneys, driving out all bad humor, and regulating every organic function.

JUST THE THING.

W. J. Guppy, druggist, of Newbury writes: "Dr. Fowler's Wild Strawberry is just the thing for Summer Sickness. I sold out my stock three times last summer. There was a good demand for it." Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is infallible for Dysentery, Colic, Sick Stomach and Bowel Complaint.

El Mahdi's Death.

SUAKIM, July 30.—El Mahdi was ill only two days. There were no doctors present at the time of his death, which occurred on June 20th. The Mahdi enjoined his successor to continue to wage war with the Christains.

It is reported that since El Mahdi's death his followers are continually fighting among themselves.

One of the properties conducive to durability in timber is its odoriferousness, which repels insect foes as a rule.

The process of curling feathers consists in heating them slightly before the fire, then stroking them with the back of a knife, when they will curl.

The increase in strength due to seasoning of different woods is given as follows—White pine, 9 per cent; elm, 12·3 per cent.; oak, 26·6 per cent.; ash, 44·7 per cent.; beech 61·9 per cent.

Dr. Sydney Thompson suggests the following formula in erysipelas—Fluid extract of jaborandi, twenty-four parts; laudanum and glycerine, each four parts. This mixture is to be painted over the affected surfaces every four hours.

A good substitute for ground glass is made as follows: Work together equal parts of white lead and common putty until quite soft, then form it into a ball, and roll it over the surface of the glass, and a ground-glass appearance is the result.

Shoe-dressing: Gum-shellac half a pound, alcohol three quarts; dissolve, and add camphor one and a half ounce, lampblack two ounces. The foregoing will be found to give an excellent gloss, and is especially adapted to any leather the surface of which is roughened by wear.

Persons who use brass letters on glass windows or doors are often troubled by their dropping off, from unequal expension, or from too violent efforts on the part of the window-cleaner. The following is said to be a sure cement—it should be mixed just before using—Litharge, two parts; white lead, one part; boiled linseed oil, three parts; gum copal, one part.

The following mouth-washes are recommended for sick persons, whose teeth and gums often become unhealthy through insufficient nourishment, medicines or want of cleansing—One part per manganate of potash to from one hundred to one hundred and fifty parts of water, to which can be added some camphor, as the metallic taste is disagreeable; or a solution of baracic acid one in twenty or thirty; or the following—tincture of benzoin, ten parts; tannic acid, twenty parts; alcohol, thirty parts; oil of peppermint, a sufficiency. Put ten or twenty drops into a glass of water.

A Heartless Case.

A gentleman in the west of England, who was possessed of large estates, married a lady who was supposed to be a widow, her husband having left her many years before, and died—it was thought—abroad. After several years of married life, the second husband, as he was believed to be, died intestate, and soon afterwards the lady also died. Then the brother and heir-at-law came forward and claimed the estates; and his claim being resisted, on behalf of the children of the deceased, the marriage was proved to be void, by the production of the lady's husband, with whom the brother of his successor had been in communication for many years. The husband, it appeared, had in the first instance come back to England in order to claim his wife; but having been met with by the unprincipled heir, the latter persuaded him to make no sign, but to subsist upon a weekly allowance from him (the heir), in order that the supposed husband might go to his grave in the belief that he was the lawful husband of the mother of his children; for the brother knew that no will had been made, and feared that if his elder brother—then a hopeless invalid—knew of the invalidity of his marriage, he would make a will in favour of his children and their mother. This scheme was successful; the gentleman died without making a will, a neglect which is always foolish, and often wicked. The heir succeeded to his brother's estates, both real and personal, being the sole next-of-kin as well as heir-at-law; and the poor children were left utterly destitute.

Teeth in His Nose.

A small colored boy in Basseterre, West Indies, has two large teeth in his nose. A portion of his nose having been destroyed by ulceration, he was put under medical treatment for that disease, which soon healed with application of iodoform of potassium. The doctor's intention was to have made a new nostril for the boy, but while awaiting to make sure of the cure of the ulcer these teeth began to make their appearance. They seem to be the two central incisors of the permanent set: they spring from the floor of the nostrils at the sides of the bony septum, are freely movable, and are apparently attached to the mucous membrane only: they have little or no roots, but large crowns.

There is as much wisdom in bearing with other people's defects as in being sensible of their good qualities; and we should make the follies of others rather a warning and an instruction to ourselves than a subject of mirth and mockery of those who commit them.

Is It Not Singular

that consumptives should be the least apprehensive of their own condition, while all their friends are urging and beseeching them to be more careful abeut exposure and overdoing. It may well be considered one of the most alarming symptoms of the disease where the patient is reckless and will not believe that he is in danger. Reader, if you are in this condition, do not neglect the only means of recovery. Avoid exposure and fatigue, be regular in your habits, and use faithfully of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." It has saved thousands who were steadily failing.

The Raw Cutting Winds

Of winter bring to the surface every latent pain. It is one of the strange things associated with our physical well being that the very air, without which we could not exist, is heavily laden with the germs of disease. Rheumatism, neuralgia, lumbago and, other complaints of a similar character hold revel at this season of the year amongst human muscles. There was a time when fortitude alone could make life tolerable, but now with the advent of powerful, penetrating and nerve soothing remedies pain becomes a thing of a moment. The best, the most powerful and most certain pain cure is POLSON'S Nerviline. Nothing equals Nerviline for penetrating power. Nerviline is beyond comparison the grandest discovery for the relief of pain offered to the public. Druggists sell a sample bottle for 10 cents: large bottles only 25 cents at any drug store.

It is said that the crime of parricide was unknown in one of the states of ancient Greece until a law was enacted for the special punishment of such a crime should it occur.

The experiment which Messrs. Tuckett & Son entered upon when they commenced to make their "Myrtle Navy" tobacco was this: to give the public a tobacco of the very finest Virginia leaf at the smallest possible margin beyond its actual cost, in the hope that it would be so extensively bought as to remunerate them. By the end of three years the demand for it had grown so much as gave assurance that the success of the experiment was within reach. The demand for it to-day is more than ten times greater than it was then and it is still increasing. Success has been reached.

Fun for Everybody!

Fun is just what every person is looking for, willing to pay for, and finds hardest to secure. We want a new process mill so that fun can be ground out by the ton and sold at close cutting prices everywhere. How would this be done? The first step is to relieve all who suffer from pain, and Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor stands in the very front rank in this respect. Sure, safe and Painless, causing no sore spots, nor producing the slightest discomfort while in use. Try Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor and beware of substitutes and poisonous imitations.

FATHER PAQUETTE'S ADVENTURES.

An Unread Chapter of the Rebellion.

Father Paquette, who had charge of the R. C. Mission at Muskeg Lake, has given his experiences to a reporter. His story, even when it relates to facts already known, is most interesting, especially when given in his own words:—

"On the 18th of March I was staying at St. Laurent, 4 miles from Duck Lake. About fifteen minutes before midnight, just as I was going to sleep, someone knocked at the door. It was Louis Riel. Two men were with him, Dumas and Moise Ouellette; Jackson, who I think was insane, was also at the mission at the time. When Riel got in, he began to say, in a loud voice: 'The Provisoire is declared, and we have got five prisoners already!' 'I have already destroyed the old Romain, and have a new Pope, Archbishop Bourget!' And to me he said; 'You are to obey me.' I said I would never obey him. 'If you will not,' he replied, 'the churches will stand, but they will stand empty.' Among other outrageous things he said: 'You are in danger here; I have an affidavit against you, and I will get some Indians to fix you.' Riel prayed there two hours, at one time kneeling and calling on the Holy Spirit, and then calling out: 'To-morrow morning I will go and destroy the soldiers, and at night I will go and destroy Fort Carlton.' His eyes were like the devil's. He is not mad, this Riel; he has a very good mind, but is extremely wicked."

"Some hours after he left—before daylight, in fact—I left and escaped to Carlton to give the news that Riel had declared a new government, and so to prevent a surprise and a massacre. The Fort was full of half-breeds, so I said nothing except to the clerk, and told him to tell Major Crozier after I had left. In consequence of this action of mine, which was in some way told to Riel, I was afterwards condemned to death by the council. Crossing the river and arriving at my mission, I found all quiet there. On the same night five half-breed families—including that of Francois Primeau—crossed the river from near Carlton and followed me to my mission, where I hid them from the 19th of March till the 7th of April.

"Twice during that time"—Father Paquette continues—"half-breeds came to my place from Riel to get government cattle. On the first occasion—March 31—Joseph Delorme and Baptiste Ouellette, came to my room with loaded guns, saying that they were sent by 'the government'—meaning the rebel government—for animals, and asking me if I thought the Indians would give them up. I said I did not know, but I would see the chief. 'If they give the animals,' one of the envoys said, 'I promise that we will leave the people quiet.' On the same day, seeing these two half-breeds coming in the distance, I had rung the church bell; it had been agreed that on hearing that signal at any time the Indians should make off to the woods. They did so, but I knew where to find them, and leaving Delorme and Ouellette, I sought out the chief and told him. Riel says that if you don't give up your cattle he will come with his men and fetch both oxen and Indians. To which he replied that he didn't want to go with Riel, even if he died for it. I advised him to go to the hills with all the best cattle, leaving only nine head. He did so, and I told the two half-breeds that the nine were all that there were now, so they took the nine and went away.

"The Indians then came back, but merely to get their property, and immediately went away again to the hills—three days' journey. Only my hired man stopped at the Mission. On the 7th April, early in the morning, an Indian from Battleford passed and told me I had better run, as five other Indians on horseback from Battleford, and two priests had been killed already. The half-breed families with me thought it best to go; and I was the more afraid because the Battleford Indians had demanded provisions of me last summer and threatened to break into my store, saying that when they were numerous they would come and fix me. Taking the most precious articles with me, and locking all the doors, I set off for Shell River, where there is a half-breed settlement.

"Arriving at the Hudson's Bay fort, I advised the clerk to load up his four boats with gun-powder and provisions, and take them to Ile La Crosse, putting all ammunition into the lake. He did so, sending the boats to Beaver River, ten miles distant, and thereby keeping 246 kegs of powder from the Indians. In the morning, when one boat was following with the families, twenty-seven Indians from Loon Lake appeared and caught us. When the people had got ashore, the Indians forced Mr. Sinclair, the clerk, to go back with them to the fort. There, as they were very hungry, they started by getting something to eat, and they also destroyed all the goods including the property of Protestant and Catholic missions. They wanted to take Mr. Sinclair prisoner, saying they had Riel's order to punish him or kill him; but he managed to escape with two Carlton half-breeds, and made his way after us down the river in a boat. An Indian named Makasis, aimed at him; but a chief, to whom Mr. Sinclair had just given his gloves, pulled the gun aside.

"The journey to Ile La Crosse took four days. It was a terrible journey. It was extremely cold—snowing and rain—and we got very wet. We camped on the shore each night. On the third day, Mrs. Sinclair became a mother, and I was chosen godfather of the little child. The Indians, in honor of the event, fired off about three hundred shots. I had sent a letter to Lacrosse saying that we were on the way, and the people at the fort, when they heard the shots, fancied that the Indians were killing us. The next day, when we got to the fort, we found only the clerk (Mr. Franklin) and one pig! The chief factor, (Mr. Ross) the Sisters and all the half-breeds had gone off to an island about sixty miles North West. Our boats had stopped where Beaver river enters the lake, as the lake ice had not yet broken up, so I had to walk nearly the whole of one day across the ice, accompanied by my Indian boy and a carpenter. I was very hungry when I got to the fort, and my clothing was very ragged. Mr. Franklin not only gave me plenty to eat but gave me his own clothes, and these are his boots and pants I am wearing now. The other people waited until we sent back dogs and pulled the boats over the ice. The provisions were hidden in every direction through the woods.

"I told the clerk to get all the half-breeds together, so he sent off for them without delay, and the next afternoon (30th April they all assembled at the fort. About sixty-five or seventy, all men, were there; half-breeds and Indians, including Chippewayans and Wood Crees, some of whom had come a good day's journey from Canoe Lake. I spoke first and said that though they were poor, I knew they were good and honest. A half-breed then declared that he had an order from Mr. Lawrence Clarke and Mr. Ross to take whatever in the store he wanted for his own use. Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Franklin both said it was not true, and I asked who had brought the letter. The man said, 'Angus Mackay.' Then I said, 'You lie, because I read the letter, and there was not a word about such a thing.' To that he made no reply. Then I spoke strongly to them for nearly an hour. I told them, 'Those who will not listen to me, I will excommunicate, because Riel is a heretic and an apostate.' And I told every one who was for me to put up his hand. All put up their hands except one, who explained to me that he had only a stick and consequently could not fight. The one who had spoken was a very good Catholic, and held up his hand like the rest. From that time all were against Riel and all lived quietly.

"Two days afterward three boats were sent to Green Lake, escorted by about fifty armed men. They travelled for two days and then met Indians, who told them that Big Bear was coming through the woods to burn Fort La Crosse. The boats turned back and brought the news that perhaps Big Bear would be at the fort that very night. On the people's advice I then went over to the island where the others were. The chief of the Chippewayans brought two hundred men, with their families, to protect us, and we took advantage of this to carry on a mission among them. After three weeks on the island we returned to the fort—where Franklin and Sinclair had remained—and about four hundred men, Indians and half-breeds, stayed there to protect the mission and the fort.

"Only when news came (about May 27th) of Riel's capture did they allow me to return to my mission. On arriving, after three days' traveling, at green Lake, I found everything destroyed; even my harness had been cut to pieces with a knife. After four days more I reached Shell River. Then, coming to Muskeg Lake, I found that my mission had been pillaged and everything broken, the damage amounting to $1,392. Two men, one woman and two children had done all the mischief, one of the men having been my servant for three years, and the woman having had charge of the church linen for the same time. Really, those whom we have done the most for seem to turn out the worst."

"I stayed at my mission or two days," Father Paquette concluded, "without anything to eat, and I was glad to arrive here. Now I am going to Prince Albert, where the Bishop is. I do not know yet what is going to be done with the mission."

The Size of Noah's Ark.

The exact size of Noah's ark has not been determined definitely, but according to Sir Isaac Newton's calculations, based on his estimate of the length of a cubit in feet and inches, the historical barge must have been 515.62 feet long, 85.94 wide, and 51.56 deep. The measured tonnage of the ark was 18,232, The Great Eastern was 680 feet long, 83 feet wide, and 53 feet deep, and she measured 28,093 tons. Although the Great Eastern was not so well proportioned as the ark, she probably had double the carrying capacity if her coal and machinery were left out of her, because she was made out of iron, and the ark was a wooden ship.

Of no use are the men who study to do exactly as was done before, who can never understand that to-day is a new day.

LIFE IN MODERN PERSIA.

Queer Scenes and Customs in the Land Governed by the Shah.

The European colony at Teheran, the capital of Persia, comprises, including the legation, about 300 persons, and they live in the new city. The majority inhabit the ordinary Persian house. This is one story high, of unburned brick, and built around one or more courtyards. The great things sought in Persia is seclusion and privacy. In walking through a street one sees nothing but these walls of houses, some fifteen or twenty feet high, with flat roofs, and with no windows whatever. They are covered with plaster to keep the brick from being worn away by the rain, and if kept in repair last for centuries. The monotony of the walls is relieved by mouldings and cornices. The entrance is a small door richly decorated with Saracenic work. The Persians have always been clever decorative architects. Persian architects built the Alhambra in Granada, and originated the Mogul architecture of India. And after going through a narrow winding passage, you suddenly step into a courtyard more or less magnificent, according to the wealth of the owner. Courtyards of two and three acres in extent are not uncommon, and some cover five acres. They are filled with parterres of flowers and trees of the most luxuriant foliage. Here and there are great tanks, some of them fifty yards long, with jets of water playing in them. Every householder in Teheran has his courtyard and tank of water, no matter how poor he is. Frequently there are three, or four courtyards, and there is one called the andaroon, into which no man ever enters except the master and his eunuchs. It is reserved for his wives and concubines. A wealthy Persian can have four wives and several concubines. These women drive out in carriages and visit one another, and are watched with the greatest care. The wives of poorer men go about on foot, but all alike are covered with a dark blue mantle, which falls to the feet, concealing the form. Over the face is a white veil, with apertures for the eyes.

The rooms have large windows set in richly decorated sashes and opening on the courtyards; frequently these windows are studded with colored glass, giving a cathedral effect to the high ceilinged rooms. All the rooms have dirt floors, but they are hardly noticed for they are covered with matting and rich rugs. In one part of the room there is a mattress covered with rugs, and on this the Persian sits during the day and sleeps at night. Some of the rooms have tanks in their centre, giving them an air of luxury. I often wonder why water is not used more in this way in other coutries It does not create dampness, as the climate in Persia is very dry. There is a separate room for the bath, and its appointments are often luxurious. Christians are obliged to have separate baths from the Mohammedans.

The Arabian's Pious Enterprise.

This is how a couple of enterprising Arabian confidence men in Egypt turned an honest penny. After filling up with hashish they "salt" some convenient spot with archæological remains, and retire behind a clump of palm trees until some perfidious dogs of christians come along. They come out and remark that Allah is great and that they are so full of divine influence that they are liable to go off at any moment. They don't go off however, but suddenly paw the earth where the remains are, this time remarking, "Mashalah." Pretty soon they find some remains which they say belong to they Holy Prophet, and are simply priceless. The Christian dogs, however, bid on them, thereby exciting the holy horror of the pious sons of the desert. But when they have reached a figure representing about a thousand times the value of the trumpery stuff in the ground, the Arabians give in, shed a few tears at the sacrilege, exact a promise of eternal secrecy, deliver the goods, bag the boodle, and ride away towards the rising sun.

An Advertiser's Novel Expedient.

One of the largest advertisers in New York says: We once hit upon a novel expedient for ascertaining over what area our advertisements were read. We published a couple of half-column "ads" in which we purposely misstated half a dozen historical facts. In less than a week we received between 300 and 400 letters from all parts of the country from people wishing to know why on earth we kept such a consummate fool who knew so little about American history. The letters kept pouring in for three or four weeks. It was one of the best paying "ads" we ever printed. But we did not repeat our experiment because the one I refer to served its purpose. Our letters came from schoolboys, girls, professors, clergymen, schoolteachers and in two instances from eminent men who have a world-wide reputation. I was more impressed with the value of advertising from those two advertisements than I should have been by volumes of theories.

HENRY M. STANLEY.

Explorer of Africa and the Congo Free State

The result of the recent conference of the powers at Berlin was the creation of the Congo Free State as a nation. This achievement in the progress of civilization is an outcome of the work done by Henry M. Stanley, the leading name in the honorable record of African travel, not only because of the extent and matchless difficulty of his explorations, which surpass that of all others, but of the practical statesmanship that has made the creation and political recognition of the young State possible.

But few, if any, persons have begun life under as unpromising conditions as he.

HE IS A WELSHMAN,

Born at Denbigh, in the year 1840, of parents who were abjectly poor. When 3 years of age, he was placed in the poorhouse, where he remained until he was 13 years of age. He then taught school and subsequently shipped as a cabin boy for New Orleans, where he was adopted by a merchant whose name he assumed instead of his own, which was Rowlands.

His adoptive father died without a will and Stanley was thrown upon his own resources. He enlisted in the Confederate army upon the breaking out of the civil war; was taken prisoner, and upon his release joined the United States navy and became acting ensign on an ironclad. In 1867 he was sent as a correspondont of the New York Herald to Abyssinia, and subsequently to Spain and other countries. In October, 1869, he was employed by the Herald

TO LEAD AN EXPEDITION INTO AFRICA,

To determine the fate of Livingstone, from whom only vague intimation had been heard for two years. He reached Zanzibar in June 1871, and toward the end of March set out for the interior with a company of 192 men. In November he found Livingstone near Lake Tanganyika, and furnished him with supplies for further explorations. He returned to England in July 1872, and was received with distinguished honors.

When the death of Livingstone was announced, Mr. Stanley was placed at

THE HEAD OF AN EXPEDITION

To Central Africa, the expense of which was shared by the New York Herald and the London Telegraph. He reached Lake Victori Nyanza in February, 1875, having lost by death or desertion, 194 of the 300 men with whom he started. In April he continued his explorations along the Congo or Livingstone River, the mouth of which he reached in August, 1877. Returning to Europe he was made a member of the various geographical societies. From 1879 to 1882 he was engaged at the instance of King Leopold of Belgium in the command of an expedition to the Congo. The expense was borne by subscribers of Belgium and other countries who formed themselves into a society which is known in history as the African International Association.

The basin of the Congo contains a length of 6,000 miles of navigable waters and a population computed to number 43,000,000. Its resources are of incalculable variety, extent, and value.

Summer Clothing.

Twenty, or even ten years ago, before the fashion of taking exercise in summer had set in, the smart young men of the cities put on as much white linen or cotton as their purse would allow. The poorest and most forlorn revelled in a waistcoat which used to be white early in the week. Those better off wore spotless waistcoats of the same material all the week, and if their means allowed it, added thereto white duck trousers, the real swells, however—the men who had nothing to do and did it, clothed themselves in white linen from head to foot in warm weather. The Southerners, who used in ante-bellum days to be the wonder and delight of Newport, Saratoga and Sharon, were particularly given to raiment of this sort, and in fact it was the mark of pecuniary ease combined with perfect leisure. Nobody who is anybody is ever seen in such attire now. The stiff linen has gone out; the soft woolen has come in. The men are, in short, all slimsy and squeezable as well as women. A suit of white flannel in summer, in the country at least, is the highest point in the matter of dress to which the ambition of the most restless dude carries him. It means not only disregard of expense but perfection, as regards comfort. But then the wearers of white flannel by no means monopolise the good results of the woolen revolution. All summer clothes are now in sense flannels. Of whatever color they may be, they are thin, porous and light to a degree which makes linen seem hot, heavy and cumbersome in comparison. It has been discovered, and the discovery will never be forgotten in any change of fashion, that wollen clothing, if thin enough is to the wearer very much what the Irishman's whiskey was both winter and summer. It keeps the heat in when it is cold and keeps the heat out when it is hot. It enables anybody to lounge on the grass or on the deck without getting rumpled or soiled, and to exercise into any amount of perspiration without getting chilled. In fact, a well-educated man, clothed in thin flannel from the skin out and free from any organic disease, is, in summer, one of the highest products of modern civilization.

Mrs. Kate Miller.

The women of Canada have been enthusiastic in their efforts to provide for the care and comfort of the volunteers engaged in the North-West campaign. On their way to the scene of the rebellion the troops have been greeted and feasted at many points by the ladies, and in almost every town and village in Canada there have been bands of women working together getting up comforts in the shape of warm clothing, dainty food and hospital necessities. One lady, not strictly a Canadian, but one who has been called the "Canadian Princess," the Princess Louise, has been prominent in this work in England. There have also been noble women who have taken the field with the troops. Mrs. Kate Miller was at Winnipeg, serving as head nurse in the General Hospital there, when the rebellion broke out. She immediately offered to take the field with the troops to act in the capacity of nurse. It is not an easy matter getting well-qualified nurses in haste for such work, and Mrs. Miller's offer was at once thankfully accepted. Mrs. Miller had been trained for over three years in the General Hospital in Montreal, and had had two years' experience as head of the staff of nurses at the Winnipeg Hospital, so she was appointed head nurse of the military hospital established at Saskatoon. The work must have been arduous, as over sixty men, many of them very badly wounded, were cared for in this hospital. Before her advent there the hospital rooms were somewhat cheerless places, and the home-like atmosphere which was brought to them by her and the nurses of the Sisterhood of St. John of Toronto, was thoroughly appreciated by the citizen soldiers. She was regarded by the wounded men as another Florence Nightingale. Mrs. Miller is a native of Glasgow, which she left twelve years ago for Canada. For such a responsible position Mrs. Miller is a very young woman, being but thirty-three years or age.

Hot Weather Diet.

Summer menus are much more difficult to arrange than others, as our systems demand cooling viands. There is nothing more acceptable than cold meats, such as cold roast lamb, cold roast squabs and chickens, and among cold vegetables, cold asparagus. These, if neatly arranged on the dishes and prettily garnished, if with nothing more than a few fruit blossoms, will please the eye and more easily tempt the palate. Salads are most acceptable. A liberal diet of fresh thoroughly ripe fruit is of the highest importance to most of us, but care must be exercised not to eat too heartily of it at any one meal. Vast quantities of liquids should be avoided when fruit has been eaten.

One should have a good sized ice-box, capable of holding a good supply of ice. It should be so arranged that milk, butter, etc., are separated from meats and vegetables. When huddled together they lose their identity, so far as their individual flavors are concerned, and become tainted with the flavor of one another. This is particularly true of milk and butter, which rapidly absorb impure or obnoxious flavors. Cleanliness is nowhere more important than in the ice-box, which should be thoroughly scrubbed at least twice a week.

Milk is a very important Summer diet, but should be used in moderation or it is liable to produce ill effects. Drink it in small mouthfuls and rest a moment between them. Dyspeptic persons are advised to beat the mill a few moments before drinking. This treatment breaks the butter globules and renders digestion easier. We strongly recommend skimmed milk and fresh buttermilk as summer drinks instead of ice water. The ice water dyspepsia, a common malady during the Summer months, may be entirely relieved by using small quantities of freshly churned buttermilk accompanied by what is known as a moderate dry diet.

Breakfast should not be a heavy meal and hot food should be used in moderation. Hot tea and coffee liberally partaken of prevent one from feeling comfortable all day. Radishes ice cold, oatmeal, crackers and milk, a dainty slice of cold lamb, fresh fruit and cold asparagus present a breakfast menu that makes hot weather a luxury.

STRANGE BUT TRUE.

Oil thrown into ponds and standing water will prevent musquitoes from hatching.

Chicago possesses a Chinese quarter which is honeycombed with subterranean galleries at a depth of thirty or forty feet from the surface.

Powdering the face seems to be as fashionable as ever in England, judging from the fact that in one year no less than 400,00 powder puffs were sold. To make these takes 7000 swan's skins to supply the down.

A peculiarity in workers in German silver spoons, is the color of the hair, which in time becomes died a pale green that requires years to change. The particles of metal—which is chiefly copper—also produce a disease similar to consumption.

An orange weighing a pound and a half, and measuring eighteen inches in circumference was presented to the Smithsonian Institute in Washington. It would, it is believed, have grown still larger had not it weight caused it to fall prematurely from the tree.

The Standard.

MARKDALE AUGUST 6, 1885.

THE NORTH-WEST TROUBLE.

Though the recent rebellion in the North-West has been suppressed, and peace restored, yet the danger of a repitition of similar trouble, is not removed, nor is the safety of white settlers in sparcely settled portions of the territories by any means assured.

There will always be danger of trouble between Indians and the white settlers so long as they are brought in to contact with the inevitable result of bad blood and hostile feeling which may at any time precipitate an Indian war. The Government should take warning and prevent the possibility of such an occurrence by collecting all the Indians in the North-West into one large reservation amply sufficient for their needs, and forbidding them to leave it. The mounted police force, even though increased to one thousand men, will be altogether inadequate to the task of watching the Indians, dispersed as they are on small reservations scattered through an immense extent of territory, whereas if they were massed in one locality a cordon of police stretched around it could be a comparatively easy matter. There is the gratest danger to white settlers of the Northwest in leaving the Indians as they are at present, with arms in their hands, living in the immediate neighborhood of the whites, and liable at any time to be tempted by hunger to raid cattle or plunder isolated farmhouses. The sooner we follow the sensible example of the United States and concentrate the Indians in a locality remote from the course of settlement, the better. It may prevent a great catastrophe, and would, in all events, be certain to give a sense of security from Indian outrages which would do much to hasten the advance of civilization in those regions.

CENTRE GREY FARMERS INSTITUTE.

In accordance with notice, a meeting was held in Markdale on Tuesday last to organize a Farmers' Institute for the Centre Riding of Grey. Thos. Gilray, Esq., Reeve of Euphrasia, who was appointed by the County Council to organize an Institute in this Electoral Division, took the chair and briefly stated the objects of the meeting. The attendance was not large, but nearly all present became members and the following officers were elected:—Thos. Gilray, President; Thos. Kells, Vice-President, A. Turner, Sec.-Treas. Directors—Dr. Sproule, M. P.; N. McColman' M. P. P.; Wm. Pringle and John Sparrow for Sullivan; Geo. Richardson and D. R. Ellis for Euphrasia; Wm. Norton and Thos. Sowerby for Holland; John Boland and J. A. Blakely for Artemesia; Wm. Guy and John Clinton for Osprey; and Wm. Hewgill and Arch. Campbell for Collingwood. Considerable discussion followed, on the benefits which might be expected, and would be gained by the agricultural community through such an organization. Farmers conventions will be held for the discussion of interesting topics, and it is understood the services of the professors of the Agricultural College will be available to deliver lectures once or twice a year at the conventions, the first of which will be held in Markdale on a date to be fixed by the directors in the fall or winter.

CONFLAGARATION IN TORONTO.

On Monday morning about half past twelve o'clock a fire broke out in the gluecose factory at the foot of Berkeley St. and swept along the water edge burning vessels, steamers, boat houses, factories and everything out of a breast for over half a mile. This was perhaps the most inflamable portion of the city, being nearly all old wooden buildings. The wind was high and the vast array of fire extinguishing appliances had little or no effect in staying the devouring element, the rain came in good time however, and by daylight the fire was under control. The loss is estimated at over $700,000.

RIEL'S VERDICT.

The trial of Riel has been short and decisive, and the evidence against him strong and to the point. The jury only required half an hour to consider the charge when they returned a verdict of guilty. The execution is to take place the 18th of September, and it is to be hoped it will be carried out.

REIL FOUND GUILTY OF TREASON-FELONY.

The 18th of September Named as the Day of Execution.

REGINA, Aug 1.—The jury in the Riel trial were out about thirty minutes. They returned a verdict of guilty. Judge Richardson, when he began his charge to the jury, confined himself chiefly to reading extracts from the evidence. He then reviewed the law upon which the court was established and the trial conducted. The charge was concluded at 2:15, and the jury retired. The oath was administered to the guard to keep the jury without meat or drink, fire or lodging. At 3.15 there was a murmur in the court, and it was whispered that the jury had agreed. All was bustle and excitement. Riel prayed fervently, kneeling in his box, and looked unmoved as the jury entered with a verdict of guilty. Francis Cosgreve, the foreman, while crying like a child, announced that he was asked by his fellow jurors to recommend the prisoner to the mercy of the crown, and the judge said the recommendation would be considered.

In answer to the question if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed on him, Riel addressed the court over an hour and said the verdict of guilty was a great advantage because it showed him to be not insane. He had a mission to fulfil and so long as he was looked upon as insane he could not do it. Now he would begin to succeed. One of his difficulties was beginning to disappear. He thanked the jury for the recommendation of mercy. It would be easy for him now to make an incendiary speech against the selection of the jury and the legality of the court, but he must take advantage of the situation to show himself responsible. He had a call from God to do something for the Northwest. His suffering would prove him to be a a prophet. He himself had suffered seventeen years, Riel fifteen, and he had two more years to suffer. The Saskatchewan troubles were only the continuation of the troubles of sixty-nine.

The Dominion government had sent delegates to treat with the rebels of sixty-nine and it was reasonable to expect that they would do the same in the Saskatchewan, and grant the rights of the halfbreeds now as then. He explained the plan of how he was going to invite the Irish, Jermans, Jews, Bavarians, Poles, Scandinavians, Italians, Belgians, Norwegians and Swedes to come and assist him, and give each a share in the Northwest and British Columbia. The condition of the Jews was they must acknowledge Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world. Gabriel Dumont and the Fenians were now active in his behalf in the States and their assistance was the last resort. He complained that Archbishop Tache and the ministers of the crown had broken the promise of an impartial amnesty in 1869. Dubuc had given him the name David as a souvenir in 1871. Archbishop Tache came and said his lower Canadian friends wanted him to leave the country because he would embarrass them during the election. He and Lepine got £400 from Archbishop Tache to go. He agreed only because his benefactor, Archbishop Tache, asked him to. After Sir Geo. Cartier was defeated in Quebec, Riel was asked to give up Provencher for him. Before the election in 1878 Sir John MacDonald sent an offer to him of $35,000 to leave the country, and if that was not enough how much would he take to cross the ocean? If he had the right to that money then, had he not the right to ask it last year? He declared himself the prophet of the new world, giving some rather comical instances in proof. He wanted a medical legal commission of doctors and lawyers to try him, not on account of the outbreak on the Saskatchewan alone, but on his whole career during the past fifteen years, and determine if the execution of Scott was a murder. He complained that the judge had charged all against him, but felt entire confidence that he would yet be spared to fulfil his mission. The voice told him that, Judge Richardson, before passing sentence, referred to the enormity of the prisoner's crime, and said he could hold out no hope whatever, but to prepare for the end. When the jury returned to court, Riel continued praying fervently until the verdict was given. He then rose without the slightes agitation apparent. This demeanor he maintained till the end, and a smile spread over his face as the judge pronounced sentence,

The 18th day of September was fixed as the day of execution.

It is not yet settled how the other halfbreed prisoners will be charged. It will probably be treason-felony, in order to obviate the necessity of serving an indictment ten days before trial. A majority of the prisoners will be charged with murder, although some may be indicted for treason-felony or levying war. The latter charge is not necessarily capital.

FROM OTTAWA.

OTTAWA, Aug. 2.—The French Canadian population here are greatly agitated over the news of Riels conviction and sentence. The general complaint is that the trial was unfairly conducted, and that evidence was suppressed by the Government. Petitions to the governor-general asking for a commutation of the sentence will at once be prepared.

The trial of Indians and halfbreeds who have been arrested on the same charge as Riel is now going on, twenty-two of the twenty-six have already plead guilty. Chief Wandering Spirit, who was captured a few days ago, stabbed himself and is reported dying.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

Priceville, 27th July, 1885.

SIR,—It may be interesting to Trustees and Teachers of Public Schools, to be informed through your paper, that the enclosed is a list of the appointments of the Legislative Grant for the current year to the several sections of the townships named. These amounts are payable by the several township treasurers, on presentation of the written orders of the trustees, verified in each case, by the corporate seal of the section. This new arrangement renders unnecessary the issue of any cheques by Inspectors.

2. The Public Schools Act of 1885 directs that teachers be paid quarterly, and authorizes trustees, whenever necessary, "to borrow on their promissory note, under the seal of the corporation, at interest not exceeding "eight per cent. per annum, such "moneys as may be required for that "purpose, until the taxes therefor are collected." (Section 40, sub. sec. 4).

3. Sub-section 6 further directs the trustees "to give notice in writing before the 15th day of January, in each "year, to the Inspector, and to the "Township Clerk of the township in "which their school is situated, of the "names and post-office addresses of "the several trustees then in office, "and of the teachers employed by "them, and to give reasonable notice "in writing, from time to time, of any "changes therein."

Copies of the new School Act, with full explanatory notes, by the Deputy Minister of Education, are now published by Copp, Clark & Co., Toronto. Price fifty cents each.

Yours truly,
W. FERGUSON,
P. S. I.

That Accounts for It.

One evening recently while wending our way down Mill Street towards Markdale station to meet the evening train, we halted where half a dozen or more were sitting in front of Askin's establishment, and enquired of an acquaintance if he would go for a walk to the station. He pulled out his watch, at the same time asking, what time is it?—3 minutes after 9. I looked at mine, which I knew was Toronto time, and found it precisely the same, when suddenly all the watches in the crowd were hauled out and not half a minute difference in the lot. This is something remarkable says I; when one of the crowd gave as a reason for the number of close timers, that they had been purchased from W. A. Brown, the reliable Markdale Jeweller. That accounts for it.

(From our correspondent.)

Major Sutherland and wife and Miss Ellerby, with several other members of the Gospel Army, have been out here for several Sabbaths past holding meetings in the church. Their efforts have met with good success, a large number having joined the Army. The Rev. Mr. Ayers also attends two evenings each week. The good work is still going on.

Haying operations were about wound up last week, and the crops have been saved in most excellent condition.

The rain on Monday came in good time, and was very much needed by the spring and root crops.

Fall wheat is about ripe and promises to be a most excellent sample.

Mr. J. Brodie and his two sons (Eldor and Sydney) have gone to visit friends in Brampton.

Mr. R. Douglas has venered his house with red brick.

Mr. W. J. Cooey, our mail man, has purchased a new sulky rake.

We have had several new additions to our population here lately. More to follow.

Kimberly.

From our own correspondent.

The Methodist church was dedicated last Sunday, under favorable circumstances. The weather was fine and the roads good, consequently there was a large turnout. The church was full at morning service, and in the evening a number had to remain outside. Rev. Mr. Howell, Chairman of the District, preached. He is certainly a credit to the church he belongs to, and would make a clever man in any calling in life.

Mr. A. T. Buchanan has rented his house to a gentleman from Charleston who intends starting store here.

The rain of Monday last was the heaviest of the season. It will be a great benefit to the late crops.

Miss Thomson has gone on a visit to Owen Sound.

DO NOT DELAY.

Do not delay, if suffering any from Bowel Complaint, however mild apparently may be the attack, but use Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is the old reliable cure for all forms of Summer Complaints that require prompt treatment. Ask your druggist and all dealers in patent medicines.

IS IT ACTING RIGHT?

If you are troubled with inactive Liver, your complexion will be sallow, frequent sick headache, aching shoulders, dizziness, weariness, irregular bowels, and many other serious complaints. Burdock Blood Bitters regulate the Liver and all the secretions to a healthy action.

Euphrasia Council.

The council met pursuant to adjournment on 25th July, 1885. Members all present. Minutes of last session of council read and confirmed.

Mr. Hurd was appointed to get a small bridge built on side-line 3 and con. 6.

Joseph Manary was appointed collector of rates in the whole of the township for the current year at a salary of $110.

The treasurer was ordered to remit to R. McKnight, Esq., county treasurer, the sum of $2.53, fees for searches.

The Reeve's orders were issued on the treasurer to pay as follows, viz:—James Arthurs, $8, plank for roads; J. Paterson, $31.48, printing voters' list and advertising; R. Dunlop, clerk, $25, preparing voters' list; G. Hill, $20.25, work on 6 and 7 side lines con. 9 and 10; G. Yeaddell, $1[illegible] covering crossway; H. Hurd, $6.[illegible] to pay for gravel and for labor on roads; W. Fawcett, $33.13, to [illegible] for work on roads; P. Harris, $[illegible] work on side line 6 and 7; Joseph Manary, $60, salary as collector of the 7 westerly concessions for 1885.

Council adjourned until the 1st Saturday in August next.

How to Keep Cool.

Don't work as hard as usual during the middle of the day if it can be escaped.

Don't eat as much as usual. Eat what is necessary, and a little fasting in hot weather always pays.

Don't drink extremely cold water. It is always better to eat ice or let it melt in the mouth.

Don't have any fires going in the house unless absolutely necessary. Use cold foods and do without drinks.

Don't wear your clothes tight. It impedes the already depressed circulation and is a great source of discomfort.

Don't eat any meat or butter, if you can do without them. They are heating and anyone is better without them in hot weather.

Don't fail at meals to give preference to fruits and acids, which are agreeable now to the stomach than anything else that can be offered.

Don't drink any strong stimulants. Use the simplest and plainest beverages such as lemonade, milk, or iced coffee. They are more for the tired energies at such times than the best brandy.

Don't worry and fret. Try and put the unpleasant things with which you have to deal until cooler weather. Don't make up your mind not to get excited at anything.

Don't neglect your feet. Bathe them night and morning, pay more attention than usual to corns, and wear the oldest and roomiest shoes you have. No one can keep cool with tight shoes on their feet.

Don't miss any opportunity that you may get to bathe or go in the water. If nothing else can be done dip the hands in a basin of water and rub it all over the person on arising and before retiring.

Don't wear a stiff hat. Compromise on something light or soft—straw, if possible—and ventilated above to let the hot air. Frequent shampooing and wetting the top of the head is an effective means of keeping cool.

The discovery of the instantaneous process of taking photographs has been quickly followed in the medical would by a perfect instantaneous remedy for all acute pains and pains; as Neuralgia, Toothache, Rheumatism, etc. This valuable remedy is called Fluid Lightning, and is sold at 25 cts. a bottle by Hill Bro's. 2

Reception Number of the War News.

The Grip Printing & Publishing Co. have issued their Reception Number of the Illustrated War News. This number is one of unusual interest. It contains sixteen pages, and the illustrations are entirely composed of scenes in connection with the return of the Volunteers from the North-West. The Publishers sent special artists to Winnipeg and other principal points to report and illustrate the proceedings, and have gone to considerable expense in getting authentic sketches of the various demonstrations all over the Dominion.

A racy account of the incidents and experiences of the troops returning home is written by Captain C. W. Allan, who accompanied some of them from Port Arthur, and it is illustrated by J. W. Bengough in his best style.

This number is, in every respect, the best which has yet been issued, and is worthy of being sent away to friends all over the world, as a representation of the reception tendered our returning heroes.

We understand there has been already an enormous demand for this issue, and the publishers have had great difficulty in filling orders. Certainly everybody who appreciates the work done by our brave volunteers should have a copy.

The publishers will mail copies post paid to any address on receipt of the price, 15cts., or it can be obtained from all newsdealers. The Toronto News Co. are the wholesale agents.

Rev. J. G. Fallis, Dutton, certifies: "For some years my wife has been troubled with Dyspepsia, and has tried one thing after another recommended but with little or no effect till advise to give McGregor's Speedy Cure a trial. Since taking the first bottle I have noticed a decided improvement, and can with confidence recommend it to be one of, if not the best medicine extant for Dyspepsia. This invaluable medicine for Liver Complaint, Indigestion, Kidney Complaint, is purely vegetable. Sold at Hill Bro's. Trial bottles given free. 2

GRAND TRIP.

THE THIRD ANNUAL GRAND

EXCURSION,

Of the Shelburne Lodge Ancient Order of

UNITED WORKMEN,

WILL BE GIVEN TO

Owen Sound

—AND—

WIARTON,

—ON—

TUESDAY,

AUGUST 11th, 1885.

This charming outing will be made via C. P. R. to Owen Sound, whence the New, Fast and Staunch

STEAMER PACIFIC,

Commanded by Captain Campbell,

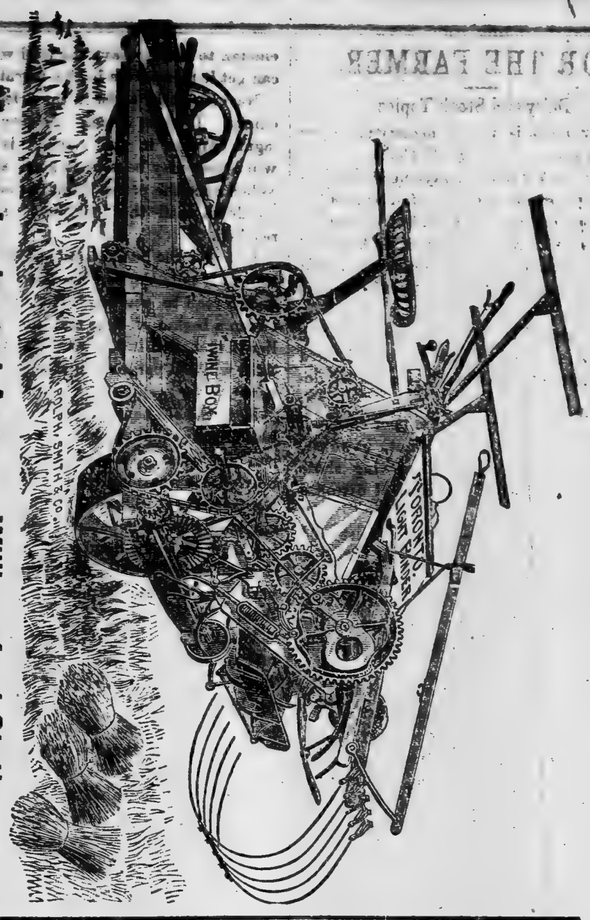
One thousand tons burthen will convey excursionists to Wiarton, the most northerly station of the G. T. Railway. This is a very PICTURESQUE run, passing the Griffith, Hay and Cloud Islands, and up the pretty inlet of Colpoy's Bay.

THE CITIZENS' OWN

BRASS BAND,

Of OWEN SOUND, and Prof. Knags' Quadrille Band have been engaged to accompany the pleasure party, so that abundance of high class music will enliven the trip.

Fast trains, well equipped, will leave Orangeville at 6:30 a. m., Orangeville Junction 6:45, Laurel 6:55, Crombies 7:05, Shelburne 7:35, Melancthon 7:37, Corbetton 7:47, Dundalk 7:55, Proton 8:10, Flesherton 8:25, Markdale 8:40, Berkeley 8:55, Williamsford 9:05, Arnott 9.20, Chatsworth 9:25, Rockford 9:40, arriving in Owen Sound at 10. The steamer will leave her wharf at 10:30, arriving at Wiarton at 1 p.m., where a stay of some two hours and a half will be made: and an opportunity will be afforded the Excursionists and others of witnessing A GRAND LACROSSE MATCH between the Shelburne and Wiarton clubs. The steamer will arrive in Owen Sound, upon the return trip, about 6 o'clock p. m., and two hours will then be allowed Excursionists to visit this hospitable Town. The special train will depart upon the homeward journey at 8 o'clock.



TICKETS for round trip have been place at the following nominal sums to suit the times:—From Orangeville to Laurel inclusive, only $1.50; Crombies to Markdale $1.25; Berkeley to Rockford $1; Children under 12 years of age half price. Special inducements.—By the kindness of the C. P. R. those who wish to remain in Owen Sound can return by any of the regular trains next day, upon exchanging tickets at the Owen Sound depot and paying the trifling sum of 30 cents extra. Tickets can be obtained at the Statons and from Members of the Committee on board the Trains. In Shelburne Tickets may be had from I F. BELFRY. MEALS served on the Steamer at 25 cents. The Committee feel gratified at the great success of their former Excursions, and are confident the trip they now present the public will prove the cheapest and most enjoyable Entertainment ever offered. All the appointments are strictly First-Class. So come along and bring your friends, for this is a rare opportunity, and should not be let slip.

FOR THE FARMER

Dairy and Stock Topics.

Salt for stock is not a necessity. Here may be a saving.—Col. F. D. Curtis.

A New York dairyman says he is convinced that every bushel of windfall apples fed to his cows was worth a pound of cheese.

Cows should not be heated up by being hurried, excited by bad usage, etc., and should have a shade from the extreme heat of the sun.

A beef animal is like an apple—first the green stage; second the ripe stage, and third the over-ripe stage—when it begins to deteriorate.

Good pigs never come from poor care and poor feed. Good care does not, however, necessarily imply gorging a growing shote with rich food until it is a mass of diseased fat.

Give to the cows none but the best and purest food. With no other stock is this so essential, for the reason that it has been fully demonstrated by competent authority that milk is a very prolific source of transmitting disease germs from impure food, and especially from impure waters.

In selecting a dairy cow see that she has a good bag. This is where she carries her milk, and if small, she can not carry much. Never buy a cow with teats an inch long; let some one else have her, and get one with teats that the hand can grasp. This is a very important point in the make-up of a dairy cow.

To make a gentle milker, a calf should be trained from the time it is two months old. It should be rubbed and stroked and petted. Its teats and udder should be handled frequently from the beginning. Thus, when the animal is ready to become a cow, it will be familiar with the motions of milking.

A correspondent of the London Live Stock Journal has been looking up ancient milk records, and finds among the laws of a Welsh king, Howel Dda, made as early as the tenth century, that prices were fixed for the current value of certain animals. For any defect or blemish of any animal at the time of sale, reparation and restitution must be made by the seller.

No wooden utensil should be used in milking or in setting milk. Wood absorbs the milk into its pores, and when the pail is scalded, this milk becomes coagulated, ferments and decomposes, and will surely injure the milk, by infecting it with leaven of putridity. Tin pails and pans should first be washed with cold water, then with hot water and soap to remove the grease, then rinsed, and finally scalded with boiling hot water, wiped with clean dry towels, and afterwards placed out of doors to air in sunshine.

The straw from beans is a natural food for sheep, and they are the only stock which are fond of it. It is a healthy food for them. Oat straw is better for sheep than any unpalatable hay. They will pick out all of the leaves and heads of all kinds of straw, but they do not like the coarse straws, and will not eat them unless forced to by hunger. Straw, to be good for sheep, should not be over-ripe, musty, or full of orgot. On this account rye is the poorest, and wheat next. To give sheep a keen appetite, no more should be given them than they will eat up clean. They come to a sweet smelling and fresh rack of food with a relish.

A flock of sheep, says the Rural Canadian, "should double themselves each year, and early lambs will sell for quite as much as the sheep cost in the first place, thus leaving the parent stock and wool to the good. In fact, sheep breeding is one of the best paying branches of mixed farming, especially in this country, with its dry climate and rich pastures. There is no country in the world where sheep thrive so well, are so free from disease, and attain such perfection, as in Canada. Those farmers who are neglecting this important industry are standing in their own light, and those who have kept their flocks by careful breeding have never done so well as during the past few years."

Shying or dodging horses are made so generally by impaired eyesight which gives them an imperfect view of objects, and they do not recognize ordinary things and are frightened by them; whereas, if they could see well they would not shy. Poor eyesight may be caused by over-heating, over-drawing and by wolf-teeth. For the first there should be cooling diet, such as grass, carrots, and bran mashes, together with laxative medicine, glauber salts being the best, fed daily with the mashes, one-fourth pound, until the animal gives evidence, by the brightness of its coat and general appearance that its blood has become purified and the fever is out of it. When this condition is reached the eyesight will be improved and perhaps restored. Over-loading horses is both stupid and wicked, and strains the nerves of the eyes, for which the only remedy is to wash the eyes two or three times daily with a mild extract of witch hazel, or some good eye-water. When this straining is severe nothing will cure it, and the horse usually becomes blind.

Poultry Points.

Sell all products of the poultry yard as soon as they are ready for market.

Feed the poultry just before it goes to roost, and again just as soon as it is light enough to see, or leave the feed where they can get it themselves in the morning.

Never wait for a rise in the price of young chicks. It never comes. As soon as asparagus appears in the market, is the time when they may be sold to good advantage. When once the prices begin to decline, they go down until the "old hen" standard is reached.

Love for the business and faithful attention to it puts the poultry raiser a long way on the road to success. The difference between a basket of eggs and no eggs at all lies in that, and in the result of the fidelity with which a person will attend to the business.

Keep the old hen cooped, but let the coop be so located that the chicks can have a long run on grass or in a garden. They will kill myriads of small insects, to their own and the farmer's good, and do no harm. Young chickens should be petted a little, by feeding them from the hand and otherwise, so they will remain tame. This will ease the work and add to the pleasure of caring for them very much.

Want of cleanliness is one of the most common causes of failure in poultry keeping. The houses should be cleaned daily, or semi-weekly at the longest. Sweep, whitewash and use carbolic acid often enough to keep floor clean, and the roosts and nests free from lice. Nest eggs made of calcined plaster, wet up with water in which are a few drops of carbolic acid, are excellent for keeping lice away from the nests.

Keep the chickens growing now, and feed as if they were laying fowl. Now is the time to force them along if it is desired to have them lay early. A little extra feed and care during the first three months will do more good to make them good winter layers than any patent poultry food can do after Thanksgiving. If breeding thoroughbred fowl, they should be separated from other breeds at three months old, and better at six weeks if Leghorns or game are with them.

Early maturity is an important factor in a pullet, and hence it is now too late to secure them early. The best course to pursue is to make up the time by crossing with cocks from the early maturing breeds The best cock for this purpose is a Leghorn. Pullets from a Leghorn cock and ordinary common hens will lay when six months old, and consequently if the pullets are hatched in June they will lay in December if the winter does not come in too soon.

Geese should not be plucked until the goslings are all hatched and able to take care of themselves. The geese may be plucked twice—once in July and once in November, as they will have nothing to do after this month in the way of laying or sitting. It should be remembered that the renewal of the feathers is a great drain on the system, and the geese should be well fed, and given a warm, dry place at night until they are fully feathered again.

Eggs may be packed in salt for winter use. Coal ashes, plaster, well-dried oats or corn, and even dust may be used, but salt is the best. Dry processes are more convenient than liquid methods, and the later they are preserved the better. The chief point to be observed, however, is to frequently turn the eggs, and keep the boxes in a cool place.

Under domestication fowls require nutritious food, with a little seasoning once in a while, to give relish. Any simple condiment like ginger, or pepper, is stimulating and helps to make them thrifty, but they should not be fed on such quantity as would cause undue action in the system, but merely to "tone up." If fowls are fed in this way there is no reason to expect they will keep in good condition and make themselves valuable to their keepers.

The Sea Captain and the "Fiery Untamed."

A good story is told of an old sea captain who keeps a little hotel in a northern village on the sea shore celebrated for its sands. His wife was very anxious to have a horse, an animal in which the old man took but little interest, but the old lady finally won her point, and got her horse. The steed was of a playful disposition, and used, on the least provocation, to tear madly along the shore, and succeeded in "spilling" the old lady several times. At last the captain, who had never driven the animal, volunteered to break him off his vicious habit; so, getting another old "salt" to aid him, he procured a kedge anchor with a stout line attached. Fastening the end of the line around the axle, and putting the anchor into the phaeton, the "fiery untamed" was harnessed, and the two men started for a drive along the shore. Soon the vicious animal spied something which gave him an excuse to run away, and immediately dashed off with frightful vivacity. The captain dropped the reins, and summoned all hands to let go the "anchor." The anchor was let go, and caught firmly in the sand. The unsuspecting quadruped pranced joyously along until he got to the end of the rope, and then he paused—paused so suddenly that the phaeton was demolished and the two men shot up into the air like a couple of sky-rockets, coming down in a fearfully dilapidated condition.

Let him who neglects to raise the fallen fear lest when he falls, no one will stretch out his hand to save him.

Are the Indians Dying Out?

There are really no facts to justify the conclusion that the red races of America are destined to meet the extermination that is befalling the Polynesian tribes of the Pacific Ocean. Those Indians who are living under favorable conditions are not only holding there own but are growing in number. The Cherokees of the Indian territory, who in 1809 numbered 12,395 souls, have already doubled. Many other Indians who have abandoned migratory life, quit the war path, and exist by agriculture instead of by the chase are either stationary or are increasing.

There are some circumstances that encourage incorrect notions with regard to the diminution of certian tribes. The thousand or so Indians in New York, for instance, are but a sorry ramnant of the great Iroquois confederation which two hundred years ago is believed to have numbered 25,000 souls. It must be remembered, however, that when the compact between the Six Nations was brokon after the Revolutionary war, many hundreds of them emigrated north. Seven thousand of the Oneidas, Cayugas, and Mohawks, whose ancestors lived in the beautiful Mohawk valley and around the lakes of western New York, now dwell in Canada, and are slowly increasing in number. Many other decendants of the broken Iroquois tribes are tillers of the soil in Wisconsin. This dispersion of Indian tribes among the whites or into new territories accounts for a part of the decrease in numbers that has often been attributed to mortality.

"Our statistics," said the Canadian Indian Commissioners in 1858, "militate strongly against the theory of a steady decline in the number of Indians." A report upon the education of the Indians published in this city in 1877 remarked: "The Indians in general are not diminishing in number. They are, in all probability, destined to form a durable element of our population."

Another cause that has led to exaggerated notions of the rapid dying out of Indian tribes is the fact that if an Indian woman becomes the wife of a white man, the chances are that she and her descendants are never included in the unsatisfactory statistics of our Indian population. Half breeds figure to a large extent in the census returns as white people. In classing them with the imported race the census collector prefigures the fate that is overtaking many of the red tribes of America. It is not that they are becoming wiped off the face of the earth, but that, hemmed in on all sides by Europeans, with no chance to recruit their numbers from without, they are gradually being absorbed by the white race around them.

Thirty years ago there were more Indians than white people within twenty miles of St. Paul and Minneapolis. Many Indian agents, trappers, soldiers, and some farmers had Indian women for wives. Among the half breeds and quarter breeds of Minnesota to-day are many well educated and highly respected people, graduates of the best schools in the West, a few of those fathers gave their names to counties in the States, were its Territorial Governors, or helped form its State Constitution. They are not classed as Dakotas, but as white people, and each succeeding generation exhibits fewer indications of Indian origin. There is abundant proof that the intermixture of the races, from the St. Lawrence to the Rocky Mountains, has not entailed upon the red men any physical or intellectual deterioration.

The handful of Onondagas living near Syracuse have doubtless deteriorated in mental and physical stamina, owing chiefly to their frequent intermarriages. Their cousins, however, the Mohawks and Oneidas of western Canada, among whom there remains hardly an Indian of unmixed blood, are increasing in numbers and advancing in civilization. Nearly half of the Cherokees, the chief nation of the Indian Territory, are half breeds. Prof. Daniel Wilson, of Toronto, who has collected a great deal of information about the Indian races, says that in some of the Canadian bands not a single pure blood Indian remains The wild Indians, who longest roamed our western plains and maintained their tribal organizations intact, have by no means maintained the racial purity of their fathers. Mr. Lewis H. Morgan, who has devoted much study to the Indians, estimates that the Dakotas, Chippewas, and Potowatomies have taken up enough white blood in the last two centuries to lighten the color of their entire tribes from one-sixth to one-forth.

To the ethnologist the most interesting product of this intermixture of races thus far has been the 12,000 half breeds of the Red River Settlements in Manitoba, who to a large extent have kept themselves distinct in their habits and social relations both from Indians and whites. The sons of French and Scotch fathers, they surpass in physique and endurance any of the native races, and present the phenomenon nowhere else seen of a distinct half breed tribe, the tendency among other Anglo-American hybrids being, as time goes on, to draw nearer in blood and allegiance to the whites.

The main facts with regard to the Indian, then, appear to be that, under circumstances which the hardiest white races could hardly survive, he is rapidly dying out; that under conditions which enable the whites to thrive he is increasing and prospering in a lesser degree; and that in the course of time he is destined to disappear as the native race of America, not through extermination, but by absorption into the overwhelming mass.

MECHANICAL ITEMS.

A good-sized whale will produce two tons of whalebone if treated like a gentleman.

A machine has been invented which wraps up oranges in tissue paper more neatly and rapidly than it can be done by hand.

Hard maple placed on end is from four to five times as durable as maple, and equally as durable as the hardest baked tile. End-wood flooring can be produced with as finely finished surface as that made on the side of the grain.

An ordinary looking cane of very peculiar construction has been invented by a Madrid man. It contains a complete set of topographical and telegraphic instruments, a heliograph and a lantern. It is intended for the use of engineers in the army service.

Impermeable floors are now regarded as indispensable in houses constructed on hygienic principles. They must be so treated that the wood cannot absorb moisture; rough places must be made smooth, and such cracks or depressions as give rise to the smallest accumulations of dust are not permissible.

A vegetable leather, said to be fully equal to the animal product, is made in Paris from gutta percha, sulphur, raw cotton, zinc white, kolkothar, and oxide of antimony. The first two ingredients are necessary, while the other parts may be replaced by chemicals of similar character. The proportions are varied with the purposes.

An English paper suggests that "if a man wants a carriage or implement photographed so as to make a working copy to scale, all that is necessary is, when the photo is being taken, that a clear and distinct three foot rule be placed on the carriage; this is photographed along with the carriage, and no matter what the size of the print or negative, will always be a true scale. It enlarges and diminishes in exactly the same proportion as the carriage.

In certain French steel works a workman in cutting fifteen-inch files uses a hammer weighing seven and seven-tenths pounds and wears out a handle of holly wood in about one year, after having struck about 11,250,000 blows with the hammer. In cutting triangular files about five inches long, and in metal somewhat softer than the above, the hammer used weighs two and two-tenths pounds and the holly handle lasts about two years, and has been used in striking 25,440,000 blows. This is another instance of the constant, but long continued, drooping that is said to wear away stones.

A correspondent of a mechanical paper says: "I have had great trouble in procuring a small loose pulley that would stand running at a high rate of speed with a very tight belt. After trying a large number of different kinds of wood and iron, with long and short bearings, bushings of babbitt, copper, etc., none of which would stand more than two months, I at last procured some sole-leather; I put the flat surfaces together, and bolted through with four bolts; after boring and turning, I soaked it well in oil and put in place. It has now been running about one year, and is still apparently as good as new. It requires very little oil.

An iron ore boulder that had been on exhibition for some time in the Louisiana Department of the Exposition at New Orleans, was smelted the other day at a foundry in that city after being broken up. The lump, which weighed about 350 lbs., was picked up on the surface of the ground in Clairborne Parish in the northwestern section of the State, and in a county that appears to have been upheaved by volcanic action. Upon being reduced the specimen referred to yielded about 50 per cent. of pure metallic iron, report say, free from sulphur. As the supply of the ore is practically inexhaustible, Louisiana, it seems, will soon be ranked among the iron producing States.

A Question of Time.

The little woman was at the seaside and would have enjoyed herself but for the heartrending letters she received each morning from her husband. "My darling," was the burden of his cry, "I am miserable without you, and the house is so wretched and lonely." And she believed these letters, and after a more than usually miserable one, packed up and came back to town without a word. Full of pleasure at the joyful surprise she was going to give her sorrowing spouse, she drove up to the house and entered the door. She found the disconsolate one at the head of a big table, surrounded by the mixedest party that had ever set foot in that establishment, and singing out at the top of his voice. She sought her bed aweary and tearfully. And then her husband stood beside her. "You brute," she hissed, "to say you are miserable." "My dear," he remarked, as he swayed to and fro, "you forget. I always write to you in the morning when I am miserable. To-morrow, when all this 'n died out, I shall be so miserable that, that you'll be sorry you came back.'

BUFFALO OR BEAR.

A Remarkable Hunt and Its More Remarkable Ending.

"Speaking of buffalo," said Mr. R. Cl[illegible], jr., a well-known Colorado cattle [illegible], "the last herd I ever saw was a small one, consisting of less than twenty head, while my brother Frank and I encountered near Powder River, W. T., in the Fall of 18[illegible]. We were out prospecting for a good cattle range, and came upon the bisons near a wooded bluff, close to river. Leaving our buckboard and four horses tied to a tree, we started after the noble game, quickly selecting a fine-looking bull, which we cut out of the herd and chased on foot as well as we could. Owing to the rough character of the ground, my brother and I soon became separated. Frank going on one side of a hill and I on the other, losing sight of each other for a few minutes. When I emerged on the other side I witnessed a strange transformation. The pursued had become the pursuer. My brother was running like a quarter horse, while the bull, with lowered horns, was rapidly closing up the gap between them. The situation looked critical, and I made the most haste possible to render what assistance I could to my fleeing brother. Before I could approach near enough to get a shot at the shaggy pursuer, Frank suddenly disappeared in the mouth of a large cave with the buffalo following a good second. Their disappearance lasted but for a few minutes. Just as I got opposite the cave the frightened beast emerged, and with a loud bellow plunged for the creek beyond, and, what, was the most wonderful, Frank was seated on the back of the buffalo, with both hands enmeshed in his shaggy hair holding on as for dear life, with blanched face and eyes starting from their sockets. The mad plunges of the beast, accompanied by its terrific roars, were perfectly frightful. Passing down the bank, it plunged into the stream, partly waded and partly swam across, then, rushing up the bank on the opposite side, through a clump of scrub oaks and willows, succeeded in dislodging and landing him, bruised and bleeding, in the underbrush. Making my way to him as soon as possible, I relieved him of his awkward predicament and assisted him to rise.

"As soon as he recovered himself sufficiently to speak he asked me for some brandy. Having a flask with me, I gave him some and he revived considerably. 'That was a close shave,' he gasped as he renewed his attentions to the flask. 'What was it?' I asked. 'Well, you see after I got separated from you at the hill I took a short cut through a ravine, thinking to head off the buffalo and got a good shot. I succeeded in heading him off, but instead of getting a shot at him he turned upon me suddenly, and, fearing his horns, I ran along the edge of the bank, and seeing the mouth of the cave, dashed in, with the bull close behind me, I had proceeded but a few yards, however, before I saw before me what seemed to be two balls of fire, and was greeted with a horrible sound, which was a cross between a growl and a roar. I became suddenly aware that I was facing a huge cinnamon bear, which, to my excited imagination was a thousand times more terrible than the pursuing buffalo. Turning to go back I found my recent enemy blocking my way of egress, and in the agony of the moment chose the desperate alternative of mounting upon his back, my only thought being to escape from the bear. No sooner had I alighted on the beast than he turned swiftly and rushed out of the cave frightened, if anything, more than I was myself. You know the rest. I don't want another such experience, I can tell you.'

"We went back to our wagon and camped for the night, returning next morning to the cave, where we concealed ourselves and waited some hours, until finally the bear came out of his hiding place. Seeing us, he made a desperate plunge toward the spot where we stood. I fired at him from my Winchester, wounding him in the [illegible]. The shot seemed to anger him more, and it was not until I had nearly emptied a magazine of my rifle that he finally fell. Several shots from my brother's rifle finished him. We drove the wagon as near to the carcase as possible, loaded it on the vehicle with some difficulty, and took it to the nearest town. The bear weighed [illegible] pounds and was one of the largest that had been killed in that portion of the country.

Ingrafting Negro Skin.

Dr Bryant in his work on surgery [illegible] a case where he ingrafted negro skin on a white man, and the grafts grew with such success that the man's leg, when cured, was half white and half black. It is not [illegible] whether the black skin had any effect [illegible] sequently changing the white skin of [illegible] portions of the patient's body, but the result cannot be considered an [illegible] because the black pigment (negrum mentum) of the negro's skin must have been injected into the patient's body. It can change the colour of their hair [illegible] due warts, pimples, and muddy complexion by the simple remedies of the modern [illegible] it would be highly derogatory to the [illegible] of surgery to deny its power to [illegible] white to a black skin.

Life's Journey.

As we speed out of youth's sunny station,
The track seems to shine in the light:
But it suddenly shoots over chasms,
And sinks into tunnels of night:
And the hearts that were brave in the morning
Are filled with repinings and fears,
As they pause at the City of Sorrow,
Or pass through the Valley of Tears.

But the path for this perilous railway
The hand of the Master has made;
With all its discomforts and dangers,
We need not be sad or afraid.
Roads leading from dark into darkness,
Roads plunging from gloom to despair,
Wind out thro' the tunnels of midnight
To the fields that are blooming and fair.

Tho' the rocks and their shadows surround us,
Tho' we catch not one gleam of the day,
Above us fair cities are laughing
And dipping white feet in some bay
And always—eternal—forever,—
Down over the walls in the west,
The last final end of our journey,
There lies the great Station of Rest.

'Tis the grand central point of all railways;
All roads cluster here where they end:
'Tis the final resort of all tourists;
All rival lines meet here and blend.
All tickets, or mile-books, or passes,
If stolen, or begged for or bought,
On whatever road or division,
Will bring you at last to this spot.

If you pause at the City of Trouble,
Or wait in the Valley of Tears,
Be patient—the train will move onward,
And sweep down the track of the years.
Wherever the place is you seek for,
Whatever your aim or your quest,
You will come at the last with rejoicing
To the beautiful Station of Rest.

STORM AND SUNSHINE.

And this would be no small sacrifice on my part; the future holds great possibilities for little fair-haired Lisle Warburton. When I am of age I shall come into upwards of two thousand a year—even now I have two hundred to do what I like with—more pretty dresses and furs than I can find any use for, trinkets and laces without end. My aunts receive three hundred a year for my maintenance; I might have a maid of my own if they had not absurdly decided that it was better to make me attend upon myself.

All this wealth had come to me most unexpectedly about ten years ago, my mother's last surviving brother having died in Australia very rich, and I being the sole descendant of the Incledon family then extant. I was a child at school near London at the time; but on my accession to fortune my guardians or trustees had transferred me to a much more expensive school abroad, given me an allowance, and one of them, who had been a friend of my uncle's, had had me to his house in Paris during the vacations. My aunt, Mrs. Tom Incledon, the widow of another of my mother's brothers, had hitherto taken charge of me; but she had died a few months previously, and I suppose I should have come to live at Osierbrook if this fortune had not turned up in the meantime. So that, however my aunts may try to keep me in subjection now, the day is not very far distant when I shall be a person of some importance.

They do not care whether I even "come out" or not, whether I am presented at Court, or have any of the advantages which my brilliant "prospects" might have led me to expect; in fact, I believe they would be much better pleased if I renounced the world altogether, and made up my mind to spend the rest of my life at Osierbrook; but I am only biding my time. I am young and rich, and "pretty," as old Mollie says. The name of Lisle Warburton shall make a sensation yet in the great world of fashion which my aunts think only a little less hopelessly given over to perdition than the lower regions themselves!

"Erroll, this is my little friend, Lisle Warburton."

I have just come into the great drawing-room at Velfry, with a faint click clack of high-heeled shoes, and a soft frou-frou of my silken train. I have put on one of my prettiest dinner-gowns—a pale blue silk, which leaves my arms and shoulders bare; and I have fastened a broad band of tuberoses round my throat. I feel I am looking my best, with my fluffy golden locks curling about my forehead, and a soft bright colour in my cheeks. People tell me my face is like a kitten's face—so fair and innocent, with such a broad space between the eyes.

Of course I am no judge of my own appearance, and people may flatter me a little—the girls I know used to flatter me at school; but I think I am pretty, and I know my arms are white and dimpled, and that my dress fits me to perfection. Therefore I do not feel at all indisposed when Mrs. Rutherfurd introduces me to a tall and very handsome fair-haired man in evening-dress who had been standing with her in the window when I came in, nor at all surprised when he opens his gray eyes in a look of unfeigned admiration.

"Mother, where did you find this Dresden shepherdess? I did not think anything so material could be made of real flesh and blood!"

"I am sure Lisle is quite real enough to be very hungry," Mrs. Rutherfurd smiles sweetly; "so, if you will give her your arm, Erroll, I will follow you into the dining-room."

This first evening at Velfry gives me a delightful foretaste of the triumphs I had promised myself when I should go out into the fashionable world of which I had heard and read, but of which I had hitherto seen nothing. I believe Erroll Rutherfurd fell in love with me at first sight, and I know that before I go up to my room at eleven o'clock I have lost as much of my heart as it was possible to lose in the space of four hours. I feel happier than I ever felt in my life before. I begin dimly to comprehend the great possibilities the world holds for me, to dream of what that wonderful thing called love may mean.

I have never even fancied that I cared for any one yet except Judith Irving; but it sends a little thrill of something more than pleasure through my heart already to think of Erroll Rutherfurd, to recollect how he had looked at me, how he had spoken to me—not as to a child, but as to a woman, gently, reverently, chivalrously—I had never been so spoken to before in all my short existence—to be treated like a princess by this man who himself seems like a prince. It is as novel as it is delightful, and has already gone a good way towards turning my little head.

The next day we spend the delightful first hour after breakfast in the sunny old garden—Erroll and I; he smoking, I walking beside him down the long green alleys, and by the high wall where the cherries are ripening, in my pretty morning-dress of pale flowered chintz with pink bows, in which he says I look more like a china shepherdess than ever, while the bees hum round us and the warm wind sighs by, laden with those "fitful blasts of balm that make the air of life delicious"—or so the Laureate says.

"Do you remember Judith Irving, Mr. Rutherfurd?"

"Oh, yes—quite well!" he smiles, glancing round at me.

"She told me you had been playfellows as children."

"So we were. But I did not think she took sufficient interest in me even to tell you so much as that."

"I don't know how much interest she takes in you," I answer, laughing; "but I know you ought to feel flattered by her taking the trouble to speak about you at all."

"I feel much more flattered by your remembering what she said."

"Do not you like her?" I ask, looking up into the handsome smiling face.

"Do you?"

"Indeed I do—better than any one else in the world!"

He smiles at my earnestness.

"Then I must not say anything against her?"

"Not to me, certainly! But I don't believe you could say anything against her. The things people say of her are all false!"

"What do they say of her?" he asks a little curiously.

"I am not going to tell you. I don't know what they are saying. But stupid people who can't understand her talk a great deal of nonsense—the fact is she is too bright and clever for them, and sees too clearly through their miserable make-believes and hypocrisies. She is like a flash of electric light turned suddenly on a ball-room, showing up all the wretched shams and pretenses which had passed muster in the deceptive rose-coloured glow of the oil-lamps!"

"Bravo, Miss Lisle! I wish I had a friend to stand up for me like that!"

"Judith does not want anyone to stand up for her," I answer, flushing. "And she does not care a fig what ignorant, stupid prejudiced old people think of her; she has told me so a hundred times."

"I must renew my acquaintance with this friend of yours," Erroll laughs, knocking the ash off his cigar. "She must be something out of the common to have won such a warm little partisan."

"I wish Mrs. Rutherfurd would ask her to Velfry!" I exclaim impetuously. "If she took her up a little, my aunts—and other people—could soon follow her example."

"Miss Irving used to come here occasionally before I went to China. Does she never come now?"

"She has never been here since I came to Osierbrook, at all events."

"You might persuade my mother to ask her perhaps. She would do a great deal to please you."

"She is very good to me," I answer, smiling. "But I wonder why she never asks Judith here now?"

"I will tell you what I think," Erroll returns gravely. "I fancy my mother had an idea that Miss Irving was setting her cap at my brother Ralph—at least I thought so before I went to China three years ago. And, as I suppose you are aware that no mother ever thinks any girl good enough for her son, my respected parent discouraged Miss Judith's visits to Velfry. That at least is the only solution I can find for the enigma. I never asked my mother any questions on the subject, nor did she vouchsafe any information. But I think it was very probably just as I say."

Erroll Rutherfurd's name to me," I say, intensely surprised.

But I cannot deny the probability of there being some foundation for Erroll's suspicion. Judith had said she would rather live here, dull as it is, than anywhere else in the world. She also seems like a person who has a secret—who cares for, or has cared for, somebody very much. But then Mr. Rutherfurd had married before she was grown up, and had been confessedly heartbroken as a widower ever since.

I am surprised at Judith's throwing her heart away upon a man who apparently neither desired nor deserved it. And yet she is just the kind of girl who would be capable of such an act of self-immolation—of just such a mad, vain, foolish, obstinate, unfortunate, peace-destroying passion—of just such a hopeless love.

"Shall we have a game of tennis?" Erroll asks a moment later, throwing away his cigar. We saunter round to the tennis-court between the double row of walnut-trees, and while I am waiting for Erroll to fetch the racquets Mrs. Rutherfurd comes out of the house, followed by a rather slight, dark-complexioned man with a short gray beard.

"This is my eldest son, Lisle," she says, smiling gravely; and Mr. Rutherfurd shakes hands with me, and then stands quietly by with his hands in his pockets, while his mother talks to me, looking away at the old sun-dial on the grass-plot before the door.

CHAPTER IV.

The next few days at Velfry are the happiest I have ever known. Even now—

"My heart is like a prophet to my heart,
And tells me I shall love."

Erroll Rutherfurd is always with me—we ride, row, play tennis, walk together; the long June days are all too short for us—the June days with their glorious mornings, their long delicious afternoons, their dreamy evenings.

Even at night I lie awake thinking of him and going over and over again all the fond sweet things he had said to me during the day. The liking that we had felt for each other on that very first evening has deepened into a warmer feeling—we are never happy unless we are together, never satisfied unless we are looking at or listening to each other.

Mrs. Rutherfurd is pleased at the fancy Erroll and I have taken to each other. She never tells me, but I can see it in the happy contented expression of her eyes when she looks at us; I know she arranges the amusements of each day with but one aim in view—that Erroll and I shall enjoy them together.

Mr. Rutherfurd very seldom joins us, or takes part in any entertainment that may be going on at Velfry. I see him at breakfast and dinner, and occasionally in the drawing-room after dinner, but seldom at any other time. He appears to be a grave, reserved kind of man, and, whether he is still fretting for his young wife, or whether such things possess no interest for him, eschews our boating and tennis parties with a persistence which amuses his younger brother.

"Ralph is turning into a regular oddity!" he laughs, on one of these occasions. "I think we must ask Miss Irving to Velfry to rouse him out of his apathy."

"I wish we could," I answer, sighing. I have not seen Judith for six days, and, notwithstanding my new delicious sense of happiness, I pine for a glimpse of my friend.

"Next time you come, we must manage it," Erroll says good-naturedly.

We are following the rest of the party down through the pleasure-grounds to the river, Erroll in white flannel boating costume, I in a pretty serge dress turned up with my favorite light blue. We are going to row ourselves down to an island where there are the ruins of an old abbey; the servants have gone before with our luncheon. It is a glorious morning, "the cuckoo tells his name to all the hills."

"I believe you would rather have Miss Irving here than me, Lisle!" Erroll says, in his boyish, aggrieved way, turning to look at me as we walk down the mossy path under the yews and laurels.

"I have known her the longest," I answer coquettishly, without meeting his eyes.

"But that has nothing to do with it. I have known Miss Irving longer than I have known you, and does that make me like her better?"

"Perhaps you do like her better!"

"Lisle!" I smile, but will not look at him, though I know he is looking at me, "You are the most horrid little girl I ever met!"

"I am sorry you think so."

"But I don't think so, fortunately. I think you are the dearest——"

A couple ahead of us stop to ask something about the way. Erroll never finishes his sentence; but

"A word can bring the colour to my cheek;
A word can fill my eyes with happy dew."

Erroll loves me and I love him. The thought makes me intolerably happy—so happy that I hear and see everything like one in a dream—the laughter, the blue sky, the broad shining river, the happy faces, the crowded boat, the green island, with its hoary ruin standing up fair and solemn against the faint blue of the summer sky. Whenever I can do so unobserved by the others, I steal a glance at Erroll. He looks so handsome in his white dress, with his gay sunburnt face and fair curled hair hanging about his forehead as he pulls the heavy boat—bareheaded, his sleeves rolled up to his elbows, his blue eyes laughing at me.

An hour or two later I find myself sitting beside him on the edge of the stream where it runs narrowly between the mainland and the island, brown and foaming over lichened rocks and boulders. As we sit, we can see up a long vista of leaf-shaded pools, with shafts of sunshine glimmering down through the branches and piercing golden through the water—the sound of the water is all the sound we hear, if indeed we hear it, being so entirely occupied with looking at each other.

"We looked on the broom bank,
We looked on the burn,
And sidelong we looked on Each other in turn."

"I wonder if you are as happy as I am, Lisle?"

"I am happy enough," I answer with truth.

"You are a dear little thing to say so!"

"Why?"—"Oh, because——"

He is lying, face downwards, pulling daisies one by one out of the soft turf.

"That is no reason!" I laugh, looking at the rushing golden-brown water close to my foot.

"I wonder if you care for me as much as I care for you!"

He is throwing a daisy into the water as he says it, and he does not look at me.

"That depends entirely upon how much you care for me!" I laugh, watching the daisy as it is caught in an eddy and whirled round and round between two of the brown boulders.

"Have you ever cared for anybody else, Lisle?"—"No."

"Perhaps you do not really care for me so much as you think?"

"Very likely not."

"You provoking little thing!" he laughs raising himself on his elbow. "I believe you are thinking of Judith Irving this very moment."

"I imagine you think of her more than I do," I answer a little jealously.

"I? I hate her!"

"You just say that to vex me."

"I do not want to vex you; but I do not like you to be always thinking of that girl.

"I often reproach myself for not thinking of her more. I have been so happy at Velfry."

"Have you, darling?" he interrupts, with a look which sends a thrill of passionate pleasure to my very heart.

"How many questions you ask!" I laugh, shrugging my shoulders.

"I mean to ask you another before very long," he smiles quietly.

"I think I hear somebody calling us!" I exclaim a little hurriedly. "Perhaps we had better go back to the others."

"I suppose it is that wretched Trevor!" he laughs, getting up lazily. "That fellow is always spoiling the fun for other people—I suppose because he can't knock up any for himself."

We saunter back to the others, or to all that are forthcoming of the others, camped in a sunny hollow under the ruins. And I feel happier than ever, find more than ever inclined to look upon it all as a dream from which I must some time awaken—such passionate happiness cannot be meant to last! But, if it does last, how can people call this a miserable world? One such hour as this, I think, could make my whole life sweet.

We finish the evening with a dance at Velfry, at which Mr. Rutherfurd puts in an appearance, though he does not dance. I do not think I shall ever forget this night, or the waltzes they play; the perfume of heliotrope must always remind me of it—I wear a knot of heliotrope in my white dress, fastened on the shoulder—that and the string of pearls round my throat my only ornaments.

Erroll dances with me very often—one especially glorious waltz we have together, and when it is over we step out with the others through the open French windows on to the long terrace of smooth turf overlooking the garden. The air is warm and full of the perfume of the flowers, the moon is rising serenely over the woodland, touching the house and garden with a silvery glimmer, but scarcely bright enough to discern "who is who" of the shadowy groups about the terrace—certainly not bright enough to reveal us to any one but each other as we lean over the stone balcony listening to the music and breathing in long draughts of the delicious night air.

"Lisle darling. I think you love me a little?"

His arms are round me, his face stooped to mine, pale in the light of the moon.

"Lisle, tell me. Is it true?"

I let him hold me so, close to his heart. I stand there for a moment, dumb

"With perfect joy, perplexed for utterance."

But he makes me say it at last. And so we linger in the moonlight a little longer, murmuring, "I know not what of strange and sweet," and exchanging

"Vows, where there is never need of vows,
And kisses, where the heart on one wild leap Hangs tranced from all pulsation, as above
The heavens, between their faky fleeces pale, Saw all their expanse quite with fleeting stars."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

THE BOOK OF GOD.

The bible is the best book in the world.—John Adams.

There is a book worth all other books which were ever printed.—Patrick Henry.

The bible furnishes the only fitting vehicle to express the thoughts that overwhelm us when contemplating the stellar universe.—O. M. Mitchell.

The grand old book of God still stands, and this old earth, the more its leaves are turned over and pondered, the more it will sustain and illustrate the sacred word.—Prof. Dana.

All human discoveries seem to be made only for the purpose of confirming more and more strongly the truths contained in the sacred scriptures.—Sir John Herschel.

In my investigation of natural science, I have always found that whenever I can meet with anything in the bible on my subjects, it always affords me a firm platform on which to stand.—Lieut Maury.

So great is my veneration for the bible that the earlier my children begin to read it the more confident will be my hopes that they will prove useful citizens to their country, and respectable members of society.—John Q. Adams.

It is impossible to govern the world without God. He must be worse than an infidel that lacks faith, and more than wicked that has not gratitude enough to acknowledge his obligation.—George Washington.

If the God of love is most appropriately worshiped in the temple of religion, the God of nature may be equally honored in the temple of science. Even from its lofty minarets the philosopher may summon the faithful to prayer, and the priest and sage exchange altars without the compromise of faith or knowledge.—Sir David Brewster.

The Decay of Profanity.

From having been the loudest and coarsest of swearers, English gentlemen have become the most intolerant of profane expressions, and even the mildest expletives are accounted by them as bad taste. Soldiers and sailors formerly looked upon swearing as a professional necessity, and perhaps still do so; but probably a man like Wolseley shares the feeling of other English gentlemen with respect to profanity, and we know that Grant went through all the excitement of the civil war without an oath, though on both sides the air was often blue with cursing. But, as we have said, most men swear habitually or occasionally. It seems to give them relief, or they imagine that it does, and they know no other way of strengthening an assertion than by using an oath. In general, this swearing is in good nature, or, at most, expresses only momentary vexation, and often the profanity is only indulged in as a banter, for instance, by the drivers in the streets, who will curse each other up and down, and still have no hard feelings. They simply swear for fun and to vary the monotony of existence. This applies only to this country though. In England one can mount upon a 'bus at the Kensington Museum, and drive through the great and crowded thoroughfares of London, all the way to the Bank of England, and not an oath nor an expletive will be heard.

Religion and Flies.

"I would give nothing for that man's religion whose dog and cat are not the better for it," said Rowland Hill. Unity adds: "Why not add one's flies? Shall we kill them—or take a moment longer, open the window, and banish them into the great outside summer? The difference is no trifle either to the flies or us. To the flies it is the difference between life and death. To us it is the difference of our religion and irreligion. It isn't our religion which will dash from life the harmless buzzers; their crime, a little annoyance their penalty; death. 'Do you want to see 'oor Dod, 'ittle fly?' said the 3-year-old, who held her captive in one hand, while she raised the other: 'Oo n'all see 'oor Dod—there!' and down came the hand, slapping it out of existence. That God we call a devil, and we pity the little child whose home-creed taught it deviltry for divinity. But if that sort of thought would make God a devil, that sort of act in us is not religion.

The White Feather.

It is well known that the phrase, "To show the white feather," is a synonym for cowardice, and it is said that no gamecock has a white feather. This expression must formerly have had a different meaning, as it arose during the war between the early settlers and the North American Indians. A Quaker, who refused to fly for safety, on day saw a band of Indians swooping down upon his home. As the tenets of his faith would not allow him to receive them with a volley of powder and ball, he invited them in, and set food before them. The good, hearty meal so softened the savage heart that, on leaving, the chief fastened a white feather on the door as a badge of friendship and peace. Although after this many savage bands passed that dwelling, none ever violated the treaty by injuring the house or its inmates.

Old age is a tyrant that forbids the pleasures of youth on pain of death.

NEW WHEAT.—On Tuesday, August 6th, Mr. Thos. Ellis, of Euphrasia, brought the first grist of new wheat this season to Plewes' mill; the wheat weighed 64 lbs. to the bushel and was a fine sample.

THE Scott Act convention held in Owen Sound recently decided to make a third attempt to secure signatures to the petition and to have the vote come off after harvest, so that the Act can come in force next May.

MR. T. WILLISCROFT, Williamsford Station, is doing a good trade in agricultural implements; those within reach of him who require anything in that line should see him, as he handles first-class machinery and is a reliable man to deal with.

THERE are two things which the wise man never tries to do. The first is to shave himself with the razor which his wife uses upon her corns, and the second is to convince her that a razor is not improved by being sharpened on a butcher's steel.

FATAL COLLISION.—A fatal accident occurred on the C. V. R. at Streetsville on the 5th inst. Two freight trains collided with fearful force. The cars was piled up on top of each other and smashed. Conductor Murty was killed and six others seriously injured.

WHAT every person says must be true.—They say that J. R. Trimble has the largest, best and cheapest stock of Ready-made Clothing and finest Tweeds of any merchant doing business in the County. Don't you buy one dollar's worth until you have seen my stock.

THE wife of James Welsh, a watchman on one of the Michigan Central car ferries, gave birth to triplets at Amherstburg 31st ult., and on the following morning still another addition was made to the family. All four of the infants died. Mrs. Welsh is 38 years old.

GEN. MIDDLETON is in luck—he has not only $20,000 from the Dominion Parliament, but has also got promotion, Although he held the local rank of Major General here, he was only a Colonel; but now he has been promoted to the rank of Major General in the Imperial army.

BEAR SHOT.—At Mr. Jas. Lunney, of Griffin's Corner, early this week took a shot at a large bear in a berry patch. The ball from the rifle struck bruin in the side and keeled him over, but unfortunately he got away into the thicket where it was impossible to trace him.—Review.

OUR Brass Band appeared in full force on the streets last Thursday and Friday evening playing a number of tunes which was highly appreciated by the citizens. We understand it is their intention to give a sernade on the streets every Saturday night. They look immense in their new caps and torches.

GARDEN PARTY.—The Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian church will hold their annual garden party in the Agricultural grounds on Friday evening, 21st inst. Refreshments will be provided for the occasion. The Markdale Brass Band will be in attendance. Admission 15 cents. Come and spend a pleasant evening.

Sandy Mitchell, who was stabbed by Allen Bowie on the 20 ult., has just passed along the brink of the valley of death, and is scarcely yet out of the shadow of that dark passage. During the past week he has bled profusely, but with skilful attendance on the part of the surgeons and good nursing he may recover.—Chatsworth News.

WE have space on our list for 199 new subscribers, and in order to have it filled we make the following startling offer, viz: The balance of the year 1885 for 25 cents. This offer is only to cash-in-advance subscribers. Send one or three cent stamps for change. Now then, be alive and secure forty cents worth for a quarter. Be sure and send your name.

FIRE AT ALLISTON.—The Alliston cheese factory was burned on Saturday last. The building was owned by the Driving Park Association, and was worth $1500; insured in the Western for $600. There was about $1800 worth of cheese in the building, which was insured in the Western for $1000. The other contents of the factory were worth about $1000, insured in the Royal for $500. Nothing was saved.—Shelburne Free Press.

THE Flesherton Advance comes to hand now in its reduced size, which is quite large enough for any country paper. Several others have signified their intention of doing likewise, while nearly all in the County as well as several outside, have spoken favorably of the idea. We have the matter under consideration, and may in the near future adopt the wise course; if so, the improvements otherwise will, we trust, fully make up for the small decrease in size.

A FEW weeks ago, we noticed in the STANDARD that our esteemed citizen, Mr. J. R. Anderson, had an invitation to take part in a program in Toronto at an entertainment to be given in the Elm Street Methodist Church in honor of the returning Volunteers who belonged to the congregation. We have since learned from one who was there that there were over two thousand present on the above occasion and that Mr. Anderson's renderings of "Rule Britannia" and "The March of the Cameron Men" were applauded in a most entusiastic manner, our noted vocalist being encored in both instances.

THE BUSY BURGLAR AGAIN.—During Mr. Wm. Currie's absence from town last week burglars broke into his residence, by prying open one of the windows, and ransacked all the rooms in the house. On his return Mr. Currie found the pockets of the garments he left at home turned inside out, but as he had taken the precaution of putting all his money in the bank the thieves failed to find any booty. Two horse blankets were found spread out on the hay in the stable loft where the miscreants had evidently taken a sleep. This case together with the attempt to burgalize Dr. Cotton's residence last week proves that there are bad characters in the neighborhood and would be well if our citizens took every precaution to ensure the safety of their effects.—Mt. Forest Representative.

WHY WILL YOU cough when Shiloh's Cure will give immediate relief. Price 10 cts., 50 cts., and $1. Sold by A. Turner & Co. x

MR. HARRY WHITBY is home spending his holidays.

MR. MATTHEW IRVING, of Manitowaning, arrived on Monday last.

WE were pleased to meet Mr. John Trelford in Allenford last Tuesday; also Mrs. Cipher.

TWENTY-EIGHT thousand Russian infantry and 16,000 cavalry are now in trans-Caspian territory.

THE New York World has completed its task of raising $100,000 for the pedestal of the Bartholdi statute.

THE shingles provided for the new Methodist Church are supplied by Mr. John Weber, and are the best we have seen from any quarter.

WE regret not having time to call at the Echo while in Wiarton Tuesday, having only ten minutes to catch the train for Allenford.

THE Loyal Orange Brotherhood demand an investigation into the alleged persecution of Protestant soldiers by Col. Ouimet.

REMEMBER the lawn party in the agricultural grounds on 21st inst., by the Ladies Aid of Presbyterian church. The Band will be in attendance. No pains have been spared to make it a success.

THE London Society for the Suppression of Vice has employed detectives to shadow every member of the House of Commons and report the places visited by them. The members are naturally furious, but are powerless to resent the more than implied insult.

H. B. HARRISON, of the Owen Sound Marble Works, leaves that town per S. S. Campana for Port Arthur on Friday evening with a large consignment of monuments and tombstones. He takes one monument at a cost of $1,000. It is St. George granite, stands twenty feet high, and one block weighs 5,500 lbs. Mr. Harrison's output for this season has averaged $500 per week.

THE Mail winds up an absurdly optimistic article on the state of the country by remarking that we have come out of the ordeal of financial depression "poorer than we were in booms and bladders and bubbles, but rich in experience." Oh, yes, we have a perfect welth of experience. Had our contemporary in mind, we wonder, the family story about the two business partners, one of whom contributed the money and the other the experience. The country is a good deal in the position of the former when the connection was dissolved, we have the "experience," and the syndicate monopolists, salary grabbers and government favorites have the money.—News.

A. O. U. W. EXCURSION.—The excursion to Owen Sound and Wiarton last Tuesday under the auspices of the Shelburne lodge of Ancient Order of United Workmen was a grand success. About seven hundred went on the trip, over fifty getting on at Markdale. The whole trip was pleasant and very enjoyable, especially that part of it from Owen Sound to Wiarton. The water was very smooth and weather lovely. The Citizens' Band of Owen Sound accompanied the excursion from the latter place, and discoursed selections of music along the way. A game of lacrosse was played at Wiarton between the team of that place and Shelburne team; the latter won the game. The committee of the excursion did all in their power to make things generally enjoyable, and were eminently successful.

A TALK ON HEALTH

FRUIT.

We approach the nearest to a perfect physical development when we rely most upon those goods which nature provides for us. Certainly, in regard to fruits, there need be nothing added to make them either more palatable or nutritious. From the ripe, juicy strawberry in the spring, to the rosy peach and purple grape of the fall, we have a constant succession of various kinds of fruits, which are among the most healthful of food substances.

One of the most essential characteristics which make fruit so valuable during the hot summer months is its lightness. If fruit is ripe, and eaten while fresh, there is nothing about it as far as composition is concerned, that will disagree or disturb the most delicate stomach. Of course this statement would not hold true if one had eaten too much, or at the same time eaten heartily of substances which are known to be of a very different class of chemical constituents. It is therefore important that fruit should always be eaten alone, or at least as a dessert to one of the lightest meals. Too much stress cannot be laid upon the importance of procuring fruit in its proper and best condition. With domestic fruits this is more easily accomplished than with foreign, or those coming long distances from the South.

Fruit culture should be encouraged, and thus made more of a food than has been the custom in former years. It is in the interest of the house-wife to use fruit largely during hot weather. Strawberries, blueberries, blackberries and raspberries each in their turn, should be found upon our tables. These, with a few slices of bread and a glass of fresh milk, will make a most substantial and easily prepared meal.

The chemistry of berries deserves a passing notice. One of the most important constituents of this variety of fruit is certain kinds of acids, nearly all of which are necessary to carry on the natural process of digestion, and which are not always supplied by the stomach and other digestive organs. The presence of these acids in the stomach has a stimulating effect which is of special importance at this season of the year. A deficiency of a proper amount of stimulant action of the liver will cause the condition commonly known as "biliousness." The acid contained in fruits is a much better correction of this affection than medicine.

Another advantage to be derived from the use of fruits during the summer months is in their percentage of water. By their liberal use the bowels and pores of the skin are kept open, and thus they are better able to perform their natural functions than when dry and heat-producing substances are used. We need the medicinal action of the pure fruit acids in our system, and also the cooling corrective influence of the watery portion which they contain.

Preference should always be given to the soft, juicy, stoneless kinds of fruits; also the skin of certain fruits, if tough, should not be eaten. Fruit should largely be substituted for pastry, certainly during that portion of the year when it can be obtained fresh and ripe. As a matter of expense also it is on the side of economy. But it is very foolish to buy decayed or partially unripe fruit because it can be obtained cheap. Fruit should also be eaten leisurely; never in a hurry, and it should be thoroughly masticated before it is swallowed. As regards to cooking fruit before eating it, a word is in place. With many of our common fruits, cooking destroys the acids which they contain. This has a tendency to make them insipid, and consequently sugar must be added in order to make them palatable. Now if the fruit is ripe and in perfect condition there is enough acid and sugar in proper porportion so that cooking is unnecessary. If additional sugar is desired it is solely as a condiment, and not because it requires it. It is related of a distinguished physician that he once made the remark that "if his patients would make it a rule to eat a couple of good oranges before breakfast from February to June, his practice would be gone." While such a statement can hardly be taken literally, yet there can be no doubt that the more general use of good ripe fruit in the early part of the day would be found beneficial, and often prevent many cases of illness.

Reading Well.

There is no accomplishment which is to fascinating as the power of reading well; is is a pleasing, although much neglected accomplishment. No music hath such a charm as good reading; and where one person will be charmed by music, twenty will be fascinated by good reading; and where one person can be a good musician, twenty can be good readers. It seems to bring back the old authors, and to cause us to imagine ourselves sitting down and talking familiarly with them. What is more charming or interesting than the plays of Shakespeare, when delivered in a full, clear, distinct and well modulated voice? There is no accomplishment which causes more pleasure in the family or social circle, the invalid's chamber, the hospital, the nursery, than good reading.

Fugitive Wealth.

There has never been, as far as we know, a more remarkable instance of a tangible and yet a fugitive wealth than of the fortune that evaded the grasp of the relative of a friend of the writer. He was, many years ago, at school at Harrow, and returning along the road by the bathing place—to Harrovains "ducker"—politely went to the assistance of a stout farmer on horseback in difficulties with a gate lock. He opened the gate and held it back for the rider to pass. "Thank you, my boy," said the farmer, one of the wealthy Middlesex graziers who own large tracts of the Harrow and Pinner rich meadow lands. "What may your name be?" "My name's Green," returned the boy, with an ill-timed burst of the imagination. "And what is your father?" "Oh, my father's a cheese-monger," said the smart scholar, chuckling internally at his ready wit, "and he lives in London in the Theobald's road, rather a small shop, two steps down out of the street." "I'm very much obliged to you," replied the farmer, by no means—as it afterwards appeared—a man of straw. "You're a capital young chap. I shan't forget you." "Don't!" was the scholar's final thrust "Remember Green, and a Cheesemonger in Theobald's road." And up the hill he went, almost as much pleased with himself as if he had been asked to play against Eton at Lord's. What his feelings may have been when, 10 years later, a young gentleman of the name of Green was advertised for, whose father kept a cheesemonger's shop in the Theobald's road, and who, in return for politely opening a gate at Harrow in the year 183—, was left a large legacy by the wealthy farmer, recently deceased—what his feelings were then none of his relatives cared to inquire too closely, but it was observed by all that from that hour the unhappy young man never lost an opportunity of insisting on the incalculable blessings of the most rigid adherence to truth; of the disasters invariably incident to even a momentary deviation from which virtue he himself was a most marked and melancholy example. For neither was his name Green nor anything approaching it, nor had his father, a quiet country gentleman, ever, even in the remotest fashion, been interested in cheese; indeed, as his son has been heard pathetically to remark, in the smallest amounts it invariably disagreed with him.

A Morbid Imagination Cured.

In reference to the influence of the imagination on the body a doctor tells the following story: "A big hulking fellow about ten miles from the town I was practicing in got the idea that he was going to die at just 11 o'clock in the forenoon of a certain day. About 9 o'clock a messenger came to me. I hurried out. When I got there the crank had fifteen minutes to live, according to his calculations. He did look like a man on the verge of eternity. His eyes were dim and sunken, his face had that peculiar pallor which heralds the near approach of death, and his breathing was very labored. The family were gathered around and weeping as they took a final leave. Something had to be done quick. There was a smart-looking woman there, and I called her aside. Pointing to the clock on the mantlepiece, which the patient was watching, I said: 'When I have his attention, turn that ahead.' Then I crowded into the family group, bustled them into the next room, sat down on the edge of the bed and began telling that fellow one of the most horrible murder stories you ever heard. I located it right in town where he knew everybody, named the woman killed, went into blood-curdling details, and so completely interested the man that he forgot his eleven o'clock appointment. When I gave him a chance to look again it was twenty minutes to twelve, and he was actually mad for a time, claiming he had been tricked. He finally got to laughing, and we all took dinner together. The next day he whipped two men at a barn-raising for twitting him about the programme of death that miscarried."

A REPENTANT ATHEIST.

Acknowledges His Error and is Praised by the Pope.

The Garibaldi branch of the anti-clerical league met in Paris for the purpose of expelling Joyaud, alias Taxil, the penitent freethinker and atheist, who has recently recanted and published his return to the church. To the amazement of the meeting Taxil presented himself before the assembly and made a defiant speech. He declared that his publication called "Amours of Pope Pius the Ninth," and other similar pamphlets, were mere fictions. He denounced the league in vehement language, and said that he accepted his expulsion from that body with pleasure. A great uproar ensued upon the conclusion of Taxil's remarks, and the chairman ordered Taxil to leave the hall. He left amid the furious denunciations of his former colleagues. The Pope has written to Taxil, approving his action and encouraging him in his new allegiance to the Holy See. Taxil was one of the chief promoters of the recent anti-clerical congress at Rome, and has always taken a prominent part in the demonstrations against the Roman Catholic Church. His wife declares that he is insane.

ROUND THE WORLD.

Interesting Items from all Parts of the World.

The great Jew residental quarter of London now is a part of St. John's Wood, where many have spacious mansions and gardens.

Miss Blanche Williams, colored, who has matriculated at Toronto University, is said to have passed an excellent examination in French and German as well as in English.

A prominent physician suggests to occupants of summer houses that a wood fire in the evening, when the moisture in the atmosphere is excessive, prevents many cases of sickness.

A woman carried enough blueberries to a store in Salisbury, N. H., one day last week to buy a barrel of flour and other supplies. They are bought by weight, fifty pounds to the bushel.

Lord Lyons, who tendered his resignation as Minister at Paris on the retirement of the Gladstone Ministry, has consented to remain at his post until June of next year, when he will retire.

An extraordinary instance of the depreciation in the value of land in England is noted by the London World. In 1875 Pewit Island, near Harwich, containing 270 acres of freehold land, was bought at a cost of £7,900; and on July 16 it was sold by auction for £420,

The burglar season has commenced in London with the approach of the annual out-of-towning, and all the suburban police have been ordered to arm themselves with revolvers. During the last few months they have been taking lessons in the art of bringing down burglars.

A bottle sealed and corked and containing a check on a Newburyport bank for $141.16 was found in the surf at Coffin's Beach, Mass., one day last week. With the check, which was signed and dated Aug. 17, 1884, was a note, stating that the finder of the bottle might have its contents.

The flag of the Chicago Socialists is red and black, signifying destruction, and some of the devices carried in a recent procession were "Every Government is a Conspiracy Against the People," "The greatest Crime To-day is Poverty," "Down with the Throne, the Altar, and the Moneybag."

In view of the fact that Dartmoor Prison, in England, offers profitable employment for convicts for years to come, many more are to be sent for. Meanwhile "that unfortunate nobleman," the claimant, so long the principal and certainly the most ponderous figure there, has lapsed into complete obscurity.

Vanity Fair, alluding to the prevalent distress in England, says that at Newmarket lately thirteen of Mr. Chaplin's yearlings only averaged 1,630 guineas each, and some of the more fashionably bred animals only 3,000 guineas apiece, one handsome filly being disposed of at the rate of but a guinea an ounce. Appalling, indeed!

The present population of the city of Buenos Ayres is estimated at 400,000. One of the local newspapers predicts that in a few years it will be the New York in a southern hemisphere. Emigrants are arriving in a steady stream, and if the proportion of the first six months of the year is kept up, their number will be 150,000 before the 1st of Janrary next. Italians form the great majority of the incomers.

Alaska, according to a newspaper correspondent, is a sort of fairy land in summer. The almost continuous light of day shines upon bright green slopes, varied here and there by dark timber belts, rising up from the deep blue waters. An endless variety of bright-hued flowers, the hum of insects and melodious song of birds make the land seem almost a second Eden, but the intensity of the sun's heat dispels any hasty impressions of this sort.

Mr. G. A. Sala is known by his white waistcoat. "I have worn a white waistcoat," he says, "every day, winter and summer, for five and twenty years. Once, in Paris, at a shop where I used to buy my gloves, a serving woman said to me: 'You always wear a white waistcoat.' 'Yes; I always wear one the year round.' 'All the year round?' she exclaimed. 'A clean one every day?' 'Yes,' I said. 'Oh,' she exclaimed, 'if I had only been your washerwoman!'"

The London Echo draws attention to the difference between the peerage and the aristocracy, a difference suggested by the recent creation of peers. It points to several untitled magnates who are essentially members of the aristocracy, and remarks, on the other hand, that such a man as Lord Cairns, although a member of the peerage, is not a member of the aristocracy, a distinction often lost sight of. One or two of the new peers are even quite unknown to persons moving in what is called "high life."

In the gardens of a well-known nobleman's country seat in the south of Ireland painted boards were set up in different parts of the pleasure grounds, with this request, "Please do not pull any flowers without leave." Recently the district practical joker passed that way, and at daybreak added an "s" to the last word on all the boards, which had the effect of making things pleasant—until the cause was discovered—for tourists and strange visitors who cherished a latent passion for floral gems.

[Of] all the beautiful creations [of] the noble and heroic form[s] [(of] many) which we have learne[d], there are two which stand [exemp]les of courage and heroism [whose] [po]etic histories are in no way [simila]r, save as both serve as mo[dels of] self-forgetfulness. They [are Tom Pinc]h and Sydney Carton. Poor [o]adbare, gentle Tom Pinch! [the t]houghtless and ill natured, th[e jo]k of the young ladies and the [butt] of his employer himself; the[re] were, on whom were heaped t[he] [ot]her's selfishness and all the insults which cruelty and [could su]gest. And yet his heart is [so] from guile, that he suspect[s no] [othe]rs; but rather sees all men [in the] light of his own lofty ideal. [The] sincerest martyrs have been c[ruc]ible crosses, burned by invisi[ble fires], it sometimes costs more to [do a sim]ple act of self-denial than to ach[ieve a vic]tory in honor of which the t[rumpet] has resounded. "The greate[st battles are] fought on the battle-field of th[e heart]" the hero who like Tom Pinch [overcomes] his enemies by the force of a p[ure] an example of unselfish devoti[on], [prais]ed by those whose tests are [deed]s of daring and acts of physical [courage]. Pinch is not unhappy—far from [it; he consi]ders himself the most favored of [men. D]oes he not enjoy the patronage [of Pecksniff] himself, and has he not the opp[ortunity of h]earing the pearls of wisdom w[hich fall from] that worthy gentleman's lip[s? And] there is always the organ in the [chur]ch where he can sit and play [him]self when Mr. Pecksniff does not [need his s]ervices. But who can describe [the grie]f of that gentle, trusting heart, [when to]ld that the man whom he h[ad been ac]customed to reverence and respect [and h]as taken as his model of a[n ho]norable and upright, is a scound[rel and a sn]eak. "The star of Tom's who[le] boyhood had become in a mome[nt a v]apor. It was not that Pecksniff, [Tom's Pec]ksniff, had ceased to exist, but t[hat he neve]r had existed." His soul rises [in stron]g revolt with which the right m[ind will] meet the wrong; but this terrible [blow to hi]s faith in humanity in no wise tar[nishes his o]wn character. He lives on, as [u]nselfishly as ever, crushing out o[f sight his d]earest hopes, that no shadow of a [trouble may] touch the happiness of his friend[s. It is pl]easant to think of him, honored a[nd loved,] in his sister's home, where young [lips whis]per loving words in his ear, and g[entle hand]s minister to his wants.

[Sy]dney Carton is a man of a diff[erent stam]p. There is nothing particularly ro[mantic a]bout him, and his appearance is u[ntidy], even slovenly. We see him in [the court] room of the Old Bailey, his eyes [fixed on th]e ceiling, and his wig put on just [as it happ]ened to alight on his head after it [was tosse]d, apparently oblivious to everyt[hing aroun]d him. Again pacing the stree[ts of Lond]on until far into the night, and ret[urning t]o his miserable lodgings by the [light] of early morning to weep bitter [tears over] his own worthlessness. "Sadly, s[adly the s]un rose; it rose upon no sadder s[ight than] the man of good abilities and good e[motions], incapable of his own help and his [own happ]iness, sensible of the blight on him, [and resig]ning himself to let it eat him aw[ay." But] years pass on, and the storm which [had been] threatening France at last bursts i[n all its fu]ry. The tumultuous times of the Fre[nch Revo]lution call for prompt action and ph[ysical co]urage. Mere passive unselfishness [will not s]ave the life of a friend, and Sydney C[arton, with] all the nobility of his nature at [last arous]ed by his deep and tender affection [for Lucie] Darnay, has determined to save [the life o]f his friend—the husband of the wo[man he lo]ves. The step which he is about to t[ake require]s the concentration of all his facult[ies and t]he mustering of all the courage he p[ossesses]. He may have valued his life as lit[tle as ot]hers valued it, and yet with the n[ear pros]pect of death, life grows suddenly swe[et, and t]he most miserable of God's creatu[res clin]ging to their wretched existence rath[er than] brave the unknown terrors of eternit[y. In th]e black prison of the Concierger[ie Charl]es Darnay awaits his fate. It is n[ot easy f]or him to compose himself with his b[eloved] wife's face fresh in his memory. T[he hours] pass on—eleven gone forever, twelv[e gone] forever, one gone forever. Sudden[ly he is i]nterrupted in his meditations by foo[tsteps] outside his cell, and a man enters. [It is Car]ton. There is a bright, attentive loo[k on his] face quite foreign to it. Darnay divine[s his p]urpose, and, resisting him, is struc[k down i]nsensible by the man who has com[e to lay] down his life for him. The change [is qu]ickly made, and the supposed Carto[n is carried] out by the prison officials, "to afflict [as] one of them remarks, "to find tha[t his fri]end has drawn a prize in the lottery o[f Sa]inte Guillotine."

[And] now the hour has arrived, and the [prisoners], with bound hands are conveyed to [La Gu]illotine, that instrument of vengeance [by wh]ich perished the flower of the French [nobilit]y.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

Two Heroes.

School Essay. By Daisy T——.

Of all the beautiful creations of Dickens, of all the noble and heroic forms (and there are many) which we have learned to love so well, there are two which stand alone as examples of courage and heroism; yet whose pathetic histories are in no way linked together, save as both serve as models of sublime self-forgetfulness. They are Thomas Pinch and Sydney Carton. Poor, awkward, threadbare, gentle Tom Pinch! The butt of the thoughtless and ill natured, the laughing-stock of the young ladies and the unconscious dupe of his employer himself; the pack-horse as it were, on whom were heaped the burdens of other's selfishness and all the indignities and insults which cruelty and malice can suggest. And yet his heart is so pure, so free from guile, that he suspects it not in others; but rather sees all men glorified in the light of his own lofty ideal. Some of the sincerest martyrs have been crucified on invisible crosses, burned by invisible flames, and it sometimes costs more to perform a simple act of self denial than to achieve many a victory in honor of which the trumpet of fame has resounded. "The greatest battles are fought on the battle-field of the heart," but the hero who like Tom Pinch can conquer his enemies by the force of a pure heart and an example of unselfish devotion, is ignored by those whose tests are outward deeds of daring and acts of physical courage. Tom Pinch is not unhappy—far from it. He considers himself the most favored of mortals; for does he not enjoy the patronage of Pecksniff himself, and has he not the opportunity of hearing the pearls of wisdom which fall from that worthy gentleman's lips? And then there is always the organ in the village church where he can sit and play softly to himself when Mr. Pecksniff does not require his services. But who can describe the anguish of that gentle, trusting heart, when he is told that the man whom he has been accustomed to reverence and respect, whom he has taken as his model of all that is honorable and upright, is a scoundrel and a sneak. "The star of Tom's whole life from boyhood had become in a moment putrid vapor. It was not that Pecksniff, Tom's Pecksniff, had ceased to exist, but that he never had existed." His soul rises in the strong revolt with which the right must always meet the wrong; but this terrible shock to his faith in humanity in no wise tarnishes his own character. He lives on, as nobly and unselfishly as ever, crushing out of sight his dearest hopes, that no shadow of a cloud may touch the happiness of his friends. It is pleasant to think of him, honored and beloved in his sister's home, where young voices whisper loving words in his ear, and gentle hands minister to his wants.

Sydney Carton is a man of a different stamp. There is nothing particularly romantic about him, and his appearance is untidy to say, even slovenly. We see him in the dirty room of the Old Bailey, his eyes fixed on the ceiling, and his wig put on just as it happened to alight on his head after its removal, apparently oblivious to everything around him. Again pacing the streets of London until far into the night, and return ing to his miserable lodgings by the gray light of early morning to weep bitter tears over his own worthlessness. "Sadly, sadly the sun rose; it rose upon no sadder sight than the man of good abilities and good emotions, incapable of his own help and his own happiness, sensible of the blight on him, and resigning himself to let it eat him away." Years pass on, and the storm which has been threatening France at last bursts in all its fury. The tumultuous times of the French revolution call for prompt action and physical courage. Mere passive unselfishness will not save the life of a friend, and Sydney Carton, all the nobility of his nature at last roused by his deep and tender affection for Lucy Darnay, has determined to save the life of his friend—the husband of the woman he loves. The step which he is about to take needs the concentration of all his faculties and the mustering of all the courage he possesses. He may have valued his life as little as others valued it, and yet with the near prospect of death, life grows suddenly sweet, and the most miserable of God's creatures will cling to their wretched existence rather than brave the unknown terrors of eternity. In the black prison of the Conciergerie, Charles Darnay awaits his fate. It is not easy for him to compose himself with his beloved wife's face fresh in his memory. The hours pass on—eleven gone for ever, twelve gone forever, one gone forever. Suddenly he is interrupted in his meditations by footsteps outside his cell, and a man enters. It is Carton. There is a bright, attentive look on his face quite foreign to it. Darnay divines his purpose, and, resisting him, is struck down insensible by the man who has come to lay down his life for him. The changes are quickly made, and the supposed Carton is borne out by the prison officials, "so afflicted," as one of them remarks, "to find that his friend has drawn a prize in the lottery of Sainte Guillotine."

And now the hour has arrived, and the tumbrels, with bound hands are conveyed to the guillotine, that instrument of vengeance by which perished the flower of the French nobility.

Brave and steadfast to the last, Sydney Carton passes away, and the peaceful lips seem to say: "It is a far, far better thing that I do, than I have ever done; it is a far, far better rest that I go to, than I have ever known."

Marriage and Progress.

A keen observer of human nature and a man of world-wide experience was heard to say recently: "There never was a time when marriage was more believed in than now. Never were wives treated better and loved more—never were children happier than now. It is the ambition of the average individual to have a good and happy home. Our towns are filling up with pleasant and elegant homes. The fireside was never more popular than at present."

It is unnecessary to say that many student of our civilization have arrived at different conclusions. There is a respectable class of observers who report different data, especially from the great centers of population, where it is claimed that marriage is becoming popular.

Granting that there is an increased tendency to celibacy, as civilization becomes more complex than it was in provincial times, several causes may be found which contribute to this result. It has been currently claimed that infidel ideas are in the ascendency and that marriage has been robbed of the sanctity which obtained in olden times. There are students who hold that the belief that monogamy is distinctively a Bible institution has much to do with its perpetuity and healthful growth. However this may be, I believe that there are other important factors in our civilization which must essentially regulate the number of marriages and greatly determine what classes will marry. It would be interesting to have some clever disciple of Buckle unfold the question in its fullness; but I will merely outline the thought.

The question to which I refer is that of the effect of steam and this rapid transit civilization upon celibacy. I accept, in great part, the proposition of Mr. Buckle, that the price of bread governs the number of marriages in a given country. There will not be many marriages where the conditions of success are difficult, and whatever renders greater the incompatibility between marriage and moderate means must greatly decrease the number of marriages. Has steam not enlarged our ideals of good living? Has it not lengthened the catalogue of our necessities and increased the difficulty of obtaining an adequate matrimonial status? A rapid glance at a long list of the new accompaniments of culture, which could not have existed previous to railroads, is sufficient to convince a casual observer that the "price of bread"—rather the price of necessities, actual or ideal—is much higher than it was fifty years ago. Parisian trousseaux may be ordered by galvanic speech and reach their destination in some distant Western, city more quickly than the old fathers could have sent their humble home-spun across a few dozen counties. Theaters have sprung up at every village of a few thousand inhabitants. Summer resorts and long bridal tours are the innovations of yesterday. Costly house decorations and rare treasures of art are brought by lightning express. Mr. Jones will not marry. The man does not care to ignore the ideal of his fellows, which have become the prevailing fashion—enlarged into necessities by the increased facilities of the age. He is now ready to complete the whole world, whose cosmopolitan customs have revolutionized old ways of living and even made modern economy more expensive than the luxuries of his ancestors.

Pearls and Diamonds.

A London expert tells me that of old the world received each year new diamonds of about $250.000 in value on the average. Suddenly, from South Africa, comes a new supply, exceeding $20,000,000 worth each year for ten years. In consequence, the price of diamonds has steadily fallen from $15 to $3.75 a carat.

Of course, it is known that when they go over a comparatively insignificant number of carats diamonds take a leap into the thousands. Brazilian diamonds are very fine stones, but no stones found there, or in the South African diamond fields, are as lustrous and beautiful as the gems in the gala decorations of East India princes, and those which have been obtained in India during the past century by conquest and purchase. These came mainly from the mines of Golconda.

The ex-Khedive of Egypt, Ismail Pasha, is said to have the finest collection of diamonds, rubies, and emeralds in the world—aggregating several hundred thousand dollars in value. Large rubies of a lurid, lustrous red, without a blemish, are scarcer than big diamonds, and are consequently more valuable.

Ex Queen Isabella of Spain is to have the finest pearls in the world; and the unaccountable loss of many of the most valuable gems in the spanish crown jewels set the tongues of Spanish courtiers going. King Alfonso, Isabella's affectionate son, probably thinks his mamma's continued absence a pearl beyond price.

A TREACHEROUS MURDER.

Death of the Duke of Burgundy.

The Duke of Burgundy went to the Castle of Montereau by the gate next the fields; he summoned all the chief lords and two hundred men at arms, together with one hundred archers, to accompany him. He had also with him the lady of Giac, who had strongly urged him to go to Montereau, saying that there was no treachery to be dreaded. He was very fond of that lady, and had entrusted her, as also part of his jewels, to one of his most faithful servants, Philip Jenequin. When Sir Tanneguy Duchatel came forward to tell him that the Dauphin was ready and waiting for him, the Duke answered that he was coming; he then called for those who were to accompany him, forbidding all others to follow. Thus surrounded, he went as far as the first barrier of the bridge. Then came the people of the Dauphin, who renewed all the promises and oaths previously made, adding, "Come towards my lord, who awaits you on the bridge."

After these words, the duke having asked his servants whether he might safely venture on, they answered, that considering the many promises made by such notable persons, he had nothing to fear, and that they would try their chance with him. Thereupon he moved forward, preceded by some of his attendants, and he entered the first barrier, where he found the Dauphin's men who said to him once more, "Come to my lord, he is expecting you." To this he answered, "I am coming!" He crossed then the second barrier, which was immediately locked behind him. Stopping there he saw Sir Tanneguy Duchatel, whom he touched in friendly guise on the shoulder, saying at the same time to my lord Saint George and to others of his people, "Here is the man whom I trust." He thus moved on to the Dauphin, who was leaning on a barrier, armed cap-a-pie, and girt with his sword. The duke knelt on the ground in an attitude of respect, bowing most humbly to the Dauphin; but this one answered without showing any sign of friendship, reproaching the Duke for not having joined in the war against the English, and not having withdrawn his soldiers from the garrison as he said he would. Then Sir Robert de Loyre took him by the right arm and said, "Rise my lord, you are only too honorable." The Duke of Burgundy had also his sword on; when he knelt down the weapon was somewhat backward, and as he moved his hand to bring it in front, Sir Robert de Loyre exclaimed "Do you dare lay hand on your sword in the presence of my lord the Dauphin?" At these words Sir Tanneguy Duchatel drew near; it is reported that he made a sign and saying, "It is time!" he struck the Duke of Burgundy with an axe he held in his hand so violently that he made him fall on his knees. When the Duke felt himself wounded he endeavored to draw his sword and defend his life, but immediately others struck him down, leaving him for dead, and quickly a man, named Oliver Layet, assisted by Peter Frothier, plunged his sword into the Duke's stomach underneath his hauberk.

The Mystic Power.

There is a subtle, mysterious influence about some persons that is truly remarkable. One of the singular features about it is that those possessing it have little or no control over it, and those affected by it have no power to resist it.

What this power is or whence it comes, is the mystery.

It is generally believed that mind has influence over mind, independent of the will of the person concerned. A great many say they can feel the pressure of certain ones without seeing or knowing they are near, while almost everyone is more or less affected by the pressure of others, either strangers or friends. Thus it may be traced down to what is generally called like and dislike.

The plain truth is that there is often less mutual affection between comparative strangers.

It is generally supposed that twins are devotedly attached to each other, but such is not the case. Even the Siamese Twins were constantly quarrelling, and had it been possible to get away from each other, would have done so most cheerfully. Occasionally twin-brothers are found who apparently are only happy in each other's presence. Such instances are rare, however.

Scientists call it magnetism, spiritualists say it is the affinity of the soul, but those who have it do not bother themselves about its nature or cause, being satisfied with the effect.

It is the same influence that renders preachers, actors, and lecturers popular. To think that the success of these before the public is due to what they say, or the way they say it, is a mistake. It is this mystic power, and it makes little difference about the elocution, the quality of voice, or the nature of the discourse. Some of the popular actors have most marked defects in their voices.

The uncultured preacher, one who has never seen the inside of a college, very often preaches all around those who are accounted profound scholars. These preachers who are noted revivalists possess this power in a greater or less degree, according as they are more or less successful.

It is said Dr. Sunderland, the elder, was so wonderfully endowed with this power, that he quit preaching on account of it. He feared that persons were drawn into the folds of the church by his influence who did not realize what they were doing. He is said to have been able to direct actions of persons simply through will power, and that without the aid of words or signs.

Henry Ward Beecher is filled with the same power, but not to as great a degree as Dr. Sunderland. He has the faculty, however, of transmitting it to the written page, so that those who read may feel his influence as well as those who see and hear him.

The question that arises just here is whether it is good to possess such power or to be influenced by it. There are plenty of instances where it has done a great deal of harm. It is the strength of the libertine the chief agent of the conspirator, and the talisman of arch deceivers.

This does not prevent it from being productive of good results. It is the power of God to influence the wicked, and that which renders music charming and social intercourse agreeable. It is not at all strange that occasionally it should be turned to an evil purpose. Bad uses are made of things given to support life, but that does not render these things unfit for proper use. It is the use to which means are put, and not the means, that is evil. This mystic power is as much a gift as any of the special talents, and its exercise no more sinful than that of the other gifts, if only exercised properly.

It is not love, but it is often mistaken for it. This is a serious mistake, and one that is very difficult to correct. One of its peculiarities is that it is not mutual. The person who possesses it to such an extent as to be able to greatly influence others rarely feels drawn towards those who are attracted by it. In instances where it is mutual it forms a strong bond, but where it is one-sided it is very unreliable.

It is the secret of the conjurer's spell, the mind-reader's skill, and spiritualist's power. To be effective these must possess it to excess, in which case it becomes a dangerous thing, as it gives them control over not only the physical life of persons but also over their soul life.

The Mourning Gowns.

Mrs. Gen. Grant's costume is made of the finest Henrietta cloth and heaviest crape. The skirt is of crape, perfectly plain. The overskirt is draped very long on the left side, with a heavy crape revers, raised to the right side. Postilion waist, with a crape fichu from the throat to the waist, finished at both ends with a crape bow. Collar and cuffs of crape. The bonnet is poke shape, with a long crape veil that reaches to the bottom of the dress.

Mrs. Fred. D. Grant's dress is heavily trimmed with crape. The skirt is made with a deep kilt plaiting with three bands of crape. Long drapery on right side, raised very high on the left, and faced with broad bands of crape, folds running down the left side. Pretty draped back, raised very high in the centre, forming two graceful points. The waist has a broad fichu of crape gathered in at the waist, with a belt coming from beneath two revers of crape. The collar and cuffs are also trimmed with crape. A close-fitting bonnet, with long crape veil.

Mrs. Sartoris's dress is made Henrietta skirt, with two plaitings, with band of crape on each. Overskirt raised very high on both sides, falling very low in the front, which has two bands of crape down the centre. Two jabots lined with crape form the back drapery of overskirt. The waist has a very full fichu of crape, with two revers lined with crape. She will wear a close-fitting bonnet and crape veil.

Mrs. Jesse Grant's dress is a kilted skirt with bands of Henrietta and crape running lengthwise, a short draped overskirt, with loops of crape forming pocket pieces on each side. The drapery, falling low on the left side, is raised high on the right, combining into graceful folds in the back. Waist is a plain postilion, with jabot from the neck to the waist. Collar and cuffs of crape. She also wears a close-fitting bonnet with crape veil.

Why He Obtained a Substitute.

A very good story was told the other day of a young man painfully conscious of an exterior scarcely worthy of his character. Accompanied by the young woman he had married, he stepped into a photographer's and drew the artist aside. He wanted their "picturs" taken, but had a special favor to ask. "Her folks," he exclaimed, "go a good deal on style. They never saw me, and, if I send them my face they'll be dead again me. I'm a sight better than I look, and, when people come to know me, they vote me a brick. Now then, what do you say? Will you stand in? She's willing. Those big whiskers of yours'll take them at once and create harmony. You look like a solid capitalist, and they'd take me for a petty larceny thief!" Of course the photographer could not refuse a favor so flatteringly proposed, and the distant relatives, no doubt, in due time were gratified with the portrait side by side with that of the young lady.

I sent the boy up to learn at what hour she wished the ceremony to take place, and he asked her what her regular time of day was for burying husbands. I expect to lose her trade entirely."

How He Saved Himself.

About three years ago, I was working on a five story brick building in New York city. The scaffold which I was working on was near to the top story. Well, as I was banging away at my work, I became conscious of a swaying motion. I had just time to look up and take in the situation at a glance, when the scaffold began to give way beneath me. Instinctively I threw up my hands and clutched the end of a rope which was hanging above my head, when the whole thing fell to the ground with a crash, leaving me suspended in mid-air. Here was a situation calculated to try the nerves of any man. Seventy-five feet from the ground with nothing to sustain me but a small rope. Glancing at the pile of rubbish below me, I realized that should either the rope or my muscles give out and should I fall on that debris scattered below, the shock produced would jar my system terribly. This I determined to avoid, and I was not long in forming a plan to save myself from an awful fall. I let go the rope, and—" The crowd breathed hard.

"Yer don't mean ter say that yer fell all that distance 'thout hurtin' yerself?"

"No, sir; I let go and fell till I came opposite the second story window——"

"An' what d'yer do then?"

"Jumped in at the window."

The crowd breathed freer.

"Didn't it take yer breath away to fall so far?" inquired one.

"No; but as the morning was a chilly one I had put a bran new coat on. After I had jumped into the window I looked for my coat but found that of it I had only three button-holes left. The remainder had been torn off by the projections of the building as I was making my descent."

PIC-NIC GROUNDS,

We are now in the midst of the excursion and pic-nic season, and each year appears to eclipse all former ones in the number and magnitude of those social and enjoyable gatherings. This brings us to consider the desirability of having a suitable place for such, and in what way it could be secured. Eugenia Falls has been, and is yet, a great resort for pic-nics, but the beauty of its surroundings is fast becoming a thing of the past. It is losing much of its natural grandeur, and we are informed that the owner of the property will not allow any changes whatever to be made in the way of improving the grounds so it would be possible to have even a game of croquet. What we want however is a pic-nic ground at home, or convenient to our village, for it's out of the question to bring children ten miles to enjoy a day's outing very often, even the grounds or scenery were immensely grand, and besides, there are others who would come from the neighboring towns and villages by train and otherwise if we had a suitable place for the like.

We would suggest that an acre in the centre of our Agricultural grounds be laid out and planted with shade trees, a grand stand erected, a well sunk in the vicinity and all fenced in to protect the trees from stock, which might be allowed to pasture in the grounds; this Agricultural ground is beautifully located, well drained, and has around it a splendid, close, eight-foot board fence, it has also a good driving course of nearly half a mile round which would be very convenient for a drive by those attending a pic-nic; then, in case of inclement weather, the agricultural hall could be utilized; the above would not only make a very desirable and convenient pic-nic ground, but would greatly improve the grounds for show fair purposes. We believe this could be done if properly managed, as our citizens would doubtless give it their practical assistance, and thereby provide a very desirable acquisition to our prosperous village.

Berkeley.

From a correspondent.

Mr. Thos. Sargent lost a valuable mare last week, valued at $180. He drove to Owen Sound the day previous and the beast was taken sick while there, he got her home, however, the same night, but she died before morning.

Mr. James Wright has a three year-old heifer which gave birth to a pair of heifer calves recently. The cow and calves are doing well.

Another large baloon was seen on Tuesday evening, the 4th inst., this one lit in James Lackey's door yard. It caused quite an excitement when it first appeared in the air.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

The usual monthly cattle fair on Monday last was well patronized by stock owners. A large number of cattle were on the grounds. Prices were low; but few changed hands.

The regular quarterly services of the Methodist church was held here on Sabbath last. Altho' the weather was most unfavorable, there was a fair turnout, and a pleasant and profitable time was enjoyed. A large number of young converts were formally admitted to the church. About seventy-five have been added to the Methodist church since the Gospel Army commenced operations here. The Army expect to close their meetings here on the evening of Friday next.

The Flesherton Methodist Sabbath School held their annual picnic on the beaver meadow last Friday afternoon. A very enjoyable time was spent.

A garden party is to be held on Mr. M. Richardson's lawn next Thursday afternoon.

Williamsford Station Items.

The annual entertainment of the Williamsford Sabbath School was a grand success. Though the afternoon was cloudy still quite a large number gathered in the grove to swing and see the baloons go off. In the evening the Church was crowded to the doors and the audience listened with excellent attention to a first-class programme. Rev. D. Perry acted as chairman and Rev. J. J. Dobbin was the speaker for the evening. The singing by the children seemed to delight the listeners.

On account of the exceeding dullness of the day yesterday the Sacrement of the Lord's Supper was not dispensed in the Methodist church here, but has been postponed for two weeks, when the pastor will administer the rite at the ordinary service.

Mr. Henderson, who has been lying ill at his house for some time, is slowly recovering.

The friends of Mr. Joseph Fanning will be glad to hear that his trip to the North-West has greatly benefitted his health. He now wants the family to sell out here and join him in the "Great Lone Land."

The Misses East, of Toronto, are at present the guests of Mr. C. Price.

Suicide in Glenelg.

On Friday afternoon last, Donald Kennedy, an old man 82 years of age, who lived on the Durham road near Bunessan, committed suicide by hanging himself in the barn. His wife died very suddenly about a year ago, and since that time he has been of a somewhat discontented and restless state of mind. On the morning of his death he prepared for a journey saying he was going to his daughter's who lives in Bruce. He went as far as a bridge across the creek at T. McComb's where he was seen examining very closely the creek and its surroundings, evidently with the intention of drowning himself, but his actions did not arouse suspicion at the time. He then went home and into the barn, and was last seen alive there some time after dinner. All being busy at the hay no further attention was given him until about four o'clock, when his little grandson was sent to the barn for a rake and found him hanging there. He at once gave the alarm but life had been extinct for some hours. He had placed a rail across the corner of a log barn, and a fork lower down on which to stand while he fastened the rope.

No motive can be ascribed for committing such a terrible act, unless it was done during a temporary fit of mental aberration. Dr. Gun, Coroner, was notified but did not deem it necessary to hold an inquest.

His friends have the deep and hearty sympathy of the surrounding neighborhood.—Grey Review.

IT NEVER FAILS.

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry will never fail you when taken to cure Dysentery Colic, Sick Stomach or any form of Summer Complaint. Relief is almost instantaneous; a few doses cure when other remedies fail.

Manitoba Crops.

FAVORABLE REPORTS RECEIVED BY THE CANADIAN PACIFIC COMPANY.

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 5.—The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have received telegraphic reports regarding the state of the crops from nearly all the agents in Manitoba and the North-West. They may be summarized thus:—All crops are in good condition within the boundaries of the Province, and with fair weather the wheat harvest will commence in two or three weeks. The acreage is larger than last year and the yield now promising better. Barley will be cut earlier. West of Broadview the scarcity of rain has caused short straw, but has not interfered much with the head. Wheat is about ready to cut on C. P. R. farms at Stair and Gleichen, and is fairly good. Farmers in Manitoba are afraid now of too much rain, but up to the present the season has been very favorable.

A QUADRUPLE FORCE.

The reason why disease is so soon expelled from the system by Burdock Blood Bitters is because that excellent remedy acts in a four-fold manner—that is to say, upon the Bowels, the Liver, the Blood and the Kidneys, driving out all bad humor, and regulating every organic function.

Jottings From Euphrasia.

From the Mirror.

The barn on West half lot 30, con. 8, Euphrasia, (owned by Mr. Wm. Neely and occupied by Mr. Jacob Neely,) was burned on Thursday last. The fire occurred early in the afternoon, and it is not known how it originated. There was no insurance. The building was an old log one, and it contained nothing worth speaking of. The loss will be chiefly such as will arise from having no place to store this year's crop.

A number of the residents of the New England settlement, (7th line Euphrasia,) known as the Gospel Band, visited Victoria church for the second or third time recently, on Sunday last. There was a very large attendance, fully one third of those present having to remain outside. the meeting resolved itself into a revival service, the singing of the band proving a great incentive, and rendering the proceedings quite interesting and impressive. Mr. James Morwood acted as leader, and numerous local and visiting brethren took part.

The foundation of the new Orange Hall on the 9th line has been laid, and it is expected that the building will be ready for use ere long.

Mr. John Graham has erected a handsome barn on lot 14, con. 6. It is so colossal, that John, being a sailor and accustomed to nautical expressions, terms it "The Elevator."

Mr. Thomas Abercrombie has completed a very commodious barn on lot 8, con. 6, to replace the one burned last spring.

Mr. Matthew Patten has also erected a large barn on his farm adjoining Rocklyn.

Mr. J. M. Thurston is making quite an addition to the Temperance hotel at Kimberley. It looks well.

Mr. Wm. Cartwright has cleared about 40 acres on the Reynard farm, lot 13, con. 7. This, with the improvements made by Mr. C. Burrell, makes the 7th line look a great deal better.

Mr. John Falkner has sold his farm on the 9th line to Mr. R. B. Johnston, of Cleveland, U. S.

Mr. John Anderson is building a fine brick residence on lot 28, con. 7.

Mr. Samuel Irwin has let the contract for a dwelling on lot 6, con. 8.

Mr. Robt. Dunlop, of the 6th line, talks of building a large stone house next summer.

Mr. Charles Devitt has recently erected a new dwelling house on lot 13, con. 6.

Mr. Joseph Gardner is building a dwelling on lot 19, con. 6.

Mr. James Stitt is building a splendid brick residence on lot 26 con 9. Mr. Thomas Chambers of Meaford is the contractor.

Municipal probs are beginning to be talked of. It is understood that Mr. Robt. Myles will oppose Mr. Gilray for the reeveship, and that ex-councillor Black will oppose Mr. Fawcett for the deputy-ship. Councillor Shepherdson may make a third candidate for this position.

Mr. Alex. Webster of Cookstown, owner of the mill on the 9th line, was in the township on Monday.

Miss Clarke and Miss Sara Clarke, teachers, of St. Vincent, have been rusticating at the home of their parents on the 9th line.

Mr. James Cruickshank, V. S. of Heathcote talks of removing to Rocklyn.

Mr. M. V. Brundage, teacher, Rocklyn, is spending holidays in Collingwood. He intends studying for the ministry, and will begin a preparatory course at McGill College, Montreal, in the fall.

Two candidates were admitted at the last meeting of Lansdowne Lodge C. O. O. F., Blantyre. The membership is increasing rapidly.

Mr. Archibald McIntyre, who was one of the teamsters at the battle of Batouche, is hard at work on his father's farm on the 9th line.

Potato bugs must be very plentiful and Paris green very scarce in Euphrasia. A passer by on Sunday last noticed a well-to-do farmer not one hundred miles from Rocklyn with his wife and another lady diligently "picking" the "varmint." At the completion of every round he would remark "Boys it's a terror."

A President to be Proud of.

The more we see of President Cleveland through the medium of his public acts and declarations the better we like him. His reply to the cattle-kings when in a recent interview, they urged a reconsideration of his order peremptorily commanding the withdrawal of all stock from the Indian territory within forty days is worthy of preservation as a model enunciation of sound public policy in dealing with monopolies which trench upon the rights of the public. "Two interests are in conflict," said he. "Which shall give way?" On the one side we have public peace, public security and the safety of lives. On the other side are your interests. The former, gentlemen, must be considered, throgh private interests suffer. No argument will induce me to change what has been done." How differently the Canadian Pacific railway, the North-West land policy, assisted immigration and other questions of that character would be treated in Canada if we had a Cleveland at the head of affairs instead of a Macdonald! But such men are not brought to the front under our system.—News.

JUST THE THING.

W. J. Guppy, druggist, of Newbury writes: "Dr. Fowler's Wild Strawberry is just the thing for Summer Sickness. I sold out my stock three times last summer. There was a good demand for it." Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is infallible for Dysentery, Colic, Sick Stomach and Bowel Complaint.

One Of His Rules.

A fashionable young lady, who was very homely, was speaking to a female friend about a rich young gentleman, who was also at the ball, and who was considered quite a catch.

"He is such an intelligent and charming young man. He promised to dance the first dance with me, and he kept his promise like a gentleman," remarked the homely lady.

"Yes," responded her friend, yawning, "I heard him say that it was one of his rules of life, when he had anything disagreeable to do, to go at it as soon as possible, and be done with it."

The young ladies have not been seen arm-in-arm on the street since.

An Intelligent Agriculturist.

"Got any cow bells?"

"Yes, step this way?"

"Those are too small. Haven't you any larger?"

"No, sir, the largest ones are all sold."

Rusticus started off, and got as far as the door, when the clerk called after him: "Look hear, stranger, take one of these small bells for your cow, and you won't have half the trouble in finding her; for when you hear her bell you will always know she can't be far off."

The farmer bought the bell.

A SENSATION.

An unparalleled sensation is being created all over Ontario by the wonderful and unequalled manner in which Neuralgia, Toothache, Rheumatism, Backache, Headache, is removed by but one application of Fluid Lightning. No offensive, disgusting drugs need be taken for days. It is an instant cure. Try a 25c. bottle from Hill Bro's. 3

Whether as a result of a happy combination of circumstances, or owing to a bold and consistent attitude on the part of the new Government, it is nevertheless a fact that at the present moment England's foreign aelations are considerably improved. Germany, Austria, France, and even Russia, have ratified the British project for extricating Egypt from its financia straits. The new loan of $45,000,000 has been negotiated, and the maintenance of British ascendancy at Cairo is more than ever assured. Lord Salisbury is to be congratulated upon the death of the Mahdi. It is not possible that the outburst of Soudanese fanaticism can long survive its author. Even now the prophet's followers are becoming demoralized as, wherever they come in contact with the Egyptian forces, they are compelled to fall back. Some authorities assert that it is only a matter of a short time before England will annex all of Upper Egypt.

For Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold by A. Turner & Co. x
